A great number of witnesses (one hundred and nineteen in all) were examined. The evidence against the accused was largely circumstantial. The defense insisted that the deceased came to her death by suicide, and considerable evidence pointing in that direction was given during the progress of the trial. It was generally supposed at first that the deceased had taken her own life, as, when the body was discovered in a closet of the house occupied by her and the prisoner, a pistol was lying beside it, and not for some time after the burial was the defendant accused of the crime of which he was subsequently convicted. In fact there were two disinterments of the body, NORM.—As to the coercion of a jury to secure an agreement, see also note to Darling v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. (R. I.) 16 L. R. A. 643.

41 L. R. A.

considerable time elapsing between them, before the idea of murder became prevalent and the prisoner charged with the crime.

On March 11 the case was finally submitted to the jury, who immediately retired to deliberate upon their verdict. Three times, at their request, the jury were brought into court for instructions. After being out all of one night and the greater part of one day, they announced that they had not agreed upon a verdict. The judge ordered the jury to be sent out again for further deliberation. They returned into court the second time, after having been out two nights, all of one day, and part of the second day, and reported, in a writing signed by the foreman, that they were unable to agree upon a verdict, and that it was impossible for them to do so. The jury were again sent back to the jury room by the court, after receiving certain instructions, and remained there until 8:20 o'clock of that day (it being Saturday), when they were sent for by the court, who, after giving them further instructions and directing certain provision to be made for their convenience and comfort, ordered them to be taken back for further deliberation. They remained out, from that time, two nights and one day, until Monday morning, when they returned into court, and announced a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. The jury were out altogether four nights and about four days. During all this time they had been provided with no sleeping accommodations whatever, confined for two nights and almost two days in the narrow quarters of a jury room, and the rest of the time in the courtroom, which had been set aside for that purpose. What followed each time, as the jury returned into court, will fully appear by the following synopsis taken from the record:

"Jury went out Thursday, March 11, 1897, at 8:30 P. M. 11:30 A. M., Friday, jury came into court, and asked two questions as to the evidence, which were answered by the court from the minutes of stenographer (folios 11-202 to 11,240) without objection. 3:25 P. M. jury again came into court and announced they had not agreed upon a verdict. By the Court: 'Well, gentlemen, you must make an effort to agree. This case has involved immense labor. A great deal of time, as you know, has been given to it, and, from all the evidence that has been produced, it would seem that the case is susceptible of a conclusion. The only way of reaching a conclusion is through the verdict of the jury. There is no reason why these twelve men are not as capable of understanding this case and coming to a conclusion as any other twelve that could be gotten together. It is a case of too much importance, that has entailed too much labor, to permit a jury to separate without the utmost effort to agree. Differences that exist amongst you as to the evidence must be further investigated. Any questions of law the court will be glad to explain to you. It is for the interest of all concerned and public justice that there should be a decision of this case so that the questions in it shall be put at rest. I cannot hear of a disagreement of this jury. You must retire, gentlemen.' The jury again retired at 8:30 P. M., and at 5:30 P. M. sent a communication to the court asking for further information. Instructions were given, and questions of jury answered by reading from stenographer's minutes (folios 11,245 to 11,281), without objection. Jury then retired. Saturday morning, March 13, 1897, the jury came into court by the order of Justice Dunwell, at 12:45 P. M., and presented a written communication to the court. Mr. Drummond having previously waived his presence in court, which read as follows: 'Judge Dunwell—Dear Sir: The probability, or even possibility, of this jury ever agreeing is impossible in my opinion. George J. Holden, Foreman.' By the Court: 'The order will be that you be conducted to your hotel, and that you be brought back for further deliberation. The counsel for the defendant is not here, and later I will have something further to say to you with reference to your present communication. I have made my own arrangements so as to be back at your call both for to-day and for some time in the future; so that this case may be fully disposed of if there is a possibility of it, and I will have something further to say on this subject later in the day, when the defendant's counsel can be present.' At 8:20 P. M. the jury again returned to the court, and were addressed by the court as follows: 'Gentlemen, I have been giving consideration to the note that you addressed to the court this morning, in which you stated your doubts as to your ability to agree upon a verdict in this case. I very much regret this supposition of yours, but I by no means despair. This case has involved immense labor, enormous expense has been entailed, evidence has been gathered and brought before you from every direction, evidence bearing directly upon the issues in this case, and some of it remotely upon the issues. All, everything that could be suggested, that might throw light upon the question submitted to you, has been brought before you and is in your possession. Now, the truth of this case lies within the compass of that evidence. Mrs. Sheldon died by violence. How that came about and whether the defendant is guilty or innocent is something that must be told by the evidence that has been presented to you. I don't know that you fully appreciate the gravity and importance to this community and to the state that a decision shall be reached in this matter, and that this important question shall be settled as to whether the defendant is guilty or innocent. This case has occupied nearly seven weeks, and to say now, at the end of all that time, at the end of all this labor and expense, that the question is no better off than it was when started, is almost to confess incompetency in this matter. Of course, I have no means of knowing, and I don't desire to know, unless it is something that you desire to bring before the court, the reasons why this state of affairs exists in your body. I hope it is nothing like pride of opinion. I hope it is nothing like, having once taken a position in this case, that, therefore, you must say it is unalterable; that it is not susceptible of change by argument, and by a review of the evidence in the case,—because such considerations as those would be most unworthy to divide a jury upon so important a question. Engaged as I am in the administration of, or attempt to administer, public justice in this district, I have laid aside my other engagements so that this case can be attended to, because I appreciate the importance of it, and I would like to enforce upon you an appreciation of the importance of settling this question. It has got to be settled. When an affair of this kind has occurred it has got to be tried, it has got to be investigated, and the interests of public justice will not stop short of going to the very bottom of it, and discovering what the truth is, regardless of time and expense. I do not say these things, gentlemen, in a fault-finding way. I desire to say them to you with the idea of urging upon you and of bringing to your minds an appreciation of the great importance of this matter, and of settling it and deciding it. I appreciate somewhat your position. I don't say this with any unkindness. I know that your labors in this matter have been tedious, and that they are wearisome, and I appreciate the length of time that you have been out, and you must not think that I am forgetful of these things; but there must be a supreme effort made on your part to harmonize differences, and, therefore, I am going to insist that you begin at the very outset of the case, from the very beginning, and go over it again, looking at it from every possible point of view, so that there shall not be a failure of justice in this case. I know that your jury room is a narrow place, and that you are a good deal confined there, and for that reason I have arranged with the sheriff that you shall occupy this room from now on to the completion of your labors. Of course, I don't know how long it will take, and, therefore, I have arranged with the sheriff that you shall have more comfortable quarters, so that this room will be cleared shortly after you have retired, and the officers will remain downstairs in the sheriff's office, and you will be given this room, giving you a better opportunity to circulate about; and making your position as comfortable as possible under the circumstances.' At 7:55 P. M. the court ordered that the jury be taken to supper and returned to their room for further deliberation. . . . The court also entered an order that the jury should be conducted to their meals at the usual hours, tomorrow, Sunday, and including Monday morning. Defendant's counsel objected and accepted to the remarks and instructions given to the jury, at 8:20 P. M., on March 13, 1897, and to each and every part thereof. Defendant particularly and specifically objects and excepts to folios 11,805 to and including folio 11,817, and also asks that the written communication of the jury to the court be made a part of the record. Monday morning, March 15, 1897, at 7:30, the jury sent word to Justice Dunwell that they were ready to report, and they were accordingly brought into court at 8:30 A. M., the roll called by the clerk, and the question put: 'Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?' By Foreman Holden: 'We have. We find the prisoner guilty as charged in the indictment.' By the Court: 'You say you find the prisoner guilty, as charged in the indictment, of murder in the first degree?' By Foreman Holden: 'We do.' The jury were thereupon polled and each answered, 'Guilty.' Defendant's counsel moved arrest of judgment under § 467 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and also on each and every ground, as provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure in reference to an arrest of judgment. Defendant's counsel also moved for a new trial in the case, under § 465 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and upon each and every ground stated in § 465, and especially subdivisions 4, 5, and 6 of that section. Both motions were denied, and exceptions taken by defendant."

Mr. Robert L. Drummond, for appellant:

It is one of the rights of a jury to disagree, and it is one of the duties of a trial court to hear their report of a disagreement.

Code Crim. Proc. § 428, subsec. 2.

The only right that the trial court had in the premises is given by § 428. He went outside of and beyond the provisions of this section.

Slater v. Mead, 58 How. Pr. 57.

It was error to instruct the jury—"Of course, I have no means of knowing . . . why this state of affairs exists in your body." It was another reminder to them that they were going to stay until they had agreed on a verdict. This was coercion, and this alone is ground for reversal.

Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 260; Slater v. Mead, 58 How. Pr. 57; Oranston v. New York, O. & H. R. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 614.

Mr. George W. Nellis, for respondent:

A trial court has a wide discretion as to the trial, and questions involving that discretion can be legally raised only by motion to set aside the verdict, and cannot be raised on appeal.

There are many questions of that character, among which is the length of time a jury shall be kept out.

Caldwell v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 47 N. Y. 282; Daly v. Byrne, 77 N. Y. 182.

The time of how long a jury shall be kept out is wholly within the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial, and the question of whether that discretion has been properly exercised can be raised only on motion to set aside the verdict.

It was proper for a judge presiding at the trial to set before the jury all proper motives to induce them to agree upon a common result, and those motives might properly be repeated and earnestly urged upon them by the trial judge.

Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 260; Erwin v. Hamilton, 50 How. Pr. 32.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question before this court is not how long may a court keep a jury together, for that is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial court. Nor is the question whether a jury should be compelled to stay together more than one night without a bed, or at least a cot, to lie on, for that, too, is a matter resting in discretion. It seems a wiser exercise of that discretion, however, to provide sleeping accommodations for the jury after the first night, at least. This can be readily done in most hotels, without interference with the requirement to keep the jury together. But, while these questions are not before the court, the facts which suggest them are, and, together with other facts, they command an answer to the query, May there be coercion of a jury in a capital case? If this question be answered in the negative, there follows the further inquiry, Was there coercion in this case?

By the ancient common law, jurors were kept together as prisoners of the court, until they had agreed upon their verdict. Thomp. & M. Juries, § 810. It was regarded, not only proper, but requisite, that they should be coerced to an agreement upon a verdict. Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 475. "A jury, sworn and charged in case of life or member, cannot be discharged by the court or any other, but they ought to give a verdict." Co. Litt. 327b. Bl. Com. p. 875, says: "The jury, after the proofs are summed up, unless the case be very clear, withdraw from the bar to consider their verdict; and, in order to avoid intemperance and causeless delay, are to be kept without meat, drink, fire, or candle, unless by permission of the judge, till they are all unanimously agreed."

And it has been held that, if the jurors do not agree in their verdict before the judges are about to leave the town, . . . the judges are not bound to wait for them, but may carry them to town . . . in a cart." In the Doctor and Student (1518) at page 271, it is said: "I take not the law of the realm to be that the jury, after they be sworn, may not eat nor drink till they be agreed of the verdict; but truth it is there is a maxim and an old custom in the law that they shall not eat nor drink after they be sworn, till they have given their verdict, without the assent and license of the justices. . . . And, if they will in no wise agree, I think that the justices may set such order in the matter as shall seem to them by their discretion to stand with reason and conscience, by awarding a new inquest, and by setting fine upon them that they shall find in default, or otherwise as they shall think best in their discretion; like as they may do if one of the jury die before verdict, or if any other like casualties fall in that behalf." Mr. Emlyn, in his preface to the second edition of the State Trials, printed in 1780, says: "The law requires that the twelve men, of which the jury consists, shall all agree before they give in a verdict; if they don't, they must undergo a greater punishment than the criminal himself; they are to be confined in one room without meat," etc., till they are starv'd. It would be pretty hard to assign any tolerable reason for this usage; if it has seldom or never happen'd I'm afraid it has sometimes been prevented only by the unjust compliance of some of the jurors against their own consciences. . . .

To what end, therefore, are they to be restrained in this manner? It may, indeed, force them to an outward seeming agreement against the dictates of their own consciences, but can never be a means of informing their judgment or convincing their understanding. . . . Why must the jurors be compelled to an agreement one way or the other? After all, a forced agreement is no better than none. If the consent of him who stands out against the rest be of any regard, it ought to be free; if of none, then why can't a verdict be given without it?"

The inconsistency of insisting that every one of twelve men must agree before a verdict can be rendered, and at the same time justifying a court in coercing one or more jurors into an agreement with their fellows, received early attention by the courts of this state.

In People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301, 1 Am. Dec. 168, the defendant was tried under an indictment for conspiracy to defraud, and the jury being unable to agree, the court, against the consent of the defendant, ordered a juror withdrawn and the jury discharged. Mr. Justice Kent, in an opinion reviewing prior cases at length, paid his respects (at page 309) to the rule formerly existing of compelling an agreement of the jury. He said: "The doctrine of compelling a jury to unanimity by the pains of hunger and fatigue, so that the verdict in fact be founded, not on temperate discussion and clear conviction, but on strength of body, is a monstrous doctrine, that does not . . . stand with conscience, but is altogether repugnant to a sense of humanity and justice. A verdict of acquittal or conviction, obtained under such circumstances, can never receive the sanction of public opinion. And the practice of former times, of sending the jury in carts from one assize to another, is properly controlled by the improved manners and sentiments of the present day."

In People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. 187, 9 Am. Dec. 208, the defendant was indicted for manslaughter. The jury being unable to agree before the last moment the court would sit, they were discharged. The question arose whether defendant could be again put upon his trial on the indictment. In writing the opinion of the court, Spencer, Ch. J., said: "In the case of People v. Olcott . . . all the authorities then extant upon the power of the court to discharge a jury in criminal cases, and the consequences of such discharge, were very ably and elaborately examined by Mr. Justice Kent, and it would be an unpardonable waste of time to enter upon a re-examination of them." The chief judge quotes largely from Justice Kent's opinion, and says: "The learned judge inveighs with force and eloquence, against the monstrous doctrine of compelling a jury to unanimity by the pains of hunger and fatigue, so that the verdict is not founded on temperate discussion, but on strength of body. Although the case of the People v. Olcott was a case of misdemeanor, the reasoning is, in my judgment, entirely applicable to cases of felony; and, although the opinion was confined to the case under consideration, a perusal of it will show that it embraces every possible case of a trial for crimes."

Other comparatively early criminal cases in which the same question was presented and passed on were People v. Ward, 1 Wheel. Crim. Cas. 469; Grant v. People, 4 Park. Crim. Rep. 527; People v. Green, 13 Wend. 55; United States v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 579, 6 L. ed. 165.

In Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 260, a motion was made to set aside a verdict on affidavits. The judge said to the jury, in substance: 41 L. R. A.

This case has excited considerable feeling; the nature of jury trials implies concessions and compromise; no juror should control result, or otherwise the verdict would be that of one man, not that of twelve; that for five years he had discharged but one jury that had failed to agree, and he should send them out again, and hoped they would agree. One of the jurors said he supposed (it being Saturday afternoon) their duties would be at an end and they would be discharged at twelve o'clock, to which the judge replied that this was not so; that he was authorized to receive the verdict on Sunday, a.d. besides, it was his intention to go to Albany by the next train, and, if they did not agree before he left, he would return on Monday and receive their verdict. Jury retired, remained absent about half an hour, returned into court, and rendered a verdict for plaintiff. Mr. Justice Harris, before whom the motion was made to set aside the verdict on the ground of coercion, said in the course of his opinion: "An attempt to influence the jury, by referring to the time they are to be kept together, or the inconvenience to which they are to be subjected, in case they are so pertinacious as to adhere to their individual opinions, and thus continue to disagree, cannot be justified. A judge has no right to threaten or intimidate a jury in order to affect their deliberations. I think he has no right to even allude to his own purposes as to the length of time they are to be kept together. There should be nothing in his intercourse with the jury having the least appearance of duress or coercion. . . . That, should they continue to disagree, they are not to be exposed to unreasonable inconvenience, nor to receive the animadversion of the court."

In Slater v. Mead, 53 How. Pr. 58, the judge said to the jury: "You must agree upon a verdict. I cannot discharge you until you agree upon a verdict." The jury retired and soon returned and rendered their verdict of no cause of action. Verdict was set aside on motion at special term, the opinion citing with approval the remarks of Mr. Justice Harris in Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 260.

In Ingersoll v. Lansing, 51 Hun, 108, the court made no provision for discharging the jury in the absence of the presiding justice from the county, unless they agreed, which compelled them to bring in a verdict or remain in confinement for four days without aid, protection, or even the presence of the court. On appeal, this was held to constitute coercion, and therefore that the trial court erred in refusing to set aside the verdict. In the course of the opinion, which was written by Mr. Justice Follett, the opinion in Green v. Telfair is cited with approval, and also Pierre v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412. In the latter case the jury retired on Tuesday p. m. Wednesday p. m. officer informed the judge that they could not agree. Thereupon the judge directed the officer to inform them: "The judge does not believe it yet; and you might say to them that it is essential they agree to-night, as I am going away, and won't be back until day after tomorrow, and they might not get discharged until I come back, as Judge Coolidge is going to be here." The verdict was returned within an hour. It was held that the verdict should be regarded as coerced, the court saying. "Every attempt to drive men into an agreement which they would not have reached freely is a perversion of justice." "The one may be right as well as the eleven, and if right may be able to persuade them. . . . And it is very possible, at least, . . . that a message of the kind here given would be regarded by the outstanding juror as a somewhat strong intimation of the judge's opinion concerning the plainness of the case, and the impropriety of holding out."

In Physioc v. Shea, 75 Ga. 466, a new trial was granted, where a verdict was rendered shortly after the judge told the jury (which had been out all night) that they could have breakfast at their own expense, they having had no supper.

In Chesapeake & O. S. R. Co. v. Barlow, 86 Tenn. 537, the jury reported inability to agree. The trial judge said: "This is too common, and you ought to agree;" that he would not discharge them, but should keep them together for the remaining three weeks of the term unless they agreed. They agreed next day. The verdict was set aside.

In State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462, the court said to the jury that they ought, by compromise and surrender of individual opinion, to agree, and that failure to do so would be an imputation on court and jury. In an opinion written by Judge Brewer the court presented its reasons for reversing the judgment, in part, that while the court might call the attention of the jury to many matters that rendered an agreement desirable, such as time already taken, improbability of securing additional testimony, the general public benefit in a speedy close of a litigation, the question of expense to parties and the public, yet no juror should be influenced to a verdict by fear that failure to do so would be regarded by the public as reflecting upon either his intelligence or his integrity. "Personal consideration should never be permitted to influence his conclusions; and the thought of them should never be presented to him as a motive for action." That was a criminal case, and it may be said, in passing, that the language used by the trial judge to the jury is very much like that used on one occasion by the judge in the case at bar. The intelligence of the jury was not more sharply reflected upon in that case than in this, for the trial justice said: "This case has occupied nearly seven weeks, and to say now, at the end of all that time,—at the end of all this labor and expense,—that the question is no better off than it was when started, is almost to confess incompetency in this matter."

In Hancock v. Elam, 8 Baxt. 33, the judge ordered the jury locked up until they should agree, not allowing them to have dinner. Held error.

Spearman v. Wilson, 44 Ga. 478, held: "The court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial, upon the ground that, after the jury were brought in and answered they had not and were not likely to agree, he stated to them if they did not bring in a verdict very soon he would make arrangements to carry them to Greensboro. This question has been decided in Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625."

In 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 522, the rule 41 L. R. A.

is said to be that "language on the part of the court, the obvious tendency of which is to coerce an agreement on the part of the jury, affords ground for a new trial. To insist too strenuously upon the necessity of an agreement may have such effect."

Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ind. 19, 24, was an appeal from a decision overruling a motion for a new trial. Judgment was reversed, and a new trial granted, upon the ground of coercion. After the jury had retired and been out nine hours, the trial court, without consent of the appellant, "caused the jury to be informed through the bailiff having them in charge that, if they did not agree upon a verdict, the court would keep them until Saturday night, a period of four days, to which action of the court the defendant at the proper time, as soon as her attorneys learned of such action, objected and excepted." "This action of the court cannot be justified. It constituted,—as it must have been intended it should,—a kind of coercion upon the jury, which was inconsistent with their proper independence."

A plain error was committed. Its plain tendency was to influence the jury."

Berry v. People, 1 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 43, 47, reported in memorandum (77 N. Y. 588), is not at all in conflict with the trend of all recent authority upon this question. In that case the jury, after being charged, retired for deliberation, and upon returning to the court asked for further instructions, and then announced their inability to agree upon a verdict. The recorder, addressing the jury, said: "I would discharge you, but under my sense of duty I cannot. . . . After a few days it, [the case] has been presented to you, and thoroughly argued and tried, witnesses were examined and cross-examined. I do not care what you find; guilty or not guilty; it is perfectly immaterial to me. But I say it is my duty if you cannot agree, that I shall lock you up for the night; that is a most ungrateful thing for me to do to any jury. As I told you on Friday night, I do not want you detained from your families, and I do not now. If you cannot agree, I shall order an officer to take you in charge. I will give you fifteen minutes, and see if you can arrive at a conclusion." But for the expression of the trial judge, "I shall lock you up for the night," his remarks would have presented no ground for criticism. This court was of the opinion that the trial judge did not intend to coerce the jury; that he sought merely to convey the idea that they would have to remain over night at the court. This court said in its per curiam opinion: "The alleged threat to lock up jurors if they failed to agree was, we think, only intended as a statement that the jury would have to remain over night, as the court would adjourn. Nothing like a threat of imprisonment or punishment could have been intended." The decision of the court, therefore, was that there had been no attempt at coercion, the language complained of not being susceptible of a construction that would give it that effect with the jury, and not that a judgment would be allowed to stand either where the trial court had attempted to coerce the jury, or the language used by him was of such a character that it probably had that effect. Phanix Ins Co. v. Moog, 81 Ala. 885, and Taylor v. Jones, 2 Head, 565, are in line with cases cited.

Reference has now been made to nearly all the cases which I have been able to find, of comparatively recent date, and they establish that the old rule permitting coercion of a jury in order to secure a verdict has been swept away; that, under our present method, the independence of a juror is respected. An attempt to drive the members of a jury into an agreement is beyond the power of the court, and an obvious effort to effect such a result demands a new trial.

In this case we can well understand the anxiety of the learned judge who presided at the trial, to have it ended by a verdict of a jury. The trial had lasted nearly seven weeks; it had been a severe strain upon the jury to be kept together all that time; the expense had been exceedingly great for so small a county; and to have all this inconvenience, labor, and expense borne for nothing seemed a most unfortunate result and one to be avoided if possible. But in the attempt to avoid it the learned judge, as we think, after a very careful consideration of the subject, fell into error, and as a result, very likely coerced some members of the jury into an agreement with their fellow members against their own personal convictions.

Some of the grounds upon which this conclusion rests will now be given.

At 8:30 P. M. of the 11th day of March, 1897, the jury retired to consider a case, the trial of which had consumed nearly seven weeks, during all of which time they had been kept together. All of that night and until 11:30 A. M. of the next day the jury were presumably engaged in discussing the evidence, but at the hour last named they came into court and asked two questions about evidence. The information asked for was furnished by reading a portion of the stenographer's minutes. At 8:25 P. M. of the same day the jury came into court and announced that they had not agreed upon a verdict. The court then addressed the jury upon the importance of a decision of the question submitted to them, concluding as follows: "It is for the interests of all concerned and public justice that there should be a decision of this case, so that the question shall be put at rest. I cannot hear of a disagreement of this jury. You must retire, gentlemen." The jury at once retired, and two hours later asked for further instructions, which were furnished by reading from the stenographer's minutes. The next day, at 12:45 P. M., the jury presented to the court a written communication, which read as follows:

"The probability, or even possibility, of this jury ever agreeing is impossible, in my opinion. [Signed] Geo. J. Holden, Foreman."

For forty hours covering two entire nights, this jury had been engaged in the consideration of the testimony in a small room, and now for the first time reported their deliberate judgment to be that an agreement was impossible. The court responded to this communication as follows: "The order will be that you be conducted to your hotel, and that you be brought back for further deliberation. . . . I have made my own arrangements so as to be back at your call, both for to-day and for some time in the future, so that this case may be fully disposed of, if there is a possibility for it. . . ." Language more apt to convey to a jury that the hardships of the past forty hours were to be continued for a considerable time in the future cannot easily be imagined. On their return the court addressed them at length, saying, among other things: "I don't know that you fully appreciate the gravity and importance to this community and to the state that a decision should be reached in this matter, and that this important question shall be settled whether the defendant is guilty or innocent. This case has occupied nearly seven weeks, and to say, now at the end of all that time, —at the end of all this labor and expense,—that the question is no better off than it was when it started, is almost to confess incompetency in this matter. . . ."

We suspend quoting from the remarks of the court long enough to again call attention to State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462, in which the court reversed a judgment of conviction because the trial court, in urging the jury to agree, said "that failure to do so would be an imputation on court and jury." In the opinion of the court, written by Judge (now Mr. Justice) Brewer, it was said: "No juror should be induced to agree to a verdict by a fear that a failure to so agree would be regarded by the public as reflecting upon either his intelligence or his integrity. Personal consideration should never be permitted to influence his conclusions; and the thought of them should never be presented to him as a motive for action." The position taken by that court meets with our approval, and it is alike applicable to the comment of the trial court in this case that a failure to agree "is almost to confess incompetency in this matter."

Taking up again the address of the court to the jury, who had solemnly announced that an agreement was impossible, we quote: "I have laid aside my other engagements so that this case can be attended to, because I appreciate the importance of it, and I would like to enforce upon you an appreciation of the importance of settling this question. It has got to be settled." Later on, but in this same address, the court said: "I know that your room is a narrow place, and that you are a good deal confined there, and for that reason I have arranged with the sheriff that you shall occupy this room from now on until the completion of your labors. Of course, I don't know how long it will take. . . ." The address was followed by an order, entered on the minutes of the court, "that the jury should be conducted to their meals at the usual hours to-morrow, Sunday, and including Monday morning." Monday morning came, and the jury sent word to the court that they had agreed. They had been out for about eighty-four hours without beds or cots; forty of those hours they had been confined in a small room. From the remarks of the court, and the treatment they had received, they had every reason to believe that a still longer confinement on chairs and hard benches was in store for them,—a physical strain such as only strong men could stand. If one or more members of the jury surrendered their convictions to put an end to the punishment they were undergoing, and with an indefinite continuance of which they were all threatened, it is not to be wondered at. Only very strong characters could have longer resisted the importunities of associates and the appeal of their own exhausted bodies for relief from the strain to which they had been so long subjected. Enough has been said to call attention to some of the reasons which have led us to the conclusion that the agreement of this jury should be regarded as coerced. A verdict thus obtained ought not to be allowed to stand in any case, and, least of all, in one involving a human life.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

All concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

R. J. WILLIAMS, Appt.,

I. HENDRICKS.

(115 Ala. 277.)

A partner is not liable for the penalty imposed by Code, § 3296, for "wilfully and knowingly" cutting trees of another person when this was done without his consent or knowledge, by his copartner.

(April 27, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the NOTE.—Criminal and penal liability for act of copartner, servant, or agent.

- I. General rules.
- II. Application to particular subjects.
 - a. Crimes against the person.
 - b. Forgery, burglary, larceny.
 - c. Libel.
 - d. Violation of revenue laws.
 - e. Maintenance of nuisances.
 - f. Adulteration of food products.
 - g. Trespass in wilfully cutting trees.
 - h. Sabbath breaking.
 - i. Dealing with slaves.
 - j. Gaming on licensed premises.
 - k. Miscellaneous offenses.
- III. Violation of liquor laws.
 - a. Conflict of authority.
 - b. Unlawful sale generally.
 1. By partner.
 2. By agent or servant.
 - c. Selling without license.
 1. By partner.
 2. By agent or servant.
 - d. Selling to minors.
 1. By partners.
 2. By agents or servants.
 - e. Selling to habitual drunkards.
 - f. Selling on Sunday.
 - g. Violation of other miscellaneous provisions.
 - h. Evidence of.
 1. Presumption and burden of proof.
 2. Admissibility.
 3. Sufficiency.
 - i. Question for jury.

I. General rules.

As a general rule a partner is not criminally liable for the acts of his associates done without his knowledge or consent. Whitton v. State, 37 Miss. 379.

There can be no partnership in crime. State v. Gay, 10 Mo. 441.

So, it has been said in a prosecution against statutory penalty for cutting timber on another's land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. L. Harmon for appellant.

Messrs. Hubbard & Hubbard for appellee.

Coleman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 3296 of the Code of 1886 provides that "any person who cuts down any oak . . . on land not his own, wilfully and knowingly, without the consent of the owner of the land, must pay to the owner $10 for every such tree," etc. The plaintiff, the appellee, sued to recover the statutory penalty for cutting down thirty-four oak trees. The an agent, that there can be no agency in the commission of misdemeanors, and that the agent, and not the principal, is the guilty party. State v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 23 Ind. 363.

And in Spring Valley v. Henning, 42 Ill. App. 159, which was a suit for a penalty imposed by a city for selling liquors within its limits without first having obtained a license therefor, it was said that what one does by his agents he does by himself. There is no such thing as an agency in crime. The employer is as guilty as the agent, and is an accomplice before the fact, and under the law a principal, and it matters little what the instructions were.

So, in State v. Great Works Mill & Mfg. Co. 20 Me. 41, 37 Am. Dec. 38, it was said that where a crime or misdemeanor is committed under corporate authority, the individual concerned, and not the corporation, should be indicted.

But a corporation may be held liable to a penalty for acts of its agents or servants done in the course and within the scope of their employment. Satterfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 23 Ill. App. 446.

So, where the servant acts in obedience to an express order given by the master, the master is liable for all the consequences of the servant's acts, either civilly or criminally. Sagers v. Nuckolls, 3 Colo. App. 85.

Where a person with criminal intent designs the commission of a criminal act, and employs another to carry out his purpose, the act of the person employed in carrying it out becomes the act of the principal, and he, as well as the agent, is criminally responsible therefor. United States v. Nunnemacher, 7 Biss. 111.

And where a man does an act which amounts to a felony, through the instrumentality of an innocent agent, the employer, and not the agent, is accountable for the act. Reg. v. Bleasdale, 2 Car. & K. 765.

The general rule is a person may be held evidence shows that the defendant and one Hinton were partners in getting staves, and according to their agreement the defendant furnished the money for the partnership, and Hinton attended to the business of getting out the staves. He furnished to defendant at regular stated periods the amounts due parties from whom trees were purchased, and also what was due for labor, and the defendant settled the claims as thus reported. There was evidence tending to show that Hinton had no authority from defendant to cut trees on any land except by agreement and purchase from the owner, and that the trees in controversy were cut by Hinton for staves without the knowledge and consent of the defendant. One of the questions involved in the case was whether the fact that defendant and Hinton were partners in the stove business subjected the defendant to the statutory penalty. In Story, Partn. § 168, the following language is used: "From what has been already suggested, it is obvious that a tort committed by one partner, or by any other agent of the partnership, will not bind the partnership, unless it be either authorized or adopted by the firm, or be within the proper scope and business of the partnership." The general rule is that those partners only are liable in respect of a tort who are privy to the tort, but this rule is subject to the exception that partners are responsible for the tortious acts of a partner in the prosecution of the copartnership business. Collyer, Partn. § 457; 8 Kent, Com. p. 47, note. The rule is well settled, at least in this state, that the master is liable for the wilful tortious acts of his servants done within the scope and range of his employment, although the particular act was not authorized by the master. The rule as here declared was at first limited to actions against railroads. Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 70 Ala. 268. But, if sound as to railroads, there seems to be no good reason why it should not apply, under like circumstances, in all cases of respondet superior, or to a partner acting for and within the scope of the business. Lisley v. Fletcher, 81 Ala. 284; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Frazier, 93 Ala. 45; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Higdon, 94 Ala. 286, 14 L. R. A. 515. In all these cases where the principle was applied the action sought to hold the principal or superior responsible for a common-law liability. The actions were to recover damages sustained as the consequential and natural result of the tort of the agent or servant. If, in the case at bar, the plaintiff had sued to recover the consequential damages sustained by the tortious cutting of the trees by Hinton, the partner, we would without hesitation, under the well-settled principles declared in the foregoing cases, hold that defendant was responsible for such damages resulting naturally and proximately from the tortious acts of his partner done in the criminally liable for the acts of his agent where he participated in them. Com. v. Gillespie, 7 Serg. & R. 469, 10 Am. Dec. 475.

And participation in the acts of an agent which will hold the principal criminally liable therefor may be adduced from circumstantial evidence. Com. v. Gillespie, 2 Serg. & R. 469, 10 Am. Dec. 475.

So, the rule that the master is responsible for the acts of his servant in the course of the master's business is applicable in a civil action based upon a penal statute. Fruchey v. Eagleston, 15 Ind. App. 88.

And the general principle which governs the responsibility of the master for the acts of his servant applies to an action brought under a statute making that a tort which was not so before, and providing for the recovery of damages against the tortfeasor. George v. Gobey, 128 Mass. 289, 35 Am. Rep. 376.

Where an agent who commits a crime in the prosecution of his duties as such is himself guilty, he is the principal, and the employer is an accessory before the fact; but if it be a misdemeanor, both are principal offenders. People v. Adams, 8 Denio, 190, 45 Am. Dec. 408.

And one who procures, counsels, commands, or incites his clerk or agent to commit a crime in his absence is an accessory before the fact, and cannot be convicted upon an indictment which charges him with having jointly with his clerk committed the offense as principal. Hately v. State, 15 Ga. 347.

And the meaning of the word "command," as applied to the case of a principal and accessory, is, where a person having control over another, as a master over his servant, orders a thing to be done. State v. Mann, 3 N. C. (1 Hayw.) 4.

In criminal cases, however, it is the participation of the principal or partner in a wrongful act, either directly or by concurring therein, or by assenting thereto, that renders him liable therefor. If the principal or partner commands, procures, or expresses assent that the wrong shall be done before or at the time of its commission, criminal responsibility may be fixed upon him. Barnett v. State, 54 Ala. 570.

But, as a general rule, a master is not criminally liable for a criminal act upon the part of his servant, unless he in some way participates in, countenances, or approves the act. Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357; Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 259, 43 Am. Dec. 432; Nail v. State, 34 Ala. 262; Hipp v. State, 5 Blackf. 149, 33 Am. Dec. 463; Mitchell v. Mims, 8 Tex. 6; Rex v. Higgins, 2 Ld. Raym. 1574.

To render him liable there must be such a direct participation in the act, or such assent and concurrence therein, as would involve him morally in the guilt. Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 259, 43 Am. Dec. 432.

And where it is sought to hold the master liable for a penalty for the act of his servant, it must appear from the evidence that the servant committed the act under the express direction of the master, or at least that from the nature of his employment authority to do the act was necessarily implied. Satterfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 23 Ill. App. 446.

Where one person employs another to do an act which may be done in a lawful manner, and the latter in doing it unnecessarily commits a public nuisance whereby injury results to a third person, the employer is not responsible. Peachey v. Rowland, 13 C. B. 182, 20 L. T. 208, 22 L. J. C. P. N. 8, 17 Jur. 764.

And a man cannot be convicted of a crime perpetrated by his agent in doing an illegal act which he had been specifically ordered by his principal not to do. Com. v. Johnston, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 317.

And declarations of the agent in the performance of such illegal acts are not generally competent against the principal when sought to be charged in a criminal proceeding. Nail v. State, 34 Ala. 262.

In Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A.

statute, the object of which is to punish the wrongdoer as well as to recompense the injured individual. To subject anyone, therefore, to the penalty of the act it must be shown to have been wilfully violated, by proof that the party charged committed the forbidden act himself, or caused another to do it by his command or authority. The statute gives the penalty against the actual trespasser only; it would be a violation of legal principles, therefore, to extend it so as to embrace another by implication. The liability arising from the relation of master and servant is founded in policy, but the implication of authority in the servant, that would render the master liable in many cases in a civil suit, would not be sufficient to convict him in a criminal or penal prosecution. The maxim, qui facit per alium, facit per se, would be strictly applicable in an action of trespass against Cushing, but in this prosecution he is liable only for his personal acts, or such acts of his workmen or servants as are proved to have been done by his express, or at least necessarily implied, authority. There is no proof of such acts, or such authority having been given by Cushing to those who committed the trespass; he cannot, therefore, be considered liable under the statute. Although Dill cannot recover in this action, he is not without a remedy for the injury sustained. That given by the statute is in addition to the remedy at common law, and an action under it would not be a bar to a suit at common law in any result." In the case of Satterfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 23 Ill. App. 446, the action was brought against the telethe press were present, and hoped they would take notice of it, which was indorsed by the others, whereupon condensed, but substantially correct, accounts of what had been said were inserted in the newspapers, which constituted the libels complained of, is sufficient evidence on a prosecution against such member and chairman of the board for libel to go to the jury. Parkes v. Prescott, 38 L. J. Exch. N. S. 105, L. R. 4 Exch. 169, 20 L. T. N. S. 537, 17 Week. Rep. 773.

In the above case it was said by Byles, J., dissenting, that there is a distinction between the authority which may make a man liable criminally for a libel published by another, and that which will make him liable civilly for the acts of another.

d. Violation of revenue laws.

Any violation of the internal revenue laws incurring a penalty committed by a partner in the course of partnership business is in legal contemplation the act of all the partners, and each of them is liable to pay the penalty, and the fact that the partner knew nothing of the violation, and never consented to it, is no defense. United States v. Thomasson, 4 Biss. 90.

So, an action against partners, brought to recover double the value of certain importations alleged to have been illegally made and received and concealed and purchased by the defendant, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1823 (3 Stat. at L. 781), is not a penal action intended solely for the punishment of crimes against the revenue laws, but is a remedial action providing indemnity for loss in which knowledge of the agent is in law attributed to his principal, as well as that of the partner to all the members of the firm. Com. v. Sloan, 4 Cush. 52.

And the partners should be held liable for double the value of importations thus made, received, and concealed, the tortious act of the agent being the act of the principal when done in the course of his agency, though not directly authorized. Com. v. Sloan, 4 Cush. 52.

And where partners engage in the manufacture and sale of tobacco, which by the revenue law must be inspected and marked by a United States Inspector, everyone of them must, at his peril, take care that the revenue is not defrauded by any forged inspection marks on the back of packages of tobacco manufactured and sold by the firm. United States v. Thomasson, 4 Biss. 90.

So, two persons composing a partnership, who make and sign in their partnership name a false return to the assessor of internal revenue, may be jointly indicted therefor. United States v. McGinniss, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 120. 41 L. R. A.

And the members of a firm may be jointly indicted for making a fraudulent monthly return of tobacco manufactured, though only sworn to by one of them. United States v. Montjoy, 3 Int. Rev. Rec. 83.

And a principal employing two agents in a very extensive business, who make out false bills of lading while engaged in the regular course of their business, and present them to the collector, and obtain the clearance of a vessel thereon, is liable for treble the tolls usually charged on such property, under 1 N. Y. Stat. at L. 241, § 124, such act being a fraud upon the revenue laws of the state. Davis v. Bemis, 40 N. Y. 453, note.

But the responsibility of a merchant for a violation of the revenue laws by his clerk is limited to acts properly within the scope of his employment. United States v. Halberstadt, Gilp. 262.

And the purchase of an empty cask which had contained foreign distilled spirits, by the clerk of a commission merchant, and the removal to his store before the marks set thereon under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 2, 1799, had been defaced, does not render the merchant liable to the penalties of the act if he had no knowledge of or agency in the purchase and removal, or any acquiescence in such illegal proceedings. United States v. Halberstadt, Gilp. 262.

Where one of several partners enters a wine so that by a mistake of a clerk in the custom office the Crown is defrauded of its duties, however, all the partners who were such at the time of the importation are liable for the whole sum to the Crown. Atty. Gen. v. Stranyforth, Bunb. 97.

And a firm, one member of which consigns goods in a foreign country in such way that by mistake the Crown is deprived of a part of the revenue tax thereon, is liable to treble the amount though the act was done by his co-partner without his knowledge. Graham v. Pocock, L. R. 3 P. C. 345, 30 J. P. C. N. S. 38, 23 L. T. N. S. 537, 19 Week. Rep. 31.

And where imported goods come to hand, in which several persons are concerned either in partnership or otherwise, it being known that they had not paid the duties, the Crown may come against any one of them for the whole penalty of treble the value prescribed by law, the claim being in the nature of a tort, and not a contract. Atty. Gen. v. Burges, Bunb. 223; Atty. Gen. v. Carbold, Bunb. 223, note; Atty. Gen. v. Weeks, Bunb. 224.

So, the question on an information against a paper maker for sending out paper not tied up and labeled or wrapped with a departure stamp thereon, as required by 1 Geo. IV., chap. 58, § 2 graph company to recover the statutory penalty for trees conceded by the court to have been cut under the directions of the superintendent of the wires of the defendant. There was no evidence to show that the trees were cut under any authority or directions of the defendant, or had been ratified by it. The court conceded the liability of the principal or master for the torts of the agent done within the scope of his authority, but held that the principle did not apply when the action was brought to recover the statutory penalty. A statute of Massachusetts requires "that whenever . . . persons traveling with . . . [any kind of vehicles shall meet each other upon a road or bridge] each . . . [of them] shall seasonably drive his . . . vehicle to the right of the middle," etc. Rev. Stat. chap. 51, § 2.

6, 7, as to whether the wife of the paper maker who pledged paper not wrapped, labeled, and stamped had authority from her husband, is one of fact for the jury. Atty. Gen. v. Riddle, 2 Crompt. & J. 493, 2 Tyrw. 523.

And where a person is concerned as partner or otherwise in goods which have not paid the duties, to render him liable, proof need only be made that the goods came to his power or into his agent's custody. Atty. Gen. v. Burges, Bunb. 223.

So, all persons present and jointly interested or aiding in the smuggling of goods are principals, and equally liable to the penalty imposed therefor. King v. Manning, 2 Comyns, Rep. 616.

And where a trader harbors or conceals smuggled goods he is liable for the penalties for the illegal act of a servant done in the conduct of the business with a view to protect the smuggled goods, though he was absent at the time, and the act was done by the servant upon the exigency of the occasion when the goods were discovered. Atty. Gen. v. Siddon, 1 Crompt. & J. 220, 1 Tyrw. 41.

And each of several persons obstructing a custom-house officer contrary to 8 Geo. I. chap. 18, § 25, is separately liable to the penalty imposed by such act. Rex v. Clark, 2 Cowp. 610.

So, where two partners are separately convicted under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. chap. 53, § 44, providing that every person who shall be concerned in the shipping of goods the duties for which have not been paid shall forfeit treble value thereof or be liable to a penalty of £100 each is liable to the penalties imposed by the act. Reg. v. Dean, 12 Mees. & W. 39, 13 L. J. Exch. N. S. 33.

And a customer who certifies falsely into the exchequer through the concealment of his deputy is liable therefor to the penalties prescribed by 3 Hen. VI. chap. 3, though such customer is required by law to appoint a deputy. Anonymous, 2 Dyer, 238, b.

And a person may be charged with being concerned in the unshipping of goods, the duties on which had not been paid, and with knowingly harboring goods imported, and illegally unshipped without payment of duties, etc., under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. chap. 53, § 44, where it appears that a practice had prevailed at the custom house of allowing the owners of imported goods to take them away without payment of duty at the time, an entry of them having been previously made in a book kept by the officers for that purpose, and that his clerk had removed some of the leaves from the custom-house book and substituted others containing false entries of the quantity of goods imported, though there was no direct proof that this fact was known
41 L. R. A.

"Every person offending against the provisions . . . [of the act] shall for each offense forfeit a sum not exceeding $20 . . . and he shall further be liable to any party for all damages sustained by reason of such offense." Id. § 8. In the case of Goodhue v. Dix, 2 Gray, 181, the plaintiff sought to hold the principal or master liable upon the ground that the servant omitted seasonably to drive to the right as provided in the statute. The court held that the employer or owner of the vehicle was not liable under the statute "if he be in no way implicated in the conduct of the servant," and that the liability was limited to the particular individual who was guilty of its violation. The case recognized the common-law liability of the principal or employer for the acts of the agent or servant, but held the rule did not apply to him, he having derived the benefit from the fraudulent transaction. Reg. v. Dean, 12 Mees. & W. 39, 13 L. J. Exch. N. S. 33.

e. Maintenance of nuisances.

One who maintains a nuisance by himself or his servants is liable for a penalty imposed therefor, but the nuisance must have been caused by his own act or the acts of others through his procurement. Sloan v. State, 8 Ind. 312.

Thus, the owner of works carried on for his profit by his agents is liable to indictment for a public nuisance caused by such agents in carrying on the works, though done by them without his knowledge and contrary to his general orders. Queen v. Stephens, L. R. 1 Q. B. 702, 12 Jur. N. S. 961, 14 L. T. N. S. 593, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 251, 14 Week. Rep. 593, 7 Best & S. 710.

And the directors of a gas company are answerable for a nuisance caused by the conveying of refuse of gas into a public river, whereby the fish are destroyed and the water rendered unfit to drink, though done by order of the superintendent and engineer under the general authority to manage the works, and though personally ignorant of the particular plan adopted, and though such plan was a departure from the original and understood method, which they had no reason to suppose was discontinued. Rex v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 292.

So, evidence that a minor had been forbidden by the keeper to enter a billiard room, and was afterwards admitted by his agents or servants having charge thereof in his absence, is not admissible to establish a defense in a prosecution against such keeper for admitting a minor without written consent of his parents or guardian. Com. v. Emmons, 98 Mass. 6.

And the fact that a house in which lottery tickets were sold belonged to a person accused of their illegal sale, and that a boy conducted the business therein as a lottery broker under his sign, selling the ticket in question as his agent and in his name, may be submitted to a jury, and they may infer therefrom his participation in the sale of such ticket, particularly if the boy had been employed as his agent to sell tickets authorized by the laws of the state. Com. v. Gillespie, 7 Serg. & R. 469, 10 Am. Dec. 475.

But an indictment cannot be sustained against a railroad company for a nuisance in the obstruction of a highway by the stoppage thereon of trains upon its road by the persons in charge thereof while it is under the sole management of a receiver appointed by the court of chancery over whose acts the company has

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Isaac T. BRYAN, Appt.,
v.
Henry A. ADLER et al., Respts.

(97 Wis. 124.)

The refusal of a waiter in an eating house to wait upon a colored patron because of his color renders the eating-house keeper liable, although he did not aid or abet the waiter in such action, to at least the minimum penalty provided by a law entitling all persons to the equal enjoyment of the privileges of eating houses under a penalty of not less than $5 and costs.

(September 28, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County evidence whatever tending to show such agency. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Brantley, 107 Ala. 683; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lenoir, 107 Ala. 640.

b. Sabbath breaking.

The jury in a prosecution against a railroad company for Sabbath breaking may find the defendant guilty if, by proof of the habitual running of freight trains about the time of the offense, or from other satisfactory evidence, it is satisfied that the running of such trains was with the assent of the company, though it appears that by a general order it had directed its agents and employees not to ship anything except live stock and perishable freight on the Sabbath day. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 W. Va. 362, 36 Am. Rep. 803.

And evidence that a place of business was kept open on Sunday, and that an employee was selling cigars therein, and that the proprietor was present a part of the day, justifies the conclusion that the business was carried on with his knowledge and by his authority, rendering him, as well as the clerk, liable for a penalty imposed upon any person carrying on any worldly employment or business whatever on the Lord's day. Seaman v. Com. 11 W. N. C. 14.

But mere proof that a part of a load of coal was transported over a railroad on the Sabbath day is not sufficient to sustain an indictment against the railroad company for Sabbath breaking. The assent of the company must be shown by proving that such Sabbath breaking was habitual, or by other satisfactory evidence, and such assent cannot be inferred from a single breach of the Sabbath by the authorized agents of the company while acting within the scope of their employment. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 W. Va. 362, 36 Am. Rep. 803.

See also infra, III. f.

1. Dealing with slaves.

A partner who was not present, and against whom there was no proof that he knew of, or in any wise assented to, the trading of his copartner with a slave, cannot be held criminally liable for a sale to such slave of a pint of rum by his copartner, under a statute prohibiting selling to slaves. State v. Coleman, Dud. L. 32.

And a principal or employer cannot be held criminally liable under the statute prohibiting trading with slaves where the illicit trading was done by his clerk without his knowledge in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for defendants' refusal to furnish food to plaintiff at their public eating house. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Hazelton, for appellant:

All persons carrying on any branch of business mentioned in this law must comply with its terms, and the act of the servant within the scope of his employment is the act of the principal.

Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 689, 17 Am. Rep. 504; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Finney, 10 Wis. 389; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 468, 17 Am. Rep. 495, 49 Wis. 654, 24 Am. Rep. 437; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Schaefer v. Osterbrink, 67 Wis. 499, 58 Am. Rep. 875; Weed v. Panama R. Co.

or consent. State v. Matthew, May, 1835, cited in Dud. L. 34.

And the fact that a negro dealt with the clerk of a shopkeeper without the written consent of his master or owner is not sufficient to charge the shopkeeper, under the South Carolina statute prohibiting dealing, trading, or trafficking with any slave not having a permit from his master, and prescribing a forfeiture of a designated sum, unless knowledge of the fact was brought home to him or some general order proved for that purpose. State v. Dawson, 2 Bay, 360.

So, the evidence of the agent of a person indicted for trading with a slave, that he had general instructions from his principal not to traffic with slaves without a written permit, throws the onus upon the state to produce further proof of his guilt. But it is not error to leave the inquiry to the judge whether these instructions have been abrogated, and whether the defendant has specially approved of the act. State v. Privett, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 100.

And where a person is indicted for selling spirituous liquor to a slave, and it is proved that the liquor was sold in his absence by his clerk, an instruction that if the defendant had previously sanctioned the acts of his clerk in selling liquor to slaves under similar orders, and if the jury believe that the accused, if he had been present, would have done as his clerk did, then they are authorized to find him guilty, is erroneous. Patterson v. State, 21 Ala. 571.

But while the mutual agency of partners in an unlawful transaction cannot be implied, yet, if their stock in trade, and the furniture and fixtures of their shop, and the run of custom, indicate an unlawful trade, and this is confirmed by proof of a sale of spirits to a slave by one of the partners, the jury in a prosecution for such sale may find the assent and guilty participation of the other. State v. Biermau, 1 Strohh. L. 258.

And the owners of a steamboat cannot escape the penalty imposed by Md. act 1838, chap. 375, for transportation on any railroad or steamboat of any slave without permit in writing from the owner thereof, by showing that neither they nor their agents had any knowledge that the slave was on board, and had no intention to violate the law, and that they had used reasonable diligence to prevent such persons from coming on board. State v. Baltimore & S. S. Co. 13 Md. 181.

So, in State v. Robles, Rice, L. 145, a new 17 N. Y. 363, 72 Am. Dec. 474; Fishkill Sav. Inst. v. National Bank, 80 N. Y. 162, 86 Am. Rep. 595; Duinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 122, 8 L. R. A. 224; Moir v. Hopkins, 16 Ill. 318, 63 Am. Dec. 312; Brum v. Brister, 85 Miss. 391; Caswell v. Cross, 120 Mass. 545; Stickney v. Munros, 44 Me. 304; 1 Bl. Com. pp. 480-482; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 861; Story, Agency, § 452; Bishop, Contr. § 1111; Phelon v. Stiles, 48 Conn. 426; Cooley, Torts, p. 539, and cases cited in note 1.

There is no exception to the rule except in the case of public officers who are not responsible for the acts of servants they are obliged to employ; the reason here being that the maxim of respondet superior has no application, there being no freedom of choice as to the selection and control of agents.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 238, and cases cited.

Messrs. Austin & Fehr, for respondents:

Statutes which create liabilities, where at common law none existed, or which increase common-law liabilities, are, as a rule, strictly construed. In such cases the newly created liability will not be extended beyond the express provisions of the statute.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 400, and cases cited in note 1.

Statutes imposing costs are classed among those creating a liability, and must be construed strictly.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 401, and cases cited in note.

If a statute defining an offense designates one class of persons as subject to its penalties, all others are to be deemed as exonerated. Maxim Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Howell v. Stewart, 54 Mo. 400; State v. Jaeger, 63 Mo. 403; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 447.

The court will not extend the penalties provided for in an act to a class of persons or things not embraced within the penal clause, even when there is a manifest omission or oversight on the part of the legislature.

trial was granted upon a conviction for selling liquor to a slave, where it appeared that the liquor was sold by a clerk in the absence of the accused, his employer, and without his authority, and that the clerk had been already punished for the same act.

j. Gaming on licensed premises.

A licensed person may be convicted for suffering gaming to be carried on on the licensed premises within the meaning of § 17 of the licensing act of 1872, where the gaming had taken place thereon to the knowledge of a servant of the licensed person who was in charge of the premises, though without any knowledge or connivance on the part of the licensed person. Bond v. Evans, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 249, 57 L. J. M. C. N. S. 105, 59 L. T. N. S. 411, 36 Week. Rep. 767, 52 J. P. 612.

In the above case Somerset v. Hart, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 360, 53 L. J. M. C. N. S. 77, 48 J. P. 327, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case there was no evidence to show any connivance or wilful blindness on the part of the landlord, and it did not appear that the servant was in charge of the premises, while in the present case it is distinctly shown as a fact that the servant was in charge of the skittle alley where the game took place.

And Newman v. Jones, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 132, 55 L. J. M. C. N. S. 113, 55 L. T. N. S. 327, 50 J. P. 373, infra, III. b, 2, was distinguished upon the ground that it was a decision on other statutes, and that it appears from the judgment that the court quashed the conviction, which had proceeded upon the ground that the committee were the legal owners of the property of the club, the only question submitted being whether the appellants, as trustees of the club, were liable.

So, evidence that three persons stopping at an inn retired to bed shortly before 11 o'clock, and that between 1:30 and 2:15 o'clock the following morning they were discovered in the sitting room playing cards for money, the noise having been heard outside the premises, and that during all this time the hired porter, whose duty it was to sit up and attend to customers, was in a room at an extreme end of the house where he could not hear what was going on, is sufficient to convict the proprietor of suffering gaming on her premises, though it is not established that she had actual knowledge of what was going on. Redgate v. Haynes, 45 L. J. M. C. N. S. 68, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 89, 33 L. T. N. S. 779, 41 L. R. A.

To warrant a conviction of an innkeeper for permitting gaming on his licensed premises, however, it is not sufficient to show merely that such gaming took place, but while actual knowledge is not necessary, something amounting to constructive knowledge must be shown. Bosley v. Davis, 45 L. J. M. C. N. S. 27, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 84, 33 L. T. N. S. 528, 24 Week. Rep. 140.

And a licensed person is not criminally responsible for suffering gaming on the licensed premises under the licensing act of 1872, § 17, where it took place to the knowledge of his servant employed thereon, who was not in charge of the premises, and there was no evidence to show any connivance or wilful blindness on the part of the licensed person. Somerset v. Hart, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 360, 53 L. J. M. C. N. S. 77, 48 J. P. 327.

And knowledge of a potman in an inn that gaming was carried on therein is not such constructive knowledge of the innkeeper as would subject him to conviction for suffering gaming to be carried on on his premises under 35 & 36 Vict. chap. 94, § 17. Somerset v. Hart, 53 L. J. M. C. N. S. 77, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 360, 48 J. P. 327.

In the above case Mullins v. Collins, L. R. 9 Q. B. 292, 43 L. J. M. C. N. S. 67, 29 L. T. N. S. 838, 22 Week. Rep. 297, infra, III. g, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the plaintiff called no witnesses, but relied entirely upon certain points of law, thus opening the door to the inference that he had no affirmative case, and that the liquor was served by a woman, as to whom it would appear that there was some doubt whether she was not the appellant's wife and intrusted by him with the management of the house, the court saying that it seemed to it that this consideration really diminished very much its weight as authority on the point in question.

So, evidence that a police constable who was passing along the street by an inn, discovered that gaming was going on inside, and that one of the gentlemen playing said that he never saw a waiter come in during the playing, though he could not swear that a waiter did not come, and the depositions of the manageress that she did not supply the cards and knew nothing of the game, do not warrant a conviction of the manageress for suffering gaming on her licensed premises. Bosley v. Davies, 45 L. J. M. C. N. S. 27, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 84, 33 L. T. N. S. 523, 24 Week. Rep. 140.

Brooks v. State, 88 Ala. 122; United States v. Ten Cases of Shawles, 2 Paine, 163; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 882; Tewksbury v. Schulenberg, 41 Wis. 596.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges, in effect, that on and prior to October 30, 1895, the defendants were conducting a public eating house and saloon in Milwaukee; that on that day the plaintiff and another entered said eating house for the purpose of being served, and seated themselves at one of the tables provided for patrons, and waited some forty minutes for someone to take their order; that, on inquiry, they were informed by the defendants that their order was not taken because the plaintiff was a colored man, whereupon they left, and went elsewhere for supper; that, by such failure and refusal

k. Miscellaneous offenses.

That the acts complained of were done by a servant of a railroad company without its knowledge or consent and against its express orders is no defense in an action for violation of an ordinance restricting the rate of speed of trains crossing city streets. Buffalo v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. S. R. 150.

And the proprietor of a hotel is liable to a penalty provided by Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3291, 3293, for the denial of the full and equal accommodations of an inn on account of race or color, by the clerk of his hotel. Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88.

See also principal case, BRYAN v. ADLER.

And the act of the president of a bank, of permitting a firm of which he was a member to overdraw its account at the bank with intent to defraud the bank of the money, is a misapplication of the moneys of the bank within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5209, for which he is criminally responsible. United States v. Fish, 24 Fed. Rep. 685.

So, where change bills are issued by a clerk of a partnership in a store, and they are afterwards received and paid out by the clerk in the firm's business with the knowledge and assent of its members, such subsequent use and emission are an offense within the meaning of Ala. Rev. Code, § 8643, by all who concurred or participated in it, though the partners may not have known or assented to the original act, and the several partners are jointly and severally guilty though they did not jointly assent to it. Barnett v. State, 54 Ala. 579.

And one who gives old county bank notes, which are valueless, to a man to pass, telling him to say, if asked about them, that he took them from a man he did not know, who passes them, is guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses. Reg. v. Dowe, 11 Cox, C. C. 115, 87 L. J. M. C. N. S. 52, 17 L. T. N. S. 481, 16 Week. Rep. 344.

So, a guardian of the poor for a township, who carries on business as a cabinet maker and upholsterer in partnership with his son, is liable to the penalty imposed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV., chap. 76, § 77, for furnishing or supplying for his own profit, or on his own account, any goods materials, or provisions ordered to be given in parochial relief to any person in such parish or union, where the relief officer purchased at his shop from his son and partner an iron bedstead which was by the direction of the relief officer delivered at the house of an outdoor pauper in the union, though the accused was not present when it was ordered, paid for, or delivered, and the price was paid to his son, and the bedstead was only loaned to the pauper and remained the property of the guardians. Davies v. Harvey, 43 L. J. M. C. N. S. 121, L. R. 9 Q. B. 433, 30 L. T. N. S. 629, 22 Week. Rep. 733.

And where a banksman, who was the servant of a charter master of a mine, who by a special rule made pursuant to 23 & 24 Vict. chap. 151, for regulating such mine, was to be the responsible manager of the pit, and the banksman was to take care that not more than eight men should descend into the pit at the same time, violated such rule by lowering more than eight persons, and there was evidence that the charter master was close by and cognizant of his act, he may be convicted of aiding and abetting the banksman in the violation of such rule. Howells v. Wynne, 32 L. J. M. C. N. S. 241, 15 C. B. N. S. 3, 9 Jur. N. S. 1041, 11 Week. Rep. 807.

So, the Missouri statute awarding a penalty whenever any person shall die from an injury occasioned by the negligence of any officer, agent, servant, or employee while running or managing any locomotive, car, or train of cars, includes the negligence of any or all servants, and is not limited to that of a superior in command. Rine v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 100 Mo. 228.

But a complaint in an action for the penalty imposed by N. J. act March 11, 1890, § 13, for the prevention of cruelty to animals, upon any persons who, by their agents, servants, employees, or otherwise shall be guilty of such cruelty, must allege that the defendant did the act of cruelty complained of, or that he caused or procured it to be done. It is not sufficient to allege that he did it by his servant or agent; his direct agency must be shown by his presence, order, or direction. State, Roerber, v. Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 47 N. J. L. 237.

So, a die-sinker who is employed, for a pretended innocent purpose, to make a dye calculated to make shillings, who, suspecting the purpose, informs the commissioners of the mint, and makes the die under their directions for the purpose of detection, is an innocent agent, and his employer may be properly convicted therefor. Reg. v. Bannen, 1 Car. & K. 295, 2 Moody, C. C. 300.

And the members of a partnership who are mortgagees are liable for the statutory penalty for failure to enter satisfaction of a mortgage upon notice or request addressed to one, such notice being notice to all. Renfro v. Adams, 62 Ala. 302.

But a publisher is not liable to the statutory penalty for the keeping, publishing, and selling of a photograph previously copyrighted by another, imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4965, where the act was done by its agent or agents in pursuance of their employment, without his knowledge or consent. Schreiber v. Sharpless, 4 Fed. Rep. 175.

And a telegraph company is not liable for the penalty prescribed by Iowa Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5511, 5512, for failure to transmit a telegram, where the agent accepted the same in good faith, believing that the company had an office in the town to which it was directed, and transmitted it in the regular course of business, and it was not delivered for the reason that there was no office at that place. Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 10 Ind. App. 227.

Nor is the master, captain, manager, or owner of a steamboat responsible, under the act to take the plaintiff's order, the defendants wrongfully and unjustly denied to the plaintiff the equal enjoyment and privilege of their said eating house, without valid reason or excuse, and by an unjust and illegal discrimination, based wholly on color, to his damage in the sum of $500. The answer in effect admits that the defendants conducted such saloon and restaurant at the time mentioned; that they had many hundreds of patrons and many employees, and could not give personal attention to all their guests; that the plaintiff, a colored man, and his friend, a white man, were served with breakfast at their restaurant on the morning of that day; that about supper time they returned, and after remaining in the restaurant a short time, the plaintiff complained to the defendants that he had not been served; that the defendants thereupon requested one of their waiters to serve the plaintiff, but that he reof Congress of 1845, § 13, and the postoffice act of 1825, for the penalty imposed for failing to deliver letters, where the failure was due to the conduct of a clerk in their employ, and they were ignorant of the existence of the letter, and could not, by the use of reasonable diligence, have obtained knowledge of it. United States v. Beaty, Hempst. 487.

So, the penalty prescribed by Tenn. Code, § 4038, imposed upon an attorney failing to pay over money collected for a client upon return of execution nulla bona, and that he shall be stricken from the roll of attorneys, is not applicable to the case of a partner in a firm of attorneys who did not participate in the receipt or wrongful appropriation of the money. It is only applicable to the party derelict in duty and personally guilty of the wrong. Porter v. Vance, 14 Lea, 629.

And a railroad company is not liable for a penalty imposed by statute for failure on the part of its employees to feed animals shipped over its road, where the failure occurred while the road was in the hands of a receiver. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barnhart, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 601.

Nor is a railroad company liable for the penalty imposed on railroads for detention of freight after tender of the freight charges due, by their officers, agents, and employees, by 2 Sayles, Tex. Civ. Stat. art. 258a, § 3, where it occurred while the road was in the hands of a receiver. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Stoner, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 50.

And see principal case, HALL v. NORFOLK & W. R. Co., on the question of a penalty for over charge of freight or passenger rates.

So, to enable a party to recover double damages for injuries to stock, under Clay's Ala. Dig. 241, § 3, which is highly penal, it must be shown that the fence of the defendant was insufficient, and that the injury to the stock of the plaintiff arose out of some act of the defendant done, or commanded or directed to be done, by him. The mere negligence of a servant acting in the ordinary business of the master, although the damage to the stock of the plaintiff actually results from it, will not authorize a recovery, though an action on the case at common law would lie therefor. Smith v. Causey, 22 Ala. 568.

III. Violation of liquor laws.

a. Conflict of authority.

There is a decided conflict in the cases with reference to the criminal and penal liability of a partner, principal, or master for violation of the liquor laws by a partner, agent, or servant, which is even more marked than that with relation to other violations of law in general. It would seem, however, that perhaps by a majority of the cases the rule is adopted that the partner, principal, or master is not liable, unless the act was done with his authority or assent. But under statutes prohibiting the act in question absolutely and expressly, either by one's own hand or that of another, the partner, principal, or master is held liable. And there is a large number of cases holding him liable if the act was one within the apparent scope of authority, though expressly forbidden, and there are still others holding the prohibition to be absolute, requiring the partner, principal, or master, at his peril, to see that it is not violated, without reference to the question of his knowledge, authority, or assent.

b. Unlawful sale generally.

1. By partner.

One partner is criminally liable for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquor by the other, where the sale was made in pursuance of an understanding between them, and for their joint benefit and account. State v. Neal, 27 N. H. 131.

And that one was often in a store conducted in the name of another, and that he bought, sold, and bartered goods there, inspected the books and made charges, and went to a neighboring city and bought goods for the store, and that he had formerly been a partner and the old sign of the firm still remained upon the building, are evidence to prove that he was a partner for the purpose of a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor therein. State v. Wiggin, 20 N. H. 449.

So, one who by the use of his capital or credit aids in procuring or furnishing whisky to another for the purpose of being unlawfully sold by the latter, which is so sold and he receives a given per cent on the cost of all the whisky so furnished and sold, is guilty, with the seller, of selling liquor unlawfully, whether under the terms of the agreement between them a technical partnership existed or not. Phillips v. State, 95 Ga. 478.

And a partner in a grocery store, who is interested as such in the liquor charged to have been illegally sold, is criminally responsible for the act of his copartner done in the course of the partnership business, in selling it, under Miss. Rev. Code, art. 9, § 199, subjecting to indictment anyone selling intoxicating liquors without a license, and anyone interested in the liquors so sold. Whitton v. State, 87 Miss. 879.

But the law does not imply from the fact that persons were mercantile partners, an agreement by them as part of their partnership undertaking to violate the penal laws by a sale of whisky in contravention of the statute; and therefore the guilt of either of them depends, either upon a sale by him, or the assent of his mind in some form to a sale by the other. Acree v. Com. 18 Bush, 353.

So, where two persons are jointly indicted as common sellers of intoxicating liquor, and single sales are relied on for their conviction, either may be convicted under the same indictment for any sale made by him, without reference to any joint participation or privity between them. Com. v. Cook, 12 Allen, 542.

And where two persons are charged in the same indictment with retailing intoxicating liquors contrary to law, and it appears that the liquors were sold by one of them alone, he may be convicted, and the other acquitted. State v. Simmons, 66 N. C. 622.

fused to do so, although demanded of him by the defendants; that thereupon the plaintiff left the restaurant; that, as soon as they could secure other help, they discharged said waiter; that the defendants had not been prosecuted for a misdemeanor, under chapter 228, Laws 1896; that they denied that they aided, incited, or countenanced said waiter in such refusal, or that they or either of them refused the plaintiff service in their restaurant. At the close of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff brings this appeal.

It is undisputed that the saloon and restaurant mentioned was a public eating house; that the waiters of the defendants therein were all white; that the plaintiff was black colored; and that the refusal to wait upon him was solely by reason of his color. The statute of this state provides, in effect: "That all per-

An information charging two persons with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors is equivalent to a charge that each is guilty of so selling, and where one is tried separately he may be convicted, though the testimony fails to show that the other had any connection with it. State v. Sterna, 28 Kan. 154.

And a sale of intoxicating liquor made by one person alone is admissible in evidence under a complaint against him and two others for illegally selling intoxicating liquors, where he is tried alone. State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55.

But two persons indicted for jointly selling without a license cannot be both convicted upon proof that each one committed an act similar to the one charged. Stephens v. State, 14 Ohio, 386.

In Tracy v. Perry, 5 N. H. 504, however, it was held that two persons who join in the illegal sale of a glass of wine without being duly licensed incur the penalty jointly, and are not severally liable to several penalties.

B. By agent or servant.

The case of a sale of liquors prohibited by law at the shop or establishment of a principal, by an agent or servant usually employed in conducting his business, is one of that class in which the master may properly be charged criminally for the acts of his servants. Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 259, 43 Am. Dec. 432; Hanson v. State, 43 Ind. 330.

A liquor dealer is liable for sales made by an agent in his presence and with his knowledge and consent, the same as if he made the sales himself. Hofner v. State, 94 Ind. 84.

Where a person procures spirituous liquors for the purpose of retailing them, and hires another to attend to the bar as his servant, and he does the retailing, the employer is guilty the same as the employee. State v. Caswell, 2 Humph. 390.

And where a particular sale of liquor is made by a clerk or servant with the assent of the master, express or implied, he is criminally responsible therefor, and it would be wholly immaterial what general instructions he might have previously given. State v. Mueller, 35 Minn. 497.

And a general authority by an employer to his clerk to sell liquor unlawfully renders the employer criminally liable for any single sale made by the clerk in pursuance of such authority. Kinnebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232.

So, where a servant sells spirits belonging to his employers contrary to law with their assent, both they and the servant may be held criminally liable therefor. State v. Wiggin, 20 N. H. 449.

And a master who knowingly permits his slave, while under his control, to retail liquor in a house belonging to the master, is himself guilty of the offense of keeping a tippling-house, and liable to the penalty imposed therefor. Com. v. Major, 6 Dana, 243.

A man may keep a tippling-house by his agent, and one who does so, whether by a hired person or his wife or servant, incurs the penalty. Com. v. Major, 6 Dana, 243.

And a person may be convicted on an indictment for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquors made by a servant or agent employed in his business. Com. v. Park, 1 Gray, 553.

In civil actions, and in prosecutions for misdemeanors, a declaration or indictment alleging that the accused did an act, as selling intoxicating liquor, is sustained by proof that he caused it to be done by another. Com. v. Park, 1 Gray, 553.

And a count in an information charging a person with selling intoxicating liquors to be drunk at the place where sold, in violation of the liquor law, is sustained by proof that the liquor was sold by another as his agent, and it need not be averred in the information that it was sold by an agent; though greater particularity might have been required in case of an indictment. Parker v. State, 4 Ohio St. 563.

So, where a customer comes into a place kept for the sale of liquor, and helps himself to a drink, and places the price within reach of a clerk or agent of the employer, who receives it and puts it with the money of the proprietor, there is a sale by the owners if they assent, for which they are criminally responsible. State v. Wiggin, 20 N. H. 449.

And where two bartenders in the employ of the proprietor or owner of a business containing a cigar store in front and a "joint" in the back part, made sales of intoxicating liquors in violation of law, and the evidence establishes that they were made with the knowledge or assent of the owner or proprietor, or by his direction and authority, such owner or proprietor is liable on account thereof, the same as if made by him in person. State v. Falk, 51 Kan. 269.

Nor is the proprietor of a drug store, who is not himself a druggist, relieved from liability for the sale of intoxicating liquor by persons in his employ running his drug store, by the fact that he was by law compelled to employ legal pharmacists who were accredited and accepted by the commonwealth. Com. v. Johnston, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

And an instruction in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, that if the agent of the accused, in his presence and with his knowledge and consent, sold intoxicating liquor, the accused would be liable the same as if he made the sale himself, is not erroneous, though the evidence tends strongly to prove that the purchase was made of him, where there was some evidence tending to show that it was made of a bar tender in his presence. Hofner v. State, 94 Ind. 84.

So, the managing agent of a nonresident proprietor of a store, who has general direction and supervision of the clerks therein the same as his employer would have if present, is liable to the penalty imposed by law for the sale of intoxicating liquors, though such sale was in fact made by the clerks. State v. Dow, 21 Vt. 484.

sons within this state shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities and privileges of inns, restaurants, saloons, . . . eating houses, . . . and all other places of public accommodation or amusement, subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law and applicable alike to all persons of every race and color." Laws 1895, chap. 223, § 1. "That any person who shall violate the foregoing section or any part thereof, by denying to any person, except for reasons by law applicable alike to all persons, the full enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, or privileges enumerated in said section, or by aiding or inciting such denial, . . . shall for every such offense be liable to the person aggrieved thereby in a sum not less than $5 as damages, with costs to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction

Under what appears to be the prevailing rule, however, an employer is not criminally liable for a sale of liquor in violation of the laws against tipping, made by his employee without his knowledge of the fact. Neidelsner v. State, 6 Baxt. 499.

A party can only be held liable criminally for a sale of liquor by his servant, when made with his authority or with his knowledge or assent. If made without his knowledge, and really in opposition to his will, and in no way participated in, approved, or countenanced by him, he is not liable. State v. Mueller, 38 Minn. 497; Lathrope v. State, 51 Ind. 192; Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 259, 43 Am. Dec. 432; Com. v. Dunbar, 9 Gray, 208.

And evidence in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, that the sale was made by a young man behind the counter of the defendant's saloon, is not sufficient to establish the proprietor's guilt. In the absence of evidence to show his presence, or approval of the sale, or guilty knowledge of the offense. Wreidt v. State, 48 Ind. 579; Anderson v. State, 39 Ind. 553.

And the rule is the same when the sales were made in his absence, and against his express orders. Wadsworth v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 594; Com. v. Johnston, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 817.

One who keeps liquors with the intent that they shall be sold for lawful purposes only, and who himself makes only lawful sales, is not criminally liable for keeping a place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, under Iowa Code, § 1543, on account of unlawful sales thereof made by his clerk, as the unlawful intent is an essential ingredient of the crime. State v. Hayes, 67 Iowa, 27.

And a duly registered pharmacist having a merchant's license, but no license as a dramshop keeper, who kept a drug store, is not criminally liable for a sale of intoxicating liquor to a person, made in his store, in the absence of evidence that such person was in charge of the store, or that he was in the general, or even temporary, employment of the accused, where the evidence was consistent with the conclusion that he may have done the act as an unauthorized or officious person. State v. Quinn, 40 Mo. App. 573.

And refusal to instruct, in a prosecution against two persons for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, that a permit to one would be a protection to the other if he were acting as agent or employee, is not error where, on the separate trial of the latter, he is shown to have sold liquor at the time and place named, but there is nothing to show that he was acting as such agent or employee. State v. Sterns, 28 Kan. 154.

In State v. Sterns, 28 Kan. 154, Stephens v. State, 14 Ohio, 386, supra, III. b. 1, was criticised, the court saying that it did not commend itself to its judgment.

But a principal is criminally liable for a sale of intoxicating liquor by an agent under a statute forbidding a person from selling by himself, 41 L. R. A.

clerk, servant, or agent, the proprietor being liable thereunder by whomsoever liquor was sold. State v. Stewart, 31 Me. 515; Noecker v. People, 91 Ill. 494; State v. McConnell, 90 Iowa, 197; Riley v. State, 43 Miss. 397.

Though the sale was made without his knowledge and against his express orders. Riley v. State, 43 Miss. 397.

And no matter what might have been his instructions to them; and evidence as to what instructions he gave his clerks in relation to such sales is not admissible in a prosecution therefor. Noecker v. People, 91 Ill. 494.

And under Ill. Rev. Stat. 1874, chap. 43, § 14, the owner of liquor is liable for illegal sales thereof made by his clerk, though made without his knowledge or authority, as that statute expressly declares that it shall not be necessary to show knowledge of the principal to convict for an act of the agent or servant. Mullinix v. Peoule, 70 Ill. 211.

So, the rule has been laid down that the unlawful selling of intoxicating liquor by a servant is a selling by the master. United States v. Voss, 1 Cranch, C. C. 101; United States v. Birch, 1 Cranch, C. C. 571.

And that an employer is criminally liable for sales of intoxicating liquors made by his clerk, agent, or employee in the ordinary line of his duty as such, the same as if made by him in person. State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256; Thompson v. State, 5 Humph. 138.

Within this rule, it is not necessary to prove that a sale of liquor made by a slave in his master's place of business was done by the actual command of the master, or whether he took the profits, to render him criminally liable therefor. Com. v. Major, 6 Dana, 293.

And a druggist is liable criminally for unauthorized sales of liquor by his clerk, if such sales were made by the clerk within the scope of the authority delegated to him by the druggist, or the authority which may fairly be presumed from the instructions of the druggist or the course of dealing by him with reference to such matters. United States v. White, 42 Fed. Rep. 138.

Thus, one who keeps liquors and employs clerks to deal them out in common with other commodities is as liable for such sales as he would be if they were made in person. To subject him to the penalty imposed by statute for the sale of intoxicating liquors it is not necessary that the sales should have been made in person, or in his presence, or by his express command. State v. Dow, 21 Vt. 484.

Where an agent is set to do the very thing which, and which only, the principal's business contemplates, namely, the dispensing of liquors to purchasers, the principal is chargeable with the agent's violation of the legal restrictions on that business. Carrull v. State, 63 Md. 551.

And whether an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor was made by the defendant in person, or by a clerk, servant, or agent, need not be alleged or proved on a prosecution therefor. State v. Brown, 31 Me. 520.

So, though a person whose agent sells liquor in the county where said offense was committed. . . . Id. § 2. The trial court refused to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, and also refused to instruct the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for at least the minimum sum mentioned in the law, and charged the jury, among other things, to the effect that it was undisputed that one of the waiters refused to serve the plaintiff; that such action of the waiter was inexcusable under the circumstances, and in violation of the law, and, if the evidence satisfied them that such act of the waiter was ratified by the defendants, then the defendants would be liable to the plaintiff for damages. And the trial court further charged the jury that "if you find, however, that the defendants did not ratify such action of their servant, and that the defendants did what they could reasonably be expected to do under the circumstances to enforce their orders to such servant, or, by not so doing, did not intend to, and did not, aid their waiter in carrying out his said purpose, then your verdict will be for the defendants." These portions of the charge, as well as others, are based upon the theory that the defendants to one intending to sell it in violation of law, with knowledge of such intent, had no actual personal intent to enable the purchaser to violate the law, yet the law will conclusively presume that the agent had communicated his knowledge to the principal, and will hold them liable for the consequences. Fishel v. Bennett, 56 Conn. 40.

Where a statute prohibits the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors by sample, by soliciting or procuring orders therefor in any town where such liquors may not lawfully be sold, and provides that no action shall be maintained for the price of liquors sold with intent to enable any person to violate a law of the state relating to a sale of intoxicating liquors, one who sends an agent into the state with authority to take orders for liquors, and to ascertain in what towns the same may or may not be lawfully sold, who takes an order for a bill of liquors, knowing that the person giving it intends to sell the same in violation of the law, is chargeable with the knowledge of his agent, and the transaction is a sale with intent to enable the purchaser to violate the law, rendering the vendor criminally liable. Fishel v. Bennett, 56 Conn. 40.

And the fact that the agent had no authority to make the sale does not affect the criminal liability of the principal. Fishel v. Bennett, 56 Conn. 40.

Selling without license.

1. By partners.

A license to retail spirituous liquors by small measure under the North Carolina statute, name of the firm, or in the name of each partners, will, during the year, protect one of the partners against the penalty for retailing spirituous liquors, although the other partner may have retired from the firm. State v. Gerhardt, 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 178.

But a permit to sell intoxicating liquors, preliminary to which it is required that the applicant shall publish notice of his intention to apply therefor and to prove citizenship, and that he has not violated the liquor law, is a special trust to the permit holder, and a person selling liquor is not protected by a permit granted to his partner. A permit for the sale of intoxicating liquors to a partnership should run in the name of the firm, or in the name of each partner. State v. McConnell, 90 Iowa, 197.

And under Miss. Rev. Code, 199, art. 9, which subjects to indictment any person selling intoxicating liquor without a license in less quantities than one gallon, and any person having any interest in the liquors thus sold, partners jointly indicted for such sales may be convicted and punished, though one of them was wholly ignorant of the illegal act, as each is responsible for the illegal acts of the other, whether he participated in them or not. Gathings v. State, 44 Miss. 848.

41 L. R. A.

Two or more persons may be jointly charged in the same indictment with the offense of selling spirituous liquors without a license. Com. v. Sloan, 4 Cush. 52.

And a joint fine may be assessed against two persons jointly indicted for carrying on the business of retailing spirituous liquors without a license, if they acted as a firm in carrying on the business, and a separate fine against each may be imposed where they acted individually. Lemons v. State, 50 Ala. 130.

And proprietors of a store doing business together, and present in the store daily, in which sales of intoxicating liquor were made without a license by small measure by a clerk, some of which occurred in their presence, are jointly liable for the penalties incurred. Hall v. McKechnie, 22 Barb. 244.

But while two persons may be jointly guilty, and jointly convicted, of the offense of retailing spirituous liquors without a license when jointly engaged in the business, the judgment must be several against each for the whole, as each must for himself and alone bear the penalty. People v. Walbaum, 1 Dak. 306. And see Stephens v. State, 14 Ohio, 286, supra, III. b. 1.

And a sale of liquor by one of two persons engaged as partners in keeping a recess and selling liquor without a license is the act of both, and may be given in evidence in an action against the other alone for the penalty imposed for such act. Smith v. Adrian, 1 Mich. 406.

But while a single action for a penalty may be sustained against several who join in selling liquors without a license, if several concur in the commission of the act for which a penalty is given, only one penalty can be recovered, either in one or in several actions. Ingersoll v. Skinner, 1 Denio, 540.

But error in charging that each defendant, in a prosecution against two persons jointly indicted as common sellers of intoxicating liquors, might be convicted under the same indictment for any sale made by him without reference to any joint participation or privity, when the charge should have been with reference to either defendant, is not prejudicial as against one of two defendants, who was convicted upon evidence competent for that purpose. Com. v. Cook, 12 Allen, 542.

Where a partner of a wholesale and retail licensed liquor dealer in one county visited another county, however, and there solicited orders, which orders were taken and filled by the firm, shipping the liquor in jugs which were delivered to an express agent in the former county for transportation to the purchasers in the latter county, and they received it in the latter county and paid express charges, subsequent to which the partner collected the price in the latter county, he cannot be indicted therein for selling spirituous liquors without license, as such sales were made in the former county, and were complete when the jugs of liquor were not liable in damages for such wrongful and unlawful acts of their servants, unless they either ratified the same, or aided or incited or encouraged their servants in such non-performance of duty. Such theory was in direct conflict with a well-settled rule of law constantly being applied by this and other courts, to the effect that "a master is liable for a wrong done by his servant, whether through negligence or the malice of the latter, in the course of an employment in which the servant is engaged to perform a duty which the master owes to the person injured." Craker v.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 86 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 89 Wis. 636, 43 Wis. 654, 24 Am. Rep. 487; Schaefer v. Osterbrink, 67 Wis. 495, 58 Am. Rep. 875; Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. 79 Wis. 573; Reinke v. Bentley, 90 Wis. 457. In such a case, where the wrongful act of the servant, though wilful, is strictly within the scope of his employment, it is unnecessary that the master should at the time sanction or know or subsequently ratify the unlawful act, in order to be held liable for mere compensatory damages. Ibid. See also Spaulding v. Chi- were delivered to the express agent for transportation. State v. Hughes, 23 W. Va. 743.

But a transaction by which a liquor dealer in New York, in response to an order from a customer in Vermont, sends liquor by express with instructions to the express company to deliver it to the person to whom it was addressed only on being paid for it, makes the express company agent of the seller, and passes title only upon the delivery, so as to render it a sale in Vermont, and subject to the Vermont prohibitory liquor laws. State v. O'Neill, 58 Vt. 140, 66 Am. Rep. 566.

2. By agent or servant.

The master, as well as the servant, may be indicted for a sale of intoxicating liquors by the servant in the grocery of the master, where the master had no license to make such sale. Schmidt v. State, 14 Mo. 137.

And retailing intoxicating liquors in a man's kitchen by his servant and in his presence with his consent and approbation may be deemed his own act, as well as the act of the servant, within the meaning of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor without a license. Forrester v. State, 63 Ga. 349.

So, a husband whose wife in his presence retails spirituous liquors without a license, who receives the money therefor, is criminally liable for such act. Gueing v. State, 1 McCord, L. 573.

And a husband who directed his wife, who aids behind the counter in a grocery store, neither of them having a license, to give liquor to certain men who came in, which she did, and accepted payment therefor, is criminally liable therefor, though she was the exclusive owner of the store, and he was in no wise connected with it, and had an independent employment. Mulvey v. State, 43 Ala. 316, 94 Am. Dec. 684.

And a husband is liable for the sale of spirituous liquors without a license in a store owned by his wife, by a clerk in the store, if he was present at the time, controlling and managing it. Faircloth v. State, 73 Ga. 423.

Under the general rule, however, a husband is not criminally liable for selling spirituous liquors without a license, where the sale was made by his wife during his absence without authority from him. Peunybaker v. State, 2 Blackf. 484; State v. Baker, 71 Mo. 475.

To authorize the conviction of a husband for the illegal act of his wife in selling spirituous liquors in his store in his absence without a license, the jury must be satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that her illegal act was done by his authority; that it was done by her as his clerk or agent without his knowledge is not enough. Selber. v. State, 40 Ala. 60.

And an instruction in a prosecution for selling liquor without a license, authorizing the conviction of the accused upon a sale made by another regardless of any legal relationship between them which would make one responsible for the acts of the other, is erroneous. State v. Kolb, 39 Mo. App. 45.

To warrant a conviction on an indictment for retailing spirituous liquors without a license, the proof must show that the accused made the sale in person or authorized such sale. State v. Borgman, 2 Nott & M'C. 34.

And where an employer in good faith instructs his clerk to sell intoxicating liquors for medical purposes only, and such clerk sells liquor in his absence in violation of his instructions, he is not criminally responsible therefor on a prosecution for selling without a license. State v. McGrath, 73 Mo. 181.

And a grocer and dry-goods merchant, who did not keep intoxicating liquors for sale, and who had expressly charged his clerks not to sell any intoxicating liquors, is not criminally liable for the act of his clerk in selling drinks of whisky in his absence and without his knowledge, when such act upon the part of the clerk was not in the general line of the duties of his employment. Grosch v. Centralia, 6 Ill. App. 107.

So, evidence that one who had a merchant's license, and was a dealer in drugs and medicines, forbade his brother and wife, whom he left in charge of his store, to sell liquor in less quantities than one gallon except for medicinal purposes, is admissible in a prosecution against him for selling liquor without a license as a dramshop keeper, as the act of the wife in selling liquor was her independent act for which he was not responsible. State v. Baker, 71 Mo. 475.

And trustees and members of the managing committee of a club are not criminally liable under the license act for selling liquor without a proper license, to persons not members of the club, where the liquor was sold in the club rooms by the steward, who, in selling it, acted contrary to the orders of the committee, and without their knowledge or assent, though the moneys received by him therefor were paid by him to the account of the club. Newman v. Jones, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 132, 55 L. J. M. C. N. S. 113, 55 L. T. N. S. 327, 50 J. P. 373.

In the above case, Atty. Gen. v. Siddon, 1 Crompt. & J. 220, 1 Tyrw. 41, supra, II. d, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the judgment proceeded upon the ground that whatever a servant does in the course of the employment with which he is intrusted and as part of it is the master's act, while in the present case it was shown that the appellants did not authorize the act of the steward.

And it was said that all that was decided by Mullins v. Collins, L. R. 9 Q. B. 292, 43 L. J. M. C. N. S. 67, 29 L. T. N. S. 838, 22 Week. Rep. 207, infra, III. 7, was that a licensed victualler is liable for the act of his servant withcago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Wis. 582; Evans v. Davidson, 53 Md. 245, 36 Am. Rep. 400; Burmah Trading Corp. v. Mirza Mahomed Ally Sherazee, 81 Moak, Eng. Rep. 782; Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 84. This is upon the theory that what one does by his servant acting within the scope of his employment and for his benefit is the same, in legal effect, as though done by himself. But, in order to recover exemplary damages, it is otherwise, as indicted in several of the cases cited, especially Bass v. Chicago in the scope of his employment, and that it has no authority whatever for the liability of the master for the act of his servant outside the authority given; and Cundy v. LeCocq, L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 207, 53 L. J. M. C. N. S. 125, 51 L. T. N. S. 285, 48 J. P. 590, 32 Week. Rep. 769, infra, III. e, was distinguished, the court saying that in that case neither master nor servant knew that the constable furnished with liquor was on duty, and it does not therefore establish liability where the servant acts in direct contravention of the orders given; and Davies v. Harvey, L. R. 9 Q. B. 483, 43 L. J. M. C. N. S. 121, 30 L. T. N. S. 629, 22 Week. Rep. 733, supra, II. k, was distinguished upon the ground that that case was decided upon the ground that, although the defendant did not know for what purpose the goods were required, yet that his partner did, and the goods were supplied by the partner, within the scope of the partnership authority for the profit of both partners, while in the present case the articles were manifestly beyond and without the scope of the authority given.

Upon the other hand, it has been held that a druggist having spirituous liquors in his store, whose clerk makes a sale thereof in violation of the law requiring a license for the sale of such liquors, is criminally responsible therefor, and may be fined pursuant to the statute, though it was made without his knowledge and contrary to his instructions. State v. Denoon, 81 W. Va. 122.

Within this rule a man who keeps a tobacco and refreshment shop, having no license, is criminally liable for the act of his wife in selling bottles of ale to his customers, though there is no evidence that he knew anything of her so doing. Ailen v. Laumb, 57 J. P. 377.

And a brewer cannot establish an agency for the sale of beer of his own manufacture in a town away from his place of business, and sell to such persons as desire to purchase through such agency, without obtaining a license for carrying on such business, from the town, city, or village authorities in which the sales are made. Pelts v. State, 68 Wis. 538.

And evidence that liquor was ordered from one town by a resident of another, and the quantity ordered was delivered to the person ordering it in the latter town, and was there paid for by him, taking a receipt for the amount from the man who delivered it, is sufficient evidence of a sale in the latter town to bring it within the liquor law applicable thereto. Com. v. Shurn, 145 Mass. 150.

To make a delivery in an unlicensed town of liquors sold in another town a sale in the town where delivered, such delivery need not be made by the vendor himself, a delivery by an authorized agent being the same as a delivery by the principal himself. State v. Basserman, 54 Conn. 68.

And a transaction by which liquor was agreed to be sold in a county where such sale was not unlawful, to a person residing in another county in which it was unlawful, the agreed price for which was then paid, but the liquor contracted for was not separated from the general stock of the vendor, after which it was so separated and sent by an employee of the vendor to the purchaser and delivered by such employee to him in his barroom in the latter county, is a sale in the latter county rendering the vendor criminally liable therefor. Dooster v. State, 93 Ga. 43.

And while sales of intoxicating liquors effected by drummers from another state are usually, if not always, consummated by a delivery at the vendor's place of business to a common carrier for all police purposes, it is competent for the legislature to say that the acts done by the drummer shall of themselves constitute a sale, and therefore an offense. State v. Ascher, 54 Conn. 299.

d. Selling to minors.

1. By partners.

A partner in a saloon or dramshop is criminally liable for an illegal sale of liquor to a minor by his copartner or agent, under act March 8, 1879, declaring that persons interested in a sale of ardent spirits will be criminally responsible for illegal sales thereof. Waller v. State, 38 Ark. 656; Robinson v. State, 33 Ark. 641.

Though he was absent at the time. Robinson v. State, 38 Ark. 641.

And when both members of a firm of liquor dealers are present when intoxicating liquor is sold to a minor in their place of business an indictment will lie against both or either of them. State v. Scoggins, 107 N. C. 959, 10 L. R. A. 542.

So, a saloon or dramshop keeper is liable for an illegal sale of liquor by his copartner to a minor, under Ark. act March 8, 1879, in effect declaring that persons interested in a sale of ardent spirits, etc., shall be criminally responsible for illegal or forbidden sales, whether made by themselves or their partners or employees, though he was absent at the time of the sale, and had no knowledge of it. Robinson v. State, 38 Ark. 641; Cloud v. State, 38 Ark. 151; Edgar v. State, 45 Ark. 356.

Though the owner of liquor could not be punished criminally for an unauthorized sale thereof to a minor by his clerk or partner in his absence and without his authority or consent, under the previous act, Gault's Ark. Dig. § 1609, imposing a penalty upon any person who shall sell liquor to a minor without the written consent of his parent or guardian. Cloud v. State, 38 Ark. 151.

2. By agents or servants.

The proprietor of a saloon where beer was sold to minors by a bartender is responsible therefor, where he was present at the time and made no effort to prevent the sale, though he did not see them buy it, and had given his bartender no authority to sell beer to minors. State, Higgins, v. Beloit, 74 Wis. 287.

And the exclusion of evidence of general instructions from a liquor dealer to his clerk, in a prosecution against the liquor dealer for selling liquor to a minor, is not error where the sale in question was made with his assent. State v. Mueller, 38 Minn. 497.

And a charge in an indictment that a liquor dealer sold or furnished a minor with liquor, instead of charging that he permitted it to be done, is not reversible error where there is sufficient evidence to show that he was present when the liquor was sold by his clerk, that being the same as if he had done it himself. Johnson v. State, 83 Ga. 553.

& N. W. R. Co. 39 Wis. 636, 43 Wis. 654, 24 Am. Rep. 437. On the first appeal in that case a verdict for $4,500 was held to be excessive, because the charge of the court precluded exemplary damages. On the second appeal the aggregate findings of the jury were for the

The rule has been laid down, however, that the proprietor of a saloon is not guilty of a violation of the act relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, where his bartender in charge of the saloon sells liquor to a minor in his absence and without his knowledge. Hanson v. State, 43 Ind. 550; Thompson v. State, 45 Ind. 495; Lauer v. State, 24 Ind. 131; Com. v. Rooks, 150 Mass. 59.

And that a druggist, one of whose clerks made a sale of intoxicating liquors to a minor, is not criminally responsible therefor where he was not present and had instructed all his clerks not to make sales to minors. Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357.

And that the statutory guilt of a clerk in a liquor store who sells liquor to a minor, reasonably and honestly believing him to be an adult, and that the sale might lawfully be made, should not be imputed to his employer. Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357.

Within this rule, a person under a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor may rebut the presumption of prima facie agency arising from evidence for the state that the sale was made by the agent of the accused in charge of his establishment, by showing that the sale was in fact made without his authority and against his direction. Anderson v. State, 22 Ohio St. 305.

And a liquor dealer is not answerable criminally, in a prosecution under the Connecticut statute of 1822, for the act of his servant in selling to a student of Yale college on credit, without his knowledge or consent and against his express directions, though he afterwards assented to such act. Morse v. State, 6 Conn. 9.

And the provision of § 14, Mich. Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, making it unlawful for any person by himself or his clerk or agent to permit any student, minor, etc., to play at cards, dice, billiards, or any game of chance, does not apply to a prosecution for permitting a minor to remain in a saloon unaccompanied by his father or his guardian, under § 15 of that act, so as to hold the proprietors responsible for the act of the clerk or agent in admitting minors in their absence and without their consent. People v. Hughes, 86 Mich. 180.

And orders given by a liquor dealer to his employees in good faith for the purpose of having them obeyed, forbidding sales to minors, constitute a good defense in a prosecution for such a sale made by his employees. Com. v. Newhard, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 215.

But direction by a liquor dealer to his agent, forbidding a sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, to relieve him from criminal responsibility for the acts of his agent, must be given in good faith, no matter how notorious or formal they may have been. Anderson v. State, 22 Ohio St. 305.

And a conviction against a liquor dealer for selling liquor to minors will not be disturbed on the ground that his wife was behind the bar and dealt out the drinks to the boys in his absence and contrary to his orders, where it appears that the boys were known to them both, and had frequented the saloon and bagatelle room, and were permitted to play bagatelle for drinks, and there was evidence that they had been furnished with liquor in his presence. Com. v. Newhard, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 215.

41 L. R. A.

same amount, but the judgment thereon was affirmed, because the jury found that the wrongful act of the brakeman had been ratified by the company, and the charge permitted punitive damages by reason of such ratification.

But a requirement by a dealer in intoxicating liquor that his clerk shall determine the question of the minority of a customer simply from his appearance cannot be affirmed, as a matter of law, to be an unreasonable test, or to indicate bad faith or negligence, though it might be proper for the consideration of the jury. Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357.

And the fact that the clerk of a druggist, who makes a sale of intoxicating liquors to a minor contrary to his instructions, is expected to determine the question of minority simply from the appearance of the customer, and makes a mistake in so doing, does not render the druggist criminally liable for such selling. Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357.

It is the duty of the court, in a prosecution against a liquor dealer for a sale of intoxicating liquor by his employees to minors, to instruct the jury as to the effect of alleged orders not to make such sales if given in good faith, leaving to them the question as to the bona fides of the orders. Com. v. Newhard, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 215.

The fact of agency to charge a principal with the act of his alleged agent in selling liquor to a minor, however, must be determined by the real understanding between the principal and agent. Anderson v. State, 22 Ohio St. 305.

And a licensed hotel owner may be convicted for unlawful sales of liquor to minors, made in his temporary absence by his bartender, or by his wife, whom he had put especially in charge of the bar, although he had no knowledge of the particular sales, unless such unlawful sales were prohibited by him. Com. v. Newhardt, 5 Northampton Co. Rep. 177.

The fact that a liquor dealer, accused of unlawfully selling liquor to a minor, did not sell it himself, but that it was sold by his clerk, does not make any difference in his criminal responsibility, under a statute providing that no person, by himself or another, shall sell or cause to be sold or furnished, or permit any other person or persons in his employ to sell or furnish, spirituous or intoxicating or malt liquors of any kind to minors without written authority from their parents or guardians. Snider v. State, 81 Ga. 753.

And the proprietor of a saloon is responsible for a sale of intoxicating liquor therein to a minor, under Miss. Code 1898, § 1112, imposing a penalty upon one who sells intoxicating liquor to a minor, or who is interested in such sale, whether it was made by himself or his clerk or agent. Fahey v. State, 62 Miss. 432.

But the absence of the proprietor of a saloon when his bartender sold liquor to a minor, and the fact that he had given directions to him to refuse to make such sales, do not excuse him from liability under a statute making it a misdemeanor to be interested in a sale of liquor to a minor without the written consent or order of the parents or guardian, and cannot aid him further than to commend a mitigation of the punishment the law imposes. Mogler v. State, 47 Ark. 109.

So, under Ga. Code, § 4540a, providing that no person or persons, by himself or another, shall sell or cause to be sold, or furnish or permit any other person or persons in his, her, or their employ to sell or furnish any minor or minors spirituous or intoxicating or malt liq-

The act of the legislature in question is entitled "An Act to Protect All Citizens in Their Civil and Legal Rights." It may be, as argued by counsel for the defendants, that the 1st section of this act adds nothing to the rights and privileges which are secure to all by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U. S. Const. Amend. art. 14, § 1. Assuming that the act is no broader than the constitutional provisions quoted, yet it prohibits the persons therein mentioned from doing what the state is thus prohibited from doing, and makes the offender "liable to the person aggrieved thereby, in a sum not less than $5 as damages, with costs," to be recovered as there-in prescribed. The minimum damages thus prescribed are to be regarded as compensatory damages, as distinguished from exemplary or punitive damages. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to anything more than compensatory damages must necessarily depend upon the evidence to be given upon the trial, and the principles of law applicable.

The judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

uors of any kind without first obtaining written authority from the parents or guardian of such minors, it matters not whether the proprietor sells or furnishes the liquor directly by himself or it is furnished by another in his employment, or whether he was present or not, or knew of the fact, or consented to it. Loeb v. State, 75 Ga. 258; Johnson v. State, 83 Ga. 553; Boatright v. State, 77 Ga. 717.

But a statement that his offense is complete whenever it is shown that intoxicating drink was sold or furnished to a minor by one acting in his place of business in any capacity whatever, is too broad. Johnson v. State, 83 Ga. 553.

Where liquor is sold or furnished to a minor by a person other than the proprietor of a saloon or drinking place, and not by his order or direction, which he permits to be done, however, it is a different offense under the Code from the offense of personally selling or furnishing such minor with liquor. It was his duty to prevent it from being done, and his failing to do so makes him liable as permitting it to be done, and he should be so charged in the indictment. Johnson v. State, 83 Ga. 553.

The Missouri statute concerning dramshops, providing for a forfeiture by the seller of $50 to the parent, master, or guardian of any minor to whom liquors are sold without permission, is made applicable by statute to sales by a clerk or agent, as well as sales by the proprietor himself. Edwards v. Brown, 67 Mo. 377.

And a sale of intoxicating liquor by a barkeeper to a minor without the written permission of the minor's parents makes a case against the saloon keeper, under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 5454, providing that every dramshop or wine and beer house keeper who shall sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of, or suffer the same to be done, about his premises any intoxicating liquor to any minor without the written permission of the parents, master, or guardian of such minor, shall forfeit and pay to such parent, master, or guardian for every offense the sum of $50, regardless of any directions or instructions of the accused to his barkeeper. State v. McGinnis, 38 Mo. App. 15.

In State v. McGinnis, 38 Mo. App. 15, supra, State v. Baker, 71 Mo. 475, supra, III. c. 2, was distinguished upon the ground that the legislature had provided a different rule for this class of offenses.

The maxim of respondet superior applies in an action by a parent or guardian to recover the penalty provided for by Mo. Laws 1885, p. 160, for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, so that proof of sale by the defendant's barkeeper establishes a cause of action therefor 41 L. R. A.

against defendant. Draper v. Fitzgerald, 30 Mo. App. 518.

An action for the recovery of a penalty for the sale of intoxicating liquors to a minor is a civil action in which the defendant is responsible for the tortious acts of his barkeeper, and he cannot defend on the ground that the latter disobeyed his orders. Draper v. Fitzgerald, 30 Mo. App. 518.

And an action upon a dramshop bond for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor is neither criminal nor a quasi-criminal action, but strictly a civil statutory action, for the recovery of damages for a wrong done for which damages are liquidated by statute, in which the master is answerable for the torts of his servant while acting within the general scope of his employment, and the rejection of evidence therein that the sale was made by a barkeeper against the positive instructions and without the knowledge of the proprietor is not error. Greene County, Sims v. Wilhite, 29 Mo. App. 450.

In Greene County, Sims v. Wilhite, 29 Mo. App. 450, supra, Casey v. State, 6 Mo. 646, and Kirkwood v. Antenreith, 11 Mo. App. 515, 21 Mo. App. 73, infra, III. h. 8, were distinguished upon the ground that the rule had been altered. So, the doctrine that an agent's knowledge is the knowledge of his principal applies, on a sale of intoxicating liquor to a minor by a clerk, to the statutory presumption of knowledge as to the age of the purchaser. State v. Kittelle, 110 N. C. 500, 15 L. R. A. 694.

And it has been held that the principal is held bound for the act of his agent in selling liquor to a minor in violation of law while pursuing his ordinary business as such agent, upon the ground that the intention is not an essential element of the offense. Carroll v. State, 63 Md. 551.

Within this rule when an agency for the transaction of the business of selling liquors generally is established or admitted, and in the conduct of that business a prohibited sale is made by the agent to a minor, the principal cannot shield himself from liability to a fine imposed for such offense on the ground that his agent violated his general instructions, and did not inquire, or was deceived by the purchaser, as to his age. Carroll v. State, 63 Md. 551.

And the proprietor of a barroom is criminally liable for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to a minor by his clerk, although it is made in his absence without his knowledge and in violation of his instructions. State v. Kittelle, 110 N. C. 500, 15 L. R. A. 694.

In State v. Kittelle, 110 N. C. 500, 15 L. R. A. 694, supra, State v. Shortell, 93 Mo. 123, infra.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

W. T. HALL

NORFOLK & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, Pff. in Err.

(..... W. Va.)

- *1. A penal statute is one which imposes a forfeiture or penalty for transgression of its provisions, or for doing a thing prohibited.
2. Penal statutes must be construed strictly.
3. A penalty is in the nature of punishment for the nonperformance of an act, or for the performance of an unlawful act, and involves the idea of punishment, whether enforced with a civil or criminal action or procedure.

*Headnotes by BRANNON, J.

III. e, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the statute failed expressly to prohibit sales made through another, and the decision was put on that ground; and State v. Hayes, 67 Iowa, 27, supra, III. b, 2, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the defendant was discharged for want of proof to support an averment of the indictment drawn under another clause of the act, to the effect that the proprietor kept the spirits with an unlawful intent; and State v. Privett, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 100, supra, II. l, was criticised and explained, the court saying that the charge in that case was not brought up for review, though the court took occasion to say that it was as favorable to the accused as it could have been, but intimated, if the correctness of the charge had been before the court the judgment would have been reversed.

e. Selling to habitual drunkards.

A liquor dealer who knows that his clerks are selling to improper persons, or who in any manner assents to or permits illegal sales of liquors, is as guilty as though such sales were made by himself directly. Zeigler v. Com. (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 407.

But a single unlawful sale made by a clerk in the place of business of his employer, who carried on a licensed liquor business, to an habitual drunkard in the absence of the proprietor, is not alone sufficient to raise a presumption that the clerk was authorized by him to make it. State v. Mahoney, 23 Minn. 181.

And a saloon keeper is not criminally liable for the sale of liquor by his barkeeper to one whom he knew to be in the habit of becoming intoxicated, made in his absence and without his knowledge or consent, and against his express direction. O'Leary v. State, 44 Ind. 91; Hipp v. State, 5 Blackf. 149, 33 Am. Dec. 463; People v. Parks, 40 Mich. 353.

And evidence is admissible, in a prosecution against a liquor dealer for selling spirituous liquors to a common drunkard in which such a sale by his clerks is claimed, that the liquor dealer had given his clerks specific directions to sell no liquor to common drunkards. Barnes v. State, 19 Conn. 398.

Upon the other hand, it is held that guilty knowledge that one is acting in violation of law is not essential to the offense of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, and one who has a license is bound at his own peril to keep within the terms of it, whether he conducts his business personally or by servants. Com. v. Uhrig, 138 Mass. 492.

Within this rule a liquor dealer is criminally
41 L. R. A.

4. A railroad company is not liable for the penalty of $500 for overcharge of freight or passenger rates under clause 5, chap. 54, p. 559, Code 1891, for the mere charge of it by a conductor, unless the company authorized or approved the act.

(November 20, 1897.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Mercer County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the statutory penalty for charging more than a prescribed rate of fare on a railroad train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. W. Reynolds and Johnston & Hale, for plaintiff in error:

liable for sales made by his clerk or agent in charge of his saloon, under a prohibition against selling any intoxicating liquor, to any person in the habit of becoming intoxicated, the same as though the sales were made by himself, though made in violation of the instructions, where such clerk was employed to determine who among those applying to purchase was in such habit, his act not consisting in what was beyond the scope of his agency, but in doing improperly what was within it. Dudley v. Sautbline, 49 Iowa, 650, 31 Am. Rep. 165; Com. v. Uhrig, 138 Mass. 492; Police Com'rs. v. Cartman [1896] 1 Q. B. 655, 65 L. J. M. C. N. S. 113; Cundy v. Le Cocq, L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 207, 53 L. J. M. C. N. S. 125, 51 L. T. N. S. 285, 32 Week. Rep. 769, 48 J. P. 590.

In Dudley v. Sautbline, 49 Iowa, 650, 31 Am. Rep. 165, supra, Pennybaker v. State, 2 Blackf. 484, supra, III. c, 2, was distinguished, upon the ground that in that case the wife acted entirely outside of her duty, as she was not employed to sell liquor at all; and it was said that it was doubted whether the case of Hipp v. State, 5 Blackf. 149, 33 Am. Dec. 463, supra, I. is supported by the authority on which it is based.

So, in Zeigler v. Com. (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 407, which was a prosecution for wilfully furnishing liquor to persons of known intemperate habits, in which it was alleged that the liquor was furnished by a clerk without authority, it was held that since there are no accessories in misdemeanors, but all implicated are principals, the question of agency has nothing to do with the case.

And, previous to the enactment of III. Rev. Stat. 1874, chap. 43, § 14, expressly declaring that it shall not be necessary to show knowledge of the principal to convict for an act of the agent or servant, the principal was liable for the acts of his agent and servant although he had no knowledge, as, where he employed a clerk to sell liquor, in doing so it was his duty to see to it that the clerk was prudent and discreet, and would observe the requirements of the statute, but if he in good faith were to employ a clerk believing him to have prudence and discretion, and were to forbid his selling liquors to persons prohibited, and the clerk were to disregard such orders, a different question would arise. Mullinix v. People, 76 Ill. 211.

The Missouri statute providing that any dramshop keeper, druggist, or merchant selling or giving away or otherwise disposing of any intoxicating liquor to any habitual drunkard after notice not to do so shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, however, is not unconstitutional as authorizing the conviction of a dram-

Clause 5 refers only to "any railroad corporation" without mentioning officers and agents. This is significant of the intention of the legislature that the corporation should be found guilty of the violation of law before either of these penalties could be imposed, and that its trial and conviction should be conducted and secured under the same rules of evidence that govern in other trials of corporations for a criminal offense.

State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 W. Va. 362, 36 Am. Rep. 808.

The conductor had no right to fix and charge passenger tariffs. His duty was to collect the tariffs which had been fixed and charged by the company as per its schedule of rates. He acted in direct violation of the rules of the defendant company. How, in common justice and reason, can the defendant be bound by his act under such circumstances?

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 358; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 270; 5 Wait, Act. & Def. pp. 156-158; Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 712; Murray v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 68 Tex. 407, 51 Am. Rep. 650; Whitehead v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 87 N. C. 255; Hines v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 95 N. C. 484; Allen v. Stevens, 29 N. J. L. 509; Brooks shop keeper for the acts of his agent done in violation of his direction and without his consent, as it does not authorize such conviction. State v. Shortell, 38 Mo. 123.

f. Selling on Sunday.

To warrant the conviction of a licensed tavern keeper for selling liquors on Sunday, it is not sufficient to prove merely that liquor was sold in his house on Sunday; it must be shown that he did the act personally, or that it was done by his direction or with his consent. People v. Utter, 44 Barb. 170; State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

The presumption of innocence of the accused in a prosecution against a licensed tavern keeper for selling liquor on Sunday is not overcome by merely showing that the sale was made on his premises by his bartender, in the absence of evidence to show that he in some manner participated in, connived at, or assented to it. People v. Utter, 44 Barb. 170.

And the proprietor of a liquor store is not criminally liable for a sale made by a porter in his store on Sunday, whose duty it was to do menial work therein, where the liquor was not sold in his presence or with his consent, and he had forbidden his employees to sell liquor, as the sale was beyond the functions of the porter's employment. Minden v. Silverstein, 36 La. Ann. 916.

If liquor was sold in the saloon of the accused on Sunday by a man temporarily employed to scrub the floor, who had not been employed for the purpose of selling liquor at all, or authorized to do so, it might be regarded as an officious act for which the proprietor would not be liable. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

And the mere probability that the proprietor of a saloon authorized sales made therein by others on the Sabbath is not sufficient to authorize his conviction for violation of the statutes for the observance of the Lord's day. Com. v. Mason, 12 Allen, 185.

So, evidence that liquor was sold in the bar-room of the accused by his barkeeper will not sustain a prosecution for engaging in common labor on Sunday by unlawfully selling spirituous liquors, in the absence of evidence tending to show that the accused was present when the sales were made, or had any knowledge whatever of the selling when it was done. Wetzler v. State, 18 Ind. 35.

But a liquor dealer, to free himself from a criminal charge of keeping his place of business open upon the Sabbath where the door was kept open by his clerk, must show, not only that he did not consent, either expressly or impliedly, but also that he did not know, that it was kept open. Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 734.

A sale of liquor on Sunday, by a bartender or clerk, is the act of the proprietor for which he is criminally liable unless it was made by such bartender or clerk without his knowledge or consent and against his orders and directions. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

And an instruction in a prosecution for selling liquor on Sunday, claimed to be the act of a clerk, to find the accused not guilty if the clerk went to the saloon for the purpose of scrubbing out the place and not for the purpose of selling liquor, is erroneous, as the purpose would be immaterial if he opened the place so that customers could come in, and sold liquor to them. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

Where liquor is sold or given away on Sunday by persons employed by the dramshop keeper to sell liquor for him at that place, and the sale is in violation of the statute, a prima facie case is made out against the proprietor, which he must rebut by showing that in making the sale his agent acted either without authority or contrary to orders. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571; Martin v. State, 30 Neb. 421.

And a saloon keeper whose saloon is kept open on Sunday is criminally responsible therefor on a prosecution for violating a law requiring all saloons to be closed on Sunday, though the opening was the act of his bartender and without his knowledge or authority, as the intent in allowing it to be opened is immaterial. People v. Blake, 52 Mich. 566; State v. O'Connor, 58 Minn. 183.

The owner of a saloon is criminally liable under the Michigan statute for failure to keep his bar closed on Sunday where the clerk of the hotel was in the barroom on the day in question with a servant who was scrubbing it out when a person came in from the street and wanted whisky which he got, handing pay for it to the servant, though there was no evidence to show that the proprietor assented to the opening of the bar on that day, as the statute makes the crime to consist, not of the affirmative act of any person, but of the negative conduct of failing to keep the saloon closed. People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 270.

In People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 270, supra, People v. Parks, 49 Mich. 333, supra, III. e. was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the facts are not fully given in the report, and there was positive evidence to negative the intent of the accused that the criminal act should be committed.

g. Violation of other miscellaneous provisions.

The criminal intent involved in the commission of the crime of keeping and maintaining a tenement for the illegal sale and unlawful keeping of intoxicating liquors is the intent to keep the tenement knowing and suffering it to be a common nuisance, and it is immaterial who does the other unlawful acts which make it a common nuisance. The keeper's knowledge that it is a nuisance, unaccompanied by active efforts to prevent its being offensive to the law, is guilty knowledge which makes him punishable. Com. v. Walsh, 165 Mass. 62.

v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 56 Ark. 324; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 99 Ky. 182, 88 L. R. A. 182; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 715.

The statute under which this action is brought is highly penal in its nature, and should be strictly construed.

United States v. Harris, 78 Fed. Rep. 290.

Messrs. H. G. Woods and B. F. Keller for defendant in error.

Brannon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Hall brought an action of debt against the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company to recover the fixed penalty of $500 imposed upon railroads by clause 5, chap. 54, § 82c, Code 1891, for overcharge of rates, and recovered judgment, and the company sued out this writ of error. The first question of decisive importance is whether the act of the conductor in making the alleged overcharge binds the company in the absence of evidence that it was ordered or ratified by it. It is clear that the principal is liable for a tort done by its agent in an action for the recovery of damages to compensate one injured by such tort when committed in the course of the agent's employment, though the principal did not author-

And while a person charged with keeping and maintaining a tenement for the illegal keeping and sale of intoxicating liquors would not be responsible for sales made by his barkeeper without his knowledge, he in no way participating therein or approving or countenancing them, where nothing to the contrary appears, evidence of a sale by a servant in his master's shop, of his master's goods there kept for sale, would, if believed, warrant the jury in finding that the sale was authorized by the master, even though he was not on the premises at the time the sale was made. Com. v. Houle, 147 Mass. 380.

And while a servant of the proprietor of a saloon cannot be convicted on evidence of his sale of intoxicating liquor on the premises in the presence or under the actual personal supervision of his employer, if the servant, in carrying on the business of his employer, and in his absence, was authorized by him to make illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, and he made them, both may be found guilty of maintaining a tenement for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors. Com. v. Galligan, 144 Mass. 171.

But proprietors of a saloon are not liable, under Mich. Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 15, providing that it shall not be lawful for any person to allow a minor to visit and remain in any room where liquors are sold unless accompanied by his father or guardian, where they were not in the saloon in question at the time two minors were there, and had no knowledge of the presence of the minors at the time when they were there. People v. Hughes, 68 Mich. 180.

A prosecution for permitting a minor to remain in a place where liquors are sold under that statute is in the nature of a criminal prosecution, and the provision of the statute is not enlarged by § 24 thereof, providing that all persons engaged in liquor selling, etc., whether as owner or clerk, agent, servant, or employee, shall be equally liable with the principal for any violation of the provisions of the act, and any person or principal shall be liable for the acts of his clerk, servant, agent, or employee, as such provision applies only to liability in civil actions. People v. Hughes, 68 Mich. 180.

A person holding a license for the sale of spirituous or intoxicating liquor containing a condition that no such sale shall be made between the hours of 11 at night and 6 in the morning cannot be convicted for an unlawful sale in violation of such condition upon proof of a sale by one of his waiters, after 11 o'clock at night, in opposition to his will, and against his orders, and without his knowledge. Com. v. Wachendorf, 141 Mass. 270.

So, the proviso of the Massachusetts statute relating to the use and management of premises licensed for the sale of liquors, designed to procure an unobstructed view of the interior at all times by persons outside, is addressed to the licensee only, forbidding him to do or permit to be done the prohibited act, whether by himself in person or by his agent or servants left by him in charge of the business. Com. v. Kelley, 140 Mass. 441.

But the facts that a person selling intoxicating liquor was the clerk of the person prosecuted as a common seller of spirituous liquors, and that the defendant knew of the sale, are not sufficient to warrant his conviction, as he might have had knowledge and dissented or forbidden it: there must be evidence from which the jury could infer assent. Com. v. Putnam, 4 Gray, 16.

And the exemption from the prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquor, in Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 100, § 1, of sales of cider by the makers thereof, extends to sales by the makers through their servants or persons hired by them for the purposes, and protects the servants as well as the master. Com. v. Mahoney, 152 Mass. 403.

And the violation of the Texas bell punch law, providing that if any liquor dealer, his clerk, agent, or employee, who shall, on the sale, barter, or giving away of any vinous, spirituous, or malt liquors, fail to turn the crank of the proper register as therein required, the person so offending, for each failure shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined a designated sum, does not subject a liquor dealer to indictment and fine thereunder, where the evidence shows that his bartender made the sale in his absence, and there was no proof of the proprietor's complicity in the bartender's failure to register the drink. Galocchio v. State, 9 Tex. App. 387.

So, to warrant a conviction for a sale of liquor under the act of Congress of May 17, 1884, prohibiting such sales in Alaska except for designated purposes, it must be established that liquor was sold, and that it was intoxicating, and that the sale was made by the accused either in person or through his agents, servants, or employees acting for him, or under his direction, management, or control. United States v. Ash, 75 Fed. Rep. 651.

But an action to abate a liquor nuisance will not be defeated on the ground that the liquor was sold by the owner's clerk, and that he had discharged the clerk and thereby terminated the nuisance, where it appears that the proprietor not only knew of the illegal sales, but also that he appeared to have made some of them. Elwood v. Price, 75 Iowa, 223.

And a licensed victualler whose servant knowingly supplies liquor to a constable upon duty without the authority of his superior officer is criminally liable, under 35 & 36 Vict. chap. 94, § 16, subd. 2, though he had no knowledge of the act of his servant. Mullins v. Collins, L. R. 9 Q. B. 292, 43 L. J. M. C. N. S. 67, 29 L. T. N. S. 838, 22 Week. Rep. 297.

ize, participate in, or ratify the act, and though it was done without his authority, and even against his orders. This liability is based, not on the idea of the agent's authority, but on public policy. One without fault is hurt by another's agent in the course of the principal's business, and that principal must make reparation. The test is whether the act was done in the course of the performance of the principal's business, not whether the agent had authority to do the act. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1151; 1 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 213, 214; Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 606; Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. 35 W. Va. 588, 592, 14 L. R. A. 798.

b. Evidence of.

1. Presumption and burden of proof.

The rule in Massachusetts, and perhaps in some of the other states, is that while a jury might be warranted in inferring that a sale of intoxicating liquors made by a servant in his master's shop in the regular course of his master's business was authorized by the master, the court cannot rule that there is a presumption of fact that it was so. Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 464, 56 Am. Rep. 707; Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289; Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466.

Nor is there a presumption of law either way. Com. v. Houle, 147 Mass. 380.

In Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 464, 56 Am. Rep. 707, supra, it was said that Com. v. Holmes, 119 Mass. 195, infra, III. h. 3, went no further than to decide that the evidence that the defendant's son and clerk sold intoxicating liquors in a public house kept by the defendant, was evidence of a sale by the defendant sufficient to be submitted to a jury.

So, where, on a prosecution against the proprietor of a saloon for selling liquor in violation of the statutes for the observance of the Sabbath, it does not appear who the persons were that made the sales complained of, and no connection between the proprietor and such persons, is shown, an instruction that the jury have a right to consider whether it was probable that a mere stranger to the defendant would or could get access to and possession of the saloon in the daytime, and continue to do so for the length of time spoken of by the witness, is error, as the burden rests with the government to establish the fact that the persons who made the sales were agents of the defendant. Com. v. Mason, 12 Allen, 185.

Where the act of a servant amounts to a crime, or is of a wilful and malicious character, the law prima facie presumes that it was not authorized before nor sanctioned afterwards by the principals, and the presumption continues until repelled by proof to the contrary. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reed, 80 Tex. 362.

And a person charged with selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, if the act of his servant, should be acquitted if the government fails to prove that the sale was within the scope of the servant's authority. Com. v. Books, 150 Mass. 50.

Upon the other hand, it has been held that it rests with the accused, in a proceeding for the recovery of a fine and the forfeiture of his license for selling intoxicating liquors on Sunday, to show that a sale made by his clerk was unauthorized, and was forbidden. State v. Heckler, 81 Mo. 417.

And the rule is nearly general that a sale by a servant or agent is prima facie evidence of a sale by the master or principal. See cases infra, III. h. 2.

It is different in cases of contract. The act must be within the authority there. It is also clear that while the principal is liable civilly for the acts of the agent, he is not liable criminally; he is liable for acts civil in their nature, not those criminal or penal in nature, unless done by his authority, or assent, or approval. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1161; Lewis's Case, 4 Leigh, 664. Such being the law, what is the cast of the act done by the conductor in this case, if it was done? If an overcharge in passenger or freight rates is made by a railroad company, the act is made a misdemeanor by clause 15a, Code, p. 565, with very severe punishment, and for the act of a sale by the master or principal. See cases infra, III. h. 2.

And in McCutcheon v. People, 69 Ill. 601, it was held that a principal is liable to the penalties imposed by law for an illegal sale of intoxicating liquor by his agent or servant in his place of business; that the agent having no license to sell to anyone, it is only lawful for him to do so under the authority of his principal; and that the presumption must be deemed conclusive that the agent acted within the scope of his authority in making the sale.

2. Admissibility.

The purchase of wines and liquors in the shop of one who had control thereof, and suffering the same to be drunk in such shop, are affirmative evidence that it was done with his permission. Kirkwood v. Autenreith, 11 Mo. App. 515.

And proof of sales of intoxicating liquor by a master is competent, in a prosecution against him for an illegal sale made by his clerk, for the purpose of showing that his servant was authorized to make such sale. State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 683.

And evidence of sales of liquor on the premises by other persons in the absence of the defendant, in a prosecution for keeping a tenement for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, is admissible without other evidence that they were agents of the proprietor except that tending to show that he kept the tenement. Com. v. Edds, 34 Gray, 406.

So, evidence in a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor alleged to have been made by the servant for the accused at his bar, that the accused was at the same time engaged in the business of selling liquors at that place, and that he had stated that he had sold and should continue to do so, is admissible as tending to show that he was authorized to make such sale. State v. Bonney, 39 N. H. 206.

And evidence of a conversation between the person apparently in control of a saloon at the time of an alleged sale on Sunday and the purchaser is admissible on the question whether the saloon was open, and the sale made, with the proprietor's consent, on a prosecution against the proprietor therefor, though it occurred in the absence of the proprietor. Pierce v. State, 109 Ind. 535.

And the testimony of a witness that he sometimes attended the store of the accused as his clerk or agent, and that he left the witness on the afternoon in question in the general charge of the store, and that he sometimes sold rum for him there, but did not recollect having sold brandy, and that there were rum and brandy on tap in the cellar, and that he sold a quart of brandy that afternoon, is competent to go to the jury in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor as tending to an indictment lies, and the fine goes to the state. For the very same act a penalty of $500 is given the party aggrieved, by clause 5, in addition to the fine to the state, and in addition to the right to recover the amount of excessive charge collected by the company, as this penalty is cumulative, and does not deprive the party of his civil action for money had and received in wrong. 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1564; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 924; Hutchinson, Car. § 756. Thus, for mere compensation the wronged party has his civil action for money had and received for his wrong, and also a right to demand the $500 penalty. They are in their nature different things. No one would say that upon an indictment for the misdemeanor the act would be treated otherwise than a criminal act. The very same act carries with it a penalty of $500 to the individual, not for compensation to him to redress his actual loss, but purely for punishment. In this case Hall was overcharged, if at all, only 88 cents on a ride of 4 miles, and of course the penalty is not for compensation but punishment. The act thus has two punitive penalties, one to the state, the other to the individual, for one and the same act which is a public wrong entailing two penalties. You cannot make two civil actions for compensating the party out of that act, but you can out show that the witness had authority to sell brandy for the accused. State v. Foster, 23 N. H. 348, 55 Am. Dec. 101.

So, evidence in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor to a certain minor, that the witness had seen him going into the defendant's saloon, and that on one occasion the defendant was sitting in the front window, and that as the boy went in he got down from the window and in a few minutes after the boy came out, is admissible, where the defendant denied that the boy was ever in the shop or permitted to be there, as tending to show that sales made by the bartender had been made with his knowledge and consent. Com. v. Rooks, 150 Mass. 59.

And evidence that liquors were kept on the premises of the accused for sale for medicinal purposes during the preceding month, and that his clerk during such time had made sales to other persons, is relevant to the issue on the prosecution of an indictment for sales of spirituous liquors made by the clerk. State v. Shaw, 56 N. H. 73.

Evidence as to the possession of whisky in the cellar of his store by the proprietor of a drug store is admissible in a prosecution against him for selling liquor without a license on Sunday, and as a druggist without a regular prescription, as a link which, if connected with other links, would constitute a chain of evidence justifying his conviction. Com. v. Johnston, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

And a sale of nerve tonic by a liquor dealer or his clerk under his authority and direction is relevant on a prosecution for unlawfully selling liquor, where there is evidence tending to show that the nerve tonic was rye whisky. Klinnebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232.

So, a record of the county court showing that a license had been granted to the accused to keep a dramshop at the place where liquor was sold to a minor is admissible in evidence in a prosecution therefor, in connection with other evidence, where the sale was made by a co-partner or agent, as tending to prove his ownership of the saloon and interest in the sale. Waller v. State, 38 Ark. 656.

And the receipt for payment for liquor delivered to a purchaser, purporting to be signed by an agent for the vendor, which the counsel for the vendor asks for in his presence on the trial of a prosecution against him for the unlawful sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors, insisting on his right to retain it, and which, when subsequently demanded by the prosecuting attorney, was not produced, affords some evidence that the transaction with the purchaser was a sale by the accused through his agent. Com. v. Shurn, 145 Mass. 150.

So, the fact that a husband and wife lived together, and that the house was his, there being no evidence that she carried on a separate trade, is competent to go to the jury in a prosecution against the husband for the sale of liquor.

execution against the husband for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to prove that she acted as his agent. Com. v. Coughlin, 14 Gray, 380.

And evidence in a prosecution for unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to sell that when the defendant was absent, while a woman was tending the bar a man took a bottle from the bar and put it in his basket, and the woman at the same time took some money from the bar, may be submitted to the jury, with other evidence that liquors were kept in the shop for sale, on the question as to whether the woman was there by the defendant's authority. Com. v. Fitzgerald, 14 Gray, 14.

So, the question as to the knowledge of the proprietor of a drug store of sales made therein on Sunday is a fact for which a witness may be properly asked in a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor on Sunday. Com. v. Johnston, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

And evidence as to who assumed to be the proprietor of, and to control, the premises where intoxicating liquors were obtained, is not objectionable in a prosecution for the illegal sale of such liquors as an opinion, but if it is to be regarded as an opinion, it is of such a character as may be stated by a person who witnessed the conduct and conversations of the parties upon the premises at the time. State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256.

So, evidence that a dealer in drugs and medicines, holding a merchant's license, forbade his wife and brother, whom he left in charge of his store, to sell liquor except for designated purposes, is admissible in a prosecution against him for selling liquor without a license as a dramshop keeper. State v. Baker, 71 Mo. 475.

And where, in a prosecution against a master for the sale of intoxicating liquors in his store by his servant, he denies the authority of the servant to sell intoxicating liquor, and testifies that he forbade his selling it, it is competent on cross-examination to ask him if he had spirituous intoxicating liquors in his shop, and if he had sold them. State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 688.

3. Sufficiency.

Proof, in an action for a penalty for selling intoxicating liquor without a license, that the defendants were proprietors of a store, doing business together, and present in the store daily, and that sales, by small measure, of spirituous liquors were made there by a clerk, some of which occurred in their presence, warrants the inference that they were made by their authority, and that they thereby incurred the penalty in like manner as if they had sold personally. Hall v. McKechnie, 22 Barb. 244.

And proof of sales of intoxicating liquor by of one act of public wrong make two penalties. The defendant has been held liable for the crime of its conductor, when it neither ordered it, nor ratified it, nor knew of it, but the act was against its published rates and in violation of its directions to the conductor to collect only lawful fares by the tariff rates furnished him. If he did that act, he did it by mistake or in violation of orders. I take it that the legislature did not intend to punish the corporation, if innocent, with such severe penalties. I can readily see that it is just and good policy to thus punish a railroad company for such wrong if done by its authority or with its approval, but we ought not to give that liberality of construction to the statute which imposes such injustice, because it is a highly penal statute, and its words do not make the company liable for unauthorized acts of agents, nor does reason or justice call for it, and penal statutes are to be strictly construed and applied only to cases plainly within them and their reasonable intent. Under this principle it must be shown that the company ordered or approved the act, as it was held that the company must have approved running cars on Sunday, or authorized it to make it liable for the penalty fixed for such act in State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 W. Va. 362, 389, 36 Am. Rep. 803. There the acts of its officers did not a clerk without a license makes a prima facie case against his employer, and if he wishes to escape he must rebut it by proof showing that the sale was made without his knowledge or authority. State v. Durkem, 23 Mo. App. 387; State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 688; State v. Reley, 75 Mo. 521.

And where, in a prosecution for selling liquor without a license, a prima facie case is made by proof of a sale of beer by the bartender, the burden rests with the proprietor to show that the bartender acted without his knowledge or consent. Kirkwood v. Autenreith, 11 Mo. App. 515.

So, sales of liquor at the bar of a steamer by a person apparently in charge thereof as clerk or agent will be deemed to be a sale by the owner thereof, for which he is criminally responsible, in the absence of any countervailing testimony. Fullwood v. State, 67 Miss. 554.

And the facts that a person was in possession of a shop, and that he was the owner of liquors sold therein, and that the sale was made by his servant, furnish evidence which, unexplained, is sufficient to authorize a jury to find him guilty of illegally selling intoxicating liquor. State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 288.

And proof that a saloon was fitted up as drinking shops usually are, and that the bartender drew beer from a spigot in a keg fitted in an ice-chest, and sold it over the counter, calling it sarsaparilla, makes a prima facie case of the owner's knowledge and consent thereto. Kirkwood v. Autenreith, 11 Mo. App. 515.

The facts that the accused was owner of the liquor sold, and that it was illegally sold by his servant, furnish strong evidence to authorize and require the jury to find him guilty of making such sale, and, unexplained, they would be sufficient to convict. Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 259, 43 Am. Dec. 432.

But see Massachusetts cases with reference to presumption and burden of proof, supra, III. b, 1.

So, proof that the sale of the intoxicating liquor in question was made at the defendant's saloon in which he transacted a retail liquor trade, by a person who was his servant in conducting that trade, in a prosecution for retailing intoxicating liquor without a license, sufficiently connects the accused with the commission of the offense. Molihan v. State, 30 Ind. 268.

And although an action brought by overseers of the poor against a person for selling liquors without a license is for the recovery of a penalty, it is a civil, and not a criminal, action, and for its purpose a sale by an agent or servant in the shop of his master is prima facie a sale by the principal or master. Amerman v. Kall, 34 Hun, 126.

And employment of a clerk or agent in a store may be inferred, for the purposes of a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, against the proprietor thereof from the relative situation of the parties and the nature of the employment, without proof of any express employment, either written or verbal. State v. Foster, 23 N. H. 348, 55 Am. Dec. 191.

So, evidence of a sale by a servant in violation of a license, made in his master's shop in the ordinary course of the master's business and from liquors owned by him, and there kept for sale, may be sufficient, in Massachusetts, to warrant a jury in inferring as a fact that the sale was made by the authority or with the consent of the master. Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289; Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466.

And evidence that the son of a keeper of a public house, who was clerk therein, sold intoxicating liquors to a person therein, is sufficient to be submitted to the jury, on the question as to whether the sale was made by the father, or his son as his agent, and will warrant a conviction. Com. v. Holmes, 119 Mass. 185.

So, evidence, in an action brought by overseers of the poor to recover penalties for selling intoxicating liquors without a license, tending to show that liquors were sold by a husband in a saloon which he carried on as agent for his wife, is prima facie evidence of a sale by her, and is sufficient to sustain a recovery. Amerman v. Kall, 34 Hun, 126.

And evidence that two persons entered the dramshop of the accused on Sunday from the back door without obstruction or objection, and purchased liquor therein from a man who had long been the bartender and in charge of such saloon, and to whom had been largely committed the management of his business, and that the liquor was drank at the counter, makes a very clear prima facie case against the defendant for selling intoxicating liquor on Sunday contrary to law. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

And where purchases of liquor have been made from the wife of the accused in a prosecution against the husband for maintaining a liquor nuisance, and the place where the sales were made was the tenement where he lived with his wife, the jury may disbelieve his evidence that he had not sold any intoxicating liquor or authorized anyone to sell for him; and in that case the fact that he and his wife lived together in his tenement is competent evidence to prove that she acted as his agent. Com. v. Hyland, 155 Mass. 7.

And the testimony of a witness in a prosecution for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, against a husband, that he entered the kitchen of the accused, where he found a woman supposed to be his wife, and asked her for "hard stuff," and she brought him a glass of rum, and that he did not see the accused, but that the bind it for the penalty because it did not appear that the company authorized or approved the act. That case settled this one in favor of the defendant. The latest work on railroads, of high and standard authority, 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 715, says: "On the other hand, it is held that statutes relating to criminal offenses, and all statutes which impose as punishment any penalties, pecuniary or otherwise, or forfeitures of money or other property, or which provide for the recovery of damages beyond just compensation to the party injured, whether recovered in a suit by the state or by a private individual, are penal in the sense that they fall under the rule of strict construction. This is the only doctrine that can be defended on principle." Statutes of the character involved in this case, imposing penalties for overcharges, have been held penal and subject to rigid construction. Hines v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 95 N. C. 484; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 99 Ky. 132, 33 L. R. A. 209. So, a statute giving a penalty for leaving a gate swing open over a highway was held penal in Allen v. Stevens, 29 N. J. L. 509. In Brooks v. Western U. Tele. Co. 56 Ark. 224, an act imposing a penalty for refusing to transmit telegrams over the line was held penal, and not to include the act of refusing to deliver a telegram after its transmission. The opinion very appropriately woman offered to call her husband, saying that he was in the next room, but got no reply upon calling to him, is sufficient to warrant an instruction that if the jury should find that the wife sold the rum as the agent of her husband they could find him guilty, and will warrant a conviction. Com. v. Lafayette, 148 Mass. 130.

So, sales of intoxicating liquor made by an employee may be deemed to have been made with the consent of the employer, though she had directed that no such sales should be made, where from the nature of the business and the character of the servants employed in it she could not reasonably expect her directions to be obeyed, and she took no care, and exercised no supervision, for the purpose of ascertaining that they would obey them, it being competent in such case for the jury to find that they were not given in good faith. Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289.

And evidence in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors on Sunday, that a sale, or what amounted to a sale, had been made on that day in the saloon of the accused, which was in a building which he himself occupied, by a person who was apparently in control of the saloon at the time, authorizes the jury to infer that the saloon was open and the sale was made with his consent, and it is not necessary that he should have authorized or directed the particular sale in question. Pierce v. State, 109 Ind. 535.

And evidence in a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, that the defendant kept a hotel in which a saloon was situated, the room in which the saloon was located being devoted exclusively to that purpose, leaving no occasion for keeping it open on Sunday in carrying on the business of the hotel, and that a witness went into the hotel office on a Sunday and passed through into the saloon, where he found one of the porters of the hotel with other persons standing some distance from the bar and inquired of the porter whether he had any beer, to which the reply was "There is a bottle, why don't you take it?" and the witness thereupon took a bottle of beer standing with a glass upon the counter and drank it, leaving a nickel on the counter, and passed out the way he entered,—is sufficient to uphold a conviction. Pierce v. State, 109 Ind. 535.

So, evidence in a prosecution against a saloon keeper for the sale of liquor to a minor, made by his barkeeper, that on other occasions the barkeeper had sold to infants with the defendant's knowledge, and that the latter made no objection and still continued him in his employ, would warrant the jury in inferring that he did so by the defendant's authority. Hanson v. State, 43 Ind. 550, dictum.

And evidence, in a suit on a retail liquor bond for the recovery of the penalty therein provided for a sale by the dealer to a minor, that a youth under eighteen years of age went into his room and bought intoxicating liquor from a person standing behind the bar transacting the business, is sufficient, prima facie, to show a breach of the bond. O'Flinn v. State, 66 Miss. 7.

And a clerk, agent, or employee of a person on trial for the illegal sale of liquors made by such clerk, agent, or employee need not be shown to have had no permit to sell such liquors. State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256.

In Massachusetts, however, a sale by a servant of intoxicating liquors to a minor in his master's shop and in the regular course of his master's business is not prima facie a sale by the master. Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466; Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 464, 56 Am. Rep. 707.

And a sale made by the servant of an innkeeper at the back door of licensed premises is prima facie one for which the employer is not liable, and requires affirmative proof that it was made in the presence, or with the consent, of the employer. Com. v. Rooks, 150 Mass. 59.

And the fact that a man employs a servant to conduct a business authorized by law, and that the servant makes an unlawful sale in the course of it, does not necessarily overcome the presumption of innocence, merely because the business is liquor traffic, and may be carried beyond statutory limits. Com. v. Briant, 142 Mass. 464, 56 Am. Rep. 707.

And generally, on the other hand, a sale by an employee is only prima facie evidence of the employer's liability, in an action for selling liquor without a license. Kirkwood v. Autenreith, 21 Mo. App. 73.

Or for a penalty for violating the statute prohibiting such sale. Com. v. Nichols, 10 Met. 250, 43 Am. Dec. 452.

And evidence that the occupant of a house, and servants of the owner, sold liquor there, is not sufficient to sustain a conviction against the owner for illegally selling intoxicating liquors, and refusal to instruct that such evidence is insufficient, and instructing that it was a question for the jury to decide, is error. Com. v. Dunbar, 9 Gray, 208.

And evidence, in a prosecution for the sale of liquor to be drank on the premises in violation of law, that the liquor was sold in the house of the accused and at his bar by his son, in the absence of any other evidence of agency, does not make a prima facie case of authority to the son to do an illegal act. Parker v. State, 5 Ohio St. 563.

So, under this rule, the sale of whisky in the back room of a store is not alone sufficient to justify a conviction of the proprietor, under a statute prohibiting such sale, unless the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he was interested in the sale, and that the man who made it was acting as his clerk or employee. Perkins v. State, 92 Ala. 66.

says what is applicable to this case that "the statute is penal, and its terms cannot be extended beyond their obvious meaning. Where there is a doubt, such an act ought not to be construed to inflict a penalty which the legislature may not have intended. This is a familiar rule of construction. Applied to this case, it resolves the question in favor of the company, for it cannot be said that the language plainly implies the intention to visit a penalty for a refusal to deliver a message after it has been transmitted." All penal statutes are construed strictly and not "extended by mere implication to include cases or acts not clearly described by the words." 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 374, 375; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 270. "Penal statutes are those by which punishments are imposed for transgressions of the law. They are construed strictly, and more or less so according to the severity of the penalty. When a law imposes a punishment which acts upon the offender alone, and not as a reparation to the party injured, and where it is entirely within the discretion of the law-giver, it will not be presumed that he intended it should extend further than is expressed; and humanity would require that it should be so limited in the construction." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 208. It does not make the statute any the less penal that the penalty is enforced by an action in form civil. That matter relates only to the procedure. A penalty "is in the nature of a punishment for the nonperformance of an act or for the performance of an unlawful act. Involves the idea of punishment . . . whether [enforced] by a civil or a criminal prosecution." Anderson, Law Dict. 768, quoted in an excellent case on the subject, Woolterton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 331, says: "It is immaterial, for the purpose of the application of the rule of strict construction, whether the proceeding prescribed for the enforcement of the penal law be criminal or civil. Thus, an act giving a party injured a civil action for the recovery of a penalty imposed upon a public officer for charging illegal fees, is a penal act; so that the taking of excessive fees by a person after the expiration of his office, for services done while in office, is beyond the reach of the act." In Virginia the statute against usury has been several times held to be penal, requiring proof beyond rational doubt. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. 21, 33.

I think my construction of clause 5 is

And evidence that the sale of intoxicating liquor in question was made by a person who was behind the counter of the saloon of the accused acting as barkeeper at the time is not sufficient to show the guilt of the proprietor beyond a reasonable doubt, in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, where it does not also show that such person was the agent of the accused, or was employed by him, or that the accused had any knowledge of the sale. Anderson v. State, 39 Ind. 553.

And the fact that the son of a liquor dealer was in his place of business acting as clerk for him on week days raises no presumption of law that he was his clerk on Sunday, and authorized to make sales on that day, so as to hold the proprietor criminally responsible for the acts of his servant or agent, unless he in some way participated in, countenanced, or approved the criminal act of the agent. Com. v. Johnston, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 317.

L. Question for jury.

It is a question of fact, solely for the jury to determine, whether an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors made by the barkeeper had been authorized by his employer; there is no presumption of law either way in Massachusetts, and the jury may be permitted to infer authority where there is evidence on the subject if, under all the circumstances, they see fit to do so. Com. v. Houle, 147 Mass. 380; Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 468.

And the weight of such evidence, and the inferences to be drawn from it, are for the jury to decide. Com. v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289; Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 468.

So, generally, while the question whether the jury would be legally authorized to infer from a given state of facts the existence of a general authority from a liquor dealer to a clerk to sell liquor unlawfully, is one of law for the court, the legal sufficiency of the facts to warrant the inference, and the existence of the facts themselves, should be left to the jury for determination. Kinnebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232.

And the question whether directions given by a master to his clerk not to sell any spirituous liquors were given in good faith, or were merely colorable and given with intent that they should be disobeyed, is one for the determination of the jury, in a prosecution for an illegal sale. State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 688.

So, the question as to what circumstances would be sufficient to establish the fact of knowledge on the part of an employer of an illegal sale of intoxicating liquor by his employee is one for the determination of the jury, and it is error to tell the jury that certain facts stated would, as a matter of law, raise a presumption of knowledge. Neidelsner v. State, 6 Baxt. 490.

And the question whether a licensed tavern keeper assented to a sale of liquors made by his bartender on Sunday is one of fact for the jury, and not one of legal presumption. People v. Utter, 44 Barb. 170.

And submitting the case to the jury in a prosecution for selling liquor on Sunday is not error, where the sale is claimed to have been made by someone in the accused's saloon, though the accused and his bartender testified that the bartender was under orders not to open the place on Sunday, and not to sell any intoxicating liquors therein, as such evidence comes from the mouths of interested witnesses. State v. Meagher, 49 Mo. App. 571.

So, a statement by the court to the jury, in a prosecution against the proprietor of a drug store for selling liquor without a license, and on Sunday, and without a regular prescription, that there had been a violation of the law in defendant's drug store by somebody, is improper as an interference with the province of the jury. The most that could be judicially said was that if certain of the witnesses who had testified to sales made there were believed, the law had been violated, but the credence to be given to the testimony is to be left to the jury. Com. v. Johnston, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

See also Atty. Gen. v. Riddle, 2 Crompt. & J. 493, 2 Tyrw. 523, supra, II. d. and Queen v. Holbrook, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 60, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 35, 37 L. T. N. S. 530, 28 Week. Rep. 144, 13 Cox, C. C. 650, supra, II. c.

F. H. B.

strengthened by looking at clauses 15 and 15a as all are in pari materia and in the same act. Clause 15 enacts that any wilful violation of the act by any railroad corporation shall be deemed a forfeiture of its franchise. Would any reasonable person say that a paltry overcharge of 38 cents as in this case, by a conductor without authority or approval of the company, would visit upon it the dreadful penalty of forfeiture of its franchise? You would not by liberal construction do this. Then why, for the very same act, impose the heavy penalty of $500 to the individual, not for compensation, but for punishment? Clause 15a enacts that "any railroad company or corporation . . . their officers or agents, who shall charge, demand, or receive more than the lawful charges for transportation or travel upon their railroad, shall, for each offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $500." That means that where the corporation authorizes it, it shall be liable, but where it is the unauthorized act of the agent, he is liable. The agent or officer is not liable to the $500 penalty under clause 5; he is not mentioned there, and to impose it on the corporation, it must be authorized or approved. It must be its wilful act, like the act required under clause 15 to lose its franchise. Indeed it may be a question whether any officer's unauthorized act, whether he be high or low, could subject a corporation to these severe penalties—whether it would not require company action, or action by someone authorized to fix rates, to bind the company; for a mere subaltern could not.

Under these principles error was committed prejudicial to the defendant upon the trial in giving plaintiff's instructions 1 and 2, the former telling the jury that it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt, but by a mere preponderance of the evidence; the latter stating that the mere collection of 60 cents by the conductor rendered the company liable. And error was committed in refusing defendant's instructions 1 and 2; the former instructing that if the conductor collected 60 cents, and that the company had a schedule of rates from the government of its conductors in collecting fares from passengers, and that a duplicate of it was furnished to the conductor, and that it was against the rules of the company for the conductor to charge the plaintiff more than the rates fixed by said schedule, and if said rates were not more than the law allowed, then the jury must find for the defendant; and No. 3, instructing that before the jury could find for the plaintiff they must believe from the evidence, to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt, that the company charged the plaintiff more than was allowed by law, and that notwithstanding the conductor charged 60 cents, which was more than the law allowed, if the jury believed that the rules of the company did not allow the conductor to charge the plaintiff more than was allowed by law, and that he acted in violation of the rules of the company, the act of the conductor was not the act of the company. The court erred in not setting aside the verdict of the jury as there was no evidence tending to show that the company authorized or ratified the act, and, on the contrary, it was clearly shown to be against the rules of the company. I think there was no error in rejecting pleas 1 and 2, fixing one year as a limitation. If any statute applied it would be five years under Code, chap. 104, § 12.

Reversed, and new trial granted.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

Joseph J. O'LEARY, by Guardian, Appt.,
v.
BROOKS ELEVATOR COMPANY, Resp.

(.....N.D.....)

1. Every man has the absolute right to use his own property for any of the purposes to which such property is usually applied, and in such manner as he sees proper, provided he exercises proper care and skill to avoid unnecessary injury to others up to the point where such use becomes a nuisance.

2. A landowner owes no duty of protection to a trespasser upon his land when such trespass is unknown to the landowner, and where it is in no manner induced by any negligence on his part.

3. Actionable negligence is a failure to observe a legal duty existing in favor of the person who brings the action. Where there is no duty, there can be no actionable negligence.

*Headnotes by BARTHOLOMEW, J.

NOTE.—With respect to dangerous attractions for children, see Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards (Tex.) 33 L. R. A. 825, and other cases cited 41 L. R. A.

See also 44 L. R. A. 655.

4. A child is responsible for its own torts although committed by direction of another; and a child is no less a trespasser because the trespass was committed under the control or coercion of a parent or guardian.

(May 27, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Traill County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carmody & Leslie and J. P. Galbraith, for appellant;

Defendant was guilty of gross negligence which was the direct cause of plaintiff's injuries.

Negligence is defined by our statute as: "A want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a in note thereto; also Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (Mo.) 33 L. R. A. 756, and Kaumeier v. City Electric R. Co. (Mich.) 40 L. R. A. 385.

prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns."

N. D. Rev. Codes, § 7714.

Is there any doubt but what if the defendant's agent in charge of the elevator had had boys of his own, he would have covered up the rod or mended the knuckle and taken off the wire,—at least after his attention had been called to the fact that it was dangerous?

The claim that a man can do as he pleases on or within his own premises is not correct. A technical trespass by plaintiff does not bar a recovery.

Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. 329; Radeliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 58 Am. Dec. 357.

In any case, where under all the circumstances of the case the defendant should, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, and of a thoughtful regard for the safety and rights of others, have foreseen the probability of accident, and where the danger could be removed without interfering with his business or incurring any unreasonable expense or trouble (expense or trouble which would be incommensurate with the probability of danger), the defendant is liable for his neglect in not protecting the public from such danger.

Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418; O'Malley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 289; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434; Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 58 Pa. 332; Kansas O. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 81 Am. Rep. 208; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11; Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503; Young v. Harvey, 16 Ind. 314; Penso v. McCormick, 125 Ind. 116, 9 L. R. A. 313; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374; Malloy v. Hibernia Soc. & L. Soc. (Cal.) 21 Pac. 525; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Lowe v. Salt Lake City, 13 Utah, 91; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 107 Mass. 104; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Grablin, 38 Neb. 90; Durham v. Musselman, 2 Blackf. 96, 18 Am. Dec. 133.

An innocent trespasser could recover, the danger being a concealed one.

Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374.

This case comes within the rule of the Turntable Cases.

The child is not held to the degree of care that a grown person is.

Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545.

Riordan's negligence would not prevent the plaintiff from recovering.

Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Rauch v. Lloyd, 31 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 78; Bellevue & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 408, 98 Am. Dec. 175; 41 L. R. A.

Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Manson, 30 Ohio St. 451; North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Mahoney, 57 Pa. 187; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 620; Norfolk & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455; Huff v. Ames, 16 Neb. 139, 49 Am. Rep. 716; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Moore, 59 Tex. 64, 46 Am. Rep. 265; Erie City Pass. R. Co. v. Schuster, 118 Pa. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 471; Roland v. Missouri R. Co. 36 Mo. 489; Bettishill v. Humphrey, 74 Mich. 494; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545; Newman v. Phillipsburg Horse Car R. Co. 52 N. J. L. 446, 8 L. R. A. 843; Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 41-43.

Meers, Swenson & Norman and F. W. Root for respondent.

Bartholomew, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages for a personal injury caused by the alleged negligence of defendant. When the evidence was closed, the court, on defendant's motion, directed a verdict in its favor. The facts admitted, and which plaintiff's evidence tended to establish, are as follows: The plaintiff, Joseph J. O'Leary, is a minor, and was eleven years old at the time of the trial, which was in January, 1897. J. D. O'Leary is plaintiff's duly appointed guardian. The defendant is a corporation, and at the time of the injury complained of, and for several years prior thereto, owned and operated a grain elevator in the city of Hillsboro, in this state. The railroad track passes through the city, running north and south. Main street is west of the railroad track, and runs parallel therewith, the east line of the street being identical with the west line of the right of way. Fifth avenue, running east and west, crosses Main street and the railroad track at right angles. The defendant's elevator property stands in the northeast corner formed by the intersection of Main street and Fifth avenue. The building nearest the corner was the engine house. This was a brick building between 8 and 9 feet wide, and 28 feet long, the front end facing west on Main street, but back from the street 8 or 10 feet. North from the north line of the engine house, 20 feet distant, was the elevator proper. Starting in front of the engine house, and extending to and along the front of the elevator, was an elevated driveway for hauling grain to the elevator. This driveway was not more than 2 feet high where it left the engine house, and raised to about 5 feet in height at the elevator. There was a railing on the driveway, and on the inside or east side it was boarded up from the ground to the driveway, but there were boards off, so a man could pass through. The elevator at the south end was 30 feet wide. The south side of the engine house ran back along the walk on the north side of Fifth avenue. The first side track of the railroad was 8 or 10 feet east of the east end of the engine house. The machinery in the elevator was connected with the engine by means of a shaft or tumbling rod extending across the space between the two buildings about 15 inches from the ground, and 6 or 8 feet from the driveway. About the middle of this shaft was a knuckle connecting two separate pieces of the shaft. This knuckle was bolted over the ends of the shaft, and by means of slots in the knuckle and in the shaft, into which iron wedges were fitted, a solid connection was made. These wedges would sometimes work loose, and, to avoid that, a wire, about the size of a large fence wire or telegraph wire, had been used to wind around the shaft and the knuckle in such a manner as to hold the wedges in place. The end of this wire was left standing out about 6 inches from the knuckle. Neither the shaft nor the knuckle was in any manner boxed or covered. When the shaft was in motion, the protruding end of the wire could not be seen, or, if seen at all, only as a dim outline. The shaft had been used by defendant in this uncovered condition for a number of years. Just how long the wire had been used does not appear. In the summer time, boys at play sometimes went upon this space between the engine house and the elevator, and over and around this shaft. The object that seems to have been attractive to children was an escape pipe that came out of the engine house a few feet distant from the shaft. The spot would seem also to have been something of a resort for tramps, as the evidence shows them to have been there on several occasions. These facts were all known to the defendant.

Late in the evening of July 19, 1896, the plaintiff, in company with one Riordan, reached Hillsboro. This man Riordan was plaintiff's uncle, and was at that time his guardian. His sight was defective. He could see sufficiently well for all purposes of locomotion, but he represented himself as blind, and was going through the country soliciting charity. Ostensibly, he was cared for by plaintiff, who led him whithersoever he went. Plaintiff was completely under Riordan's control. They stopped at an hotel that night, on Main street, and nearly opposite the elevator. The next morning, after breakfast, Riordan directed plaintiff to take him to some box cars that stood on the track, where he would smoke. They crossed over Main street on the north side of Fifth avenue, and followed the sidewalk going east until they had passed beyond the east end of the engine house far enough to permit Riordan to look into the space between the engine house and the elevator. There he saw a ladder lying on its side, and leaning against the boards that extended from the ground up to the driveway. He indicated that he would use that as his smoking place, and accordingly they passed into the space, crossed over the shaft, and sat down on the ladder. As they sat down, Riordan dropped his cane in such a manner that it passed under the shaft. The shaft was in motion, and was revolving about 160 times per minute. After Riordan had finished smoking, he directed plaintiff to get his cane. In endeavoring to get the cane, plaintiff's clothes were caught by the protruding and practically invisible end of the wire, and he was instantly whirled around the revolving shaft and knuckle. The outcry caused the man in charge of the elevator to stop the engine as speedily as he could. The plaintiff was frightfully injured, but ultimately recovered, with the loss of one leg at the knee. The sole proposition involved in the case is whether or not defendant is liable, under the facts stated, in damages, for the injury to plaintiff.

The precise principles of law that should measure the liability of the landowner to persons injured upon his lands are difficult of ascertainment. This arises in part from the inherent intricacies of the subject, and in a greater degree from the circumstances that the facts in nearly every case are so clearly differentiated from the facts in every other case that it has not been possible for courts to establish many general rules governing such cases. More particularly has this been true when, as in this case, the injured person was a child; and, as capacity and responsibility on the part of the injured persons are elements that always enter into the consideration of contributory negligence, it follows that with children the age and mental development make it still more difficult to establish general rules. In cases of this class, where the defendant has been held liable, the case of Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, is quite generally cited as an authority in favor of a recovery. On the other hand, and in the interest of landowner defendants, it has been urged that this case is not such an authority, because the injury in that case occurred in the public street, where the injured child had a legal right to go. In that case a horse and cart were left unhitched and unattended in the street, and the plaintiff, a lad seven years of age, climbed upon the cart; another boy led the horse away; and the plaintiff, in attempting to get down, was run over and injured. The owner of the horse and cart was held liable, on the ground of negligence in leaving the horse and cart unhitched, and with no person to take care of it, in a street where children were playing. While it is true that plaintiff was not a trespasser by being in the street, yet he was a trespasser when he climbed upon the cart. In Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, the Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking of Lynch v. Nurdin, says: "The child was clearly a trespasser in climbing upon the cart, but was allowed to recover." We think that case is a clear authority in favor of allowing a technical trespasser to recover by reason of the negligence of defendant. The case of Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, was the first of a series of cases now known as the "Turntable Cases," wherein railroad companies have been held liable for injuries received by children while playing upon or around turntables by reason of the fact that the turntables were left unfastened and unguarded. Among these cases may be mentioned Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393; O'Malley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 299; Barrett v. Southern P. Co. 91 Cal. 296; Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Meisler, 81 Tex. 474; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418; Iluaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. St. 446. All of these cases practically, and some of them expressly, treat the plaintiff as a technical trespasser; and they establish the principle that such a trespasser may recover, although the be no wilful act or gross negligence on the part of the defendant. But these cases are suu generis. They have for their foundation the assumption that a defendant landowner must know that children will follow their childish instincts and inclinations, and that they are without capacity to clearly discriminate between things that are dangerous and things that are not dangerous; and, therefore, if he leave upon his premises a dangerous piece of machinery unguarded and fully exposed, and in a position where it will probably be seen by children, and of a character that would naturally attract and entice children, he must anticipate that children will go around and upon it; and he is therefore bound to use ordinary care to protect these unconscious trespassers from being unnecessarily injured by such dangerous machinery. Nor has the application of this principle been confined to this one line of cases. It was applied in Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Rep. 261, where the injury was produced by a gate; in Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545, where the child was scalded in a pool of hot water; in Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, where the dangerous object was a signal torpedo; in Mullaney v. Spence, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 319, an elevator worked by steam; in Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206; 484, a deep pit filled with water and floating materials; in Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154, where the injury was caused by a dynamite cartridge, but there was a question of license in the case also; in Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610, cog wheels outside of a paper mill, but operated by a shaft from within; in Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193, lumber pile; in Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 777, where the injury was caused by falling into an excavation made by the city. Many other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient to show the wide diversity of facts to which this principle has been applied. These cases bear upon the case under consideration only in the fact that they establish the principle that a trespasser on land, and who is injured thereon, may, under some circumstances, recover therefor from the landowner, on the ground of the negligence of the latter. But the general ground upon which these recoveries were allowed exclude this case from the operation of the principle. In each case cited, it was held that the landowner placed or created upon his premises a dangerous object or condition, which was attractive to children, and which he had reason to believe would attract children, and which did in fact draw the injured child to it. While the plaintiff in this case is a child, and doubtless subject to the instincts and inclinations of children, and while the evidence tends to show that the place where he was injured was attractive to children, yet it clearly appears that plaintiff was not in fact attracted to the spot, and was not induced to go there by reason of his childish instincts and inclinations. There is another well-recognized line of authority under which a trespasser has been permitted to recover. It covers the cases where, after the trespass is known and the danger perceived, the landowner fails to use ordinary diligence to protect the trespasser from injury.

41 L. R. A.

See cases cited in note 7, § 1253, vol. 8, Elliott, Railroads; also, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coleman, 86 Ky. 556; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Wood, 86 Ala. 164; Bostwick v. Minneapolis & P. R. Co. 2 N. D. 440. But the facts in this case likewise exclude it from that line of authority. A trespasser may also recover for injuries inflicted upon him by the wanton or wilful acts of the defendant. This is elementary. These classes, generally speaking, cover all the conditions under which a trespasser, whether knowingly and wilfully such, or only technically such, is permitted to recover from the landowner.

It is a fundamental principle of law that the absolute right of every man to use his own property as he pleases, for all purposes to which such property is usually applied, provided he exercises proper care and skill to prevent any unnecessary injury to others, is unlimited and unqualified up to the point where the particular use becomes a nuisance. Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. 329. It is equally true that a landowner owes no duty of protection to a trespasser, at least up to the time when the trespass is known. In other words, he is under no legal duty to keep his premises in such condition that they may be trespassed upon with safety to the trespasser, provided their condition does not unnecessarily invite injury. We think that it is under this proviso that the Turntable Cases and others of that class must be placed where no question of license is involved. They cannot be placed upon the ground of implied invitation because the attractive object that allured the child, and wrought the injury, was not placed on the premises for the purpose of alluring children, but it was placed there or left there, unfastened or unguarded, with knowledge that it would allure children. We are aware that able courts have very recently refused to follow the principle of the Turntable Cases. Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 849, 13 L. R. A. 248; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724.

In this case we neither adopt nor reject the principle of the Turntable Cases, our object being to show that in no event do they apply to the case at bar. But it is urged that in their general scope they do apply to this case; that the shaft and knuckle could have been boxed or covered at small expense; that exposed they were dangerous, as the accident in this case proves; and that, as children and tramps were attracted to the spot, defendant was bound to anticipate such an accident, and its failure to guard against it was actionable negligence. But actionable negligence is simply a failure to exercise that diligence and skill that was imposed by some legal duty. In Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 103 Ind. 590, 53 Am. Rep. 65, it is said: "The first requisite in establishing negligence is to show the existence of the duty which it is supposed has not been performed." And Judge Mitchell says, in Akers v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 58 Minn. 544: "Actionable negligence is the failure to discharge a legal duty to the person injured. If there is no duty, there is no negligence. Even if the defendant owes a duty to someone else, but does not owe it to the person injured, no action will lie. The duty must be due to the person injured." What duty did this defendant owe to this plaintiff? Let us concede (and no decided case has gone so far) that children non sui juris were attracted, not by the dangerous machinery, but by the escape pipe, and that defendant knew they were so attracted, and that the proximity of the escape pipe to the knuckle was such as to endanger the safety of children so drawn to the escape pipe, and as to them defendant owed the duty of covering the knuckle; yet such duty extended only to such children as were drawn to or enticed upon the premises by the dangerous attraction that the defendant had placed or suffered thereon. As to persons who went upon the premises solely for their own convenience, and to subserve their own ends and purposes, no such duty could exist. Defendant had no reasonable cause to anticipate or apprehend that its premises would be thus used by trespassers; and, if defendant owed no duty of protection to such persons, no actionable negligence can be predicated upon its failure to furnish such protection.

That the plaintiff was placed in the dangerous situation by one under whose control he was is his misfortune,—and a most deplorable misfortune it is in this case,—but that fact does not change the defendant's legal duty. Children are liable for their torts even when committed under the express orders of their parents or guardians. Scott v. Watson, 46 Me. 862, 74 Am. Dec. 457; Kilpatrick v. Hall, 67 Me. 543; Smith v. Kron, 96 N. C. 392; Chandler v. Deaton, 87 Tex. 406; Huchting v. Engel, 17 Wis. 281, 84 Am. Dec. 741; School Dist. No. 1 v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 507.

The directions of Riordan did not make plaintiff less a trespasser. It does not appear, and is not claimed, that his trespass was known to defendant, or that maintaining the shaft and knuckle in the condition in which they were, in the locality in which they were, was an act of wanton or wilful negligence, that manifests an indifference to consequences, or disregard for the property or persons of others. The question of contributory negligence does not enter into this case. None can properly be attributed to plaintiff, nor can actionable negligence be attributed to defendant. The plaintiff's misfortune—and it is indeed a sad one—resulted from one of those accidents for which the law can cast the blame upon no one.

Several errors were assigned upon the rulings upon the evidence. The view of the law as herein expressed renders them all immaterial.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

All concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Sarah E. KEYS et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

PITTSBURG & WHEELING COAL COMPANY.

(53 Ohio St. 246.)

*1. Where coal lands are owned by tenants in common, one of which being engaged in mining coal under adjoining lands, his cotenants being infants, and the former enters into a contract with the father of the infants for purchasing the interest of the latter in the common estate; and the purchaser, acting in good faith under a belief that the title will be perfected by proceedings instituted in the probate court for that purpose or by the infants when they arrive at full age, enters upon the common estate, and mines and sells coal therefrom,—the measure of damages in an action brought against him on that account by a guardian of the infants is the value of the coal in place at the time it was mined.

2. If, in such case, the purchaser, in the course of operating coal mines on his own lands that surround or abut on the common estate, has constructed entries, tramways, etc., conveniently located for removing from the common estate coal that may be mined there, that circumstance, as well as every other one, natural or artificial, which tends to enhance or diminish the value of the coal in place, should be considered by the jury in fixing such value.

(Williams and Minshall, JJ., dissent.)

(March 29, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Belmont County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the value of coal taken from plaintiff's property by defendants. Affirmed.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

This action was brought by plaintiffs in error to recover of defendant in error damages on account of the latter having mined and removed coal belonging to the former. The plaintiffs in error recovered a judgment in the court of common pleas, which, on being taken on error to the circuit court, was there reversed for error in the charge of the court. Thereupon the plaintiffs in error brought the cause here to reverse the judgment of the circuit court and reinstate that of the court of common pleas.

Messrs. C. L. Weems, A. H. Mitchell, and W. Mitchell, for plaintiffs in error:

The rule given by the court of common pleas was fair, and if error it was prejudicial to plaintiffs in error.

It is wholly immaterial whether plaintiffs

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For the similar question of the measure of damages for injury to or destruction of trees, see Bailey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 19 L. R. A. 658; Whiting v. Adams (Vt.) 25 L. R. A. 568, 41 L. R. A.

entry would run against the "dip" of the vein of coal, rendering drainage of the mine and transportation of the coal both inconvenient and expensive.

The defendants had, in the course of their operations, approached quite near to this coal, and it could be conveniently mined by them, and a way through it to other coal owned by it would be valuable to them, but, of course worthless to others. The tract of land had belonged to one Hugh Giffin, who, by will executed in 1861, devised to his wife, Jane Giffin, a life estate therein, and at her death the fee to his four children. In the year 1884 the defendant purchased the life estate of Jane Giffin, and soon afterwards $\frac{2}{3}$ of the fee therein, and attempted to purchase of their father the $\frac{1}{3}$ that belonged to the plaintiffs. There seems to have been little or no material controversy respecting these negotiations. The plaintiffs are children of Alexander Keys, and an exchange of their interest in this coal for certain surface was effected by him and a representative of the defendant, the terms of which are given by Ross J. Alexander, Esq., then an attorney residing in Belmont county, in a deposition in the following language: "The children of Mr. Alexander Keys were to receive, in exchange for their interest in this coal, property—about 24 acres of land—out of what was called the 'Falke section,' being surface only, the coal underlying the same being reserved. The Falke section had been previously purchased, and was then in the name of Selah Chamberlain, trustee. Mr. Keys and his children were to have, and did take, immediate possession of this land. Mr. Keys came very often to see me about this coal; not less than a dozen times, I think; and was very anxious to effect the sale of this coal." Mr. Keys also testified that he entered into the possession of and had ever since possessed and cultivated, the surface which his children were to receive in exchange for this coal. The general agent of the defendant testified on this subject as follows (cross examination):

When he came with Keys, you understood that these Keys children were minors?

A. Yes, I knew they were minors.

You knew, as a business man, that Keys could only sell his own interest as an individual?

A. I knew that Mr. Alexander was representing to me that he was the father of these children, that after this agreement was consummated he was to be appointed guardian, or act as guardian.

You knew, as a business man, that Mr. Keys as an individual had no right to sell any interest except his own?

A. Of course, I knew that.

You knew that, as the father of these children, he had no power to sell their interest?

A. Not as their father.

You knew the only legal way it could be done would be to apply to the probate court and get authority from that court to make the sale, and then have a sale made, and have it confirmed by that court, you knew that?

A. I thought that was the arrangement made.

You understood that would be necessary?

41 L. R. A.

A. Yes, sir.

And, without waiting for that, you turned over to Mr. Keyes, as an individual, this surface land—24 acres of surface?

A. I do not remember the exact number of acres.

Well, 25 perhaps?

A. Yes, sir.

And you took possession of the coal, or your company did. You did not wait until the transaction in probate court was completed, did you?

A. No, sir.

At that time you went to mining your coal you did not know it had been done?

A. I just took Mr. Alexander's and Mr. Keys's word for it that the title would be perfect.

You understood you were to get a good title through the action of the probate court?

A. Yes, sir.

And when you got it, then you would convey to him the land?

A. Yes, the titles were to be exchanged.

You did not give him a title to the 25 acres of land?

A. Not that I know of.

And you never got a title—you knew that you never had any title—for these children's interest?

A. I reported to Mr. Chamberlain the transaction and asked to have a deed prepared and signed, but never to my knowledge was it done.

As far as your personal knowledge goes, you never at any time had any reason to know this land had been conveyed to Keys, and you never saw anything that came through the probate court?

A. I never gave it any further attention.

The other deeds from the other Giffin interests, you had it put on record yourself?

A. I do not know whether I had them put on record, or whether I had sent them to Mr. Chamberlain, and he sent them here.

At any rate you handled the other deeds?

A. Yes, they passed through my hands.

You knew all the time you were taking out this coal that no deed for these children's interest had passed through your hands?

A. I knew it had not passed through my hands.

You expected it to come to you because you had handled all the other deeds?

A. I was dividing my time so as to attend to my private business and also to look after that railroad work. There was a good deal of work done in the main office in Cleveland, and it might come without my knowing it.

You expected it; you were dealing with Alexander Keys, and you were general agent of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

You expected the deed to be delivered to you?

A. Yes, I naturally supposed it would be.

You knew it never came to you?

A. I never thought anything more of it.

When you started to mine that coal, you knew you did not have a right to do it when you had not got the deed?

A. I knew I simply had this arrangement with Keys.

Did you not know as a business man, when you started to mine that coal, that you did not have a right to do it until you got a conveyance through the probate court, and from a guardian?

A. No, I supposed when they had their pay that we had a right to take the coal.

Do you say to the jury that you believed that without making a deed for it, when you turned over this surface land to their father, that you had a right to mine their interests in the coal without first getting a deed from the probate court? Do you say that to the jury?

A. I will say that I did not have any doubt but what the deed would be gotten very soon.

Did you not know that would have to be done, and that you had no right to mine it?

A. I knew the transaction would not be complete until it was done.

Do you say you did not know you had no right to the coal until that was done?

A. No, sir; I did not know that.

Do you say to the jury that you believed that you had a right to take the coal before you had a guardian's deed for it?

A. I believed we had a perfect right to take the coal under the land.

Redirect examination:

You had paid for the coal by the exchange?

A. We gave Mr. Keys that land for the children.

Subsequent to that did Mr. Alexander say, in pursuance of that arrangement, that he had filed a petition for the purpose of making a legal conveyance?

A. He showed me a petition which he said he was going to file.

Already drawn by him?

A. Yes, sir.

This statement of the evidence is sufficient to show that while, as a matter of law, the transaction did not divest the plaintiffs of their ownership of the coal in question, a jury might well have found that it was mined in good faith under a belief that the purchase would be ultimately completed. If the jury had thus found, by what rule should the damages have been assessed? The court of common pleas in its charge to the jury, laid down the rule applicable upon such finding as follows: If they acted inadvertently under the honest belief that they were entitled to mine it, and to remove and sell it, and convert it to their own use, then in that case the plaintiff will be entitled to recover the value of the coal immediately after the same was severed from the realty, less the cost of making such severance. If the coal, when severed and lying on the floor of the mine, is to be considered a chattel jointly owned by the plaintiffs and defendant, the rule of damages thus given by the court is as favorable to the defendant as any which the authorities support. Further still, a very little reflection on the subject will be sufficient to show that the rule as thus stated does not materially differ from one that fixes as the measure of damages the value of the coal in place; for the value of the coal in place is just equal to its value when severed less the cost of severance. In the very nature of things the only difference between the value of coal in place and that which lies on the floor of the mine is the cost of hewing it. Therefore, if we can fix its value while in place, then by simply adding the cost of severing it we can ascertain its value when severed. If, on the other hand, any certain rule is shown by which its value when severed and lying on the floor of the mine can be ascertained, then, by deducting the cost of severance, we will have its value in place. The real difficulty encountered in this class of cases is in ascertaining the fair value of the coal or other mineral substance in place or when severed and lying on the floor of the mine. If, when in place or on the floor of the mine, it is immediately accessible to a public highway or common carrier, the difficulty is practically overcome, or rather has no existence; for usually there is no serious impediment met in ascertaining the market value of a commodity that occupies a place in the commerce of the world as important as that filled by fuel coal. And, having ascertained its market value, if the coal is so situated with reference to public highways or common carriers that, when severed, the means of transportation to that market are open to all persons alike, and upon equal terms, its value in place or on the floor of the mine can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. In the case of coal severed and lying on the floor of the mine its value would be ascertained by deducting from the market price the full cost attending its transportation and marketing, while the value of the coal in place would be the market price less the total expense required to sever, transport, and market it. The coal of the plaintiffs, which was mined by the defendant, however, was not thus situated. When the defendant had extended its entry, and laid a track therein up to the line which divided its other coal from the coal in question, the means of transportation thus afforded was the private way of the defendant, and any coal that passed along or over it would be unloaded or dumped at the defendant's tipples, and passed through or over its screens into the railroad cars into which it was hauled to market. Whether the railroad track on which these cars stood when the screened coal fell into them belonged to the defendant or to a common carrier does not clearly appear. This, however, is not material to the question, for, whether this track belonged to the defendant or not, the screens and tipples did, as well as the entry and tramway that led from the tipples to the coal, which is the subject of controversy. The means of transportation thus created being the private property of defendant, were available to the plaintiffs only upon the consent of the former. Doubtless the circumstance that this entry had been completed added something to the value of the plaintiff's coal. This increased value, it is true, resulted solely from the expenditure thus incurred by the defendant, and rested on the probability that the latter would find it advantageous to its future operations to possess the property, and would therefore desire to purchase it. The strength of this desire and consequent value of the plaintiffs' interest therein would depend to a great extent upon certain conditions of a local character, which are quite apparent to one who is at all familiar with coal-mining operations.

41 L. R. A.

For instance, if the defendant had exhausted the coal already owned by it which could be removed along this entry, and had coal lying beyond this land to which it wished to penetrate, and which it could only reach by crossing this land, the value of this coal for immediate mining, together with the value of the right to cross this tract of land to its other coal, might be very great to the defendant, and the value of the tract enhanced accordingly; while on the other hand, if defendant still had coal in abundance that might be mined and transported through this entry, or even other entries owned by it, and could thus continue for a considerable period its mining operations without resorting to this coal, its value may not have been materially enhanced by the construction of the entry. The record discloses quite clearly that, but for this entry, the location of the land is such it cannot be deemed to possess any considerable value for mining purposes. The record discloses further that only a year or two before the defendant began to mine this coal it purchased of Elizabeth A. Forsythe an undivided fourth of these premises for \$700, of Nancy M. Giffin an undivided one fourth for the same price, and of James Giffin an undivided one fourth for \$600, aggregating \$2,000 for three fourths. For the $\frac{1}{4}$ owned by the plaintiffs the defendant was to convey 24 or 25 acres of surface. The value of this surface is not stated, but enough appears in the record to raise a strong inference that it did not exceed \$500 or \$600. The exact quantity of mineral coal which the land contains is not stated, but it seems to have been about 150 acres in all; 48.29 acres were mined. Just how great a proportion of the coal should be left to support the roof of the mine does not appear, but certainly not more than one half of the mineral coal had been removed; and of that removed $\frac{1}{4}$ only, which equals about 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, belonged to plaintiffs, and yet a verdict for \$9,500 was rendered for them,—a sum far in excess of the value of the entire tract, but for this entry, and which could not have been awarded to the plaintiffs if the principle of compensation had been kept steadily in view. If the defendant acted in good faith,—and, as we have seen, the evidence justified a finding that it did so,—it should be held to full compensation, but nothing more.

We are not disposed to question the wisdom of applying to cases of this character that severe rule of damages countenanced by the authorities, where bad faith or a wilful disregard of the rights of others is shown. In such cases, upon principles of public policy that seek to discourage wilful or wanton encroachments on private property, the principle of mere compensation is not followed. The circumstances under which the rule of mere compensation should be disregarded, as well as the rules by which compensation itself may be ascertained, have long occupied the attention of the courts of this country and of England, and the cases where discussions of its several phases may be found are numerous. Among the more important of them may be classed: Martin v. Porter, 5 Mees. & W. 851; Morgan v. Powell, 8 Q. B. 278; Wild v. Holt, 9 Mees. & W. 672; Llynvi Co. v. Brogden, L. R. 11 Eq. 41 L. R. A.

188; Jegon v. Vivian, L. R. 6 Ch. 742; Wood v. Morewood, 8 Q. B. 441; Ecclesiastical Comrs. v. North Eastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 845; Fothergill v. Phillips, L. R. 6 Ch. 770; Hilton v. Woods, L. R. 4 Eq. 482; Re United Merthyr Collieries Co. L. R. 15 Eq. 46; Trotter v. Maclean, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 574; Illinois & St. L. R. & Coal Co. v. Ogle, 83 Ill. 627, 25 Am. Rep. 342; Robertson v. Jones, 71 Ill. 405; Maye v. Tappan, 28 Cal. 806; Goller v. Felt, 30 Cal. 481; Barton Coal Co. v. Cox, 89 Md. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 525; Forsyth v. Wells, 41 Pa. 291; Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Pa. 261; Waters v. Stevenson, 18 Nev. 157, 29 Am. Rep. 293; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Cone Iron Works, 102 Mass. 86; Austin v. Huntsville Coal & Min. Co. 72 Mo. 535, 37 Am. Rep. 446. Many of the cases on the subject were reviewed by Judge Wright in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hutchins, 32 Ohio St. 571, 30 Am. Rep. 629. In that case, however, trespassers had cut timber from the lands of another, and converted it into railroad ties and cordwood, and it is quite evident that the means of transporting the ties and cordwood were as available to the owners as to anyone else, so that no difficulty in applying the rule of damages such as occurs in the case before us arose out of the situation and conditions surrounding the timber after severance. There the wood and ties into which the timber had been converted rested on the surface of the earth, was on the land of the owner of the timber, and, in the nature of things, could have been reached by teams, and hauled to market direct, or to the line of a common carrier. For this purpose the construction of elaborate and expensive entries, tramways, and tipples was not necessary. And it is quite apparent that the absence of this necessity enhanced the value of the timber, and that its value, whether as standing trees, felled timber, or manufactured into railroad ties and cordwood, would have steadily diminished in the same ratio that access to it would become difficult; and, if situated so as to be practically inaccessible, would possess little or no value whatever. So, with the coal lands of the plaintiffs. Before an entry had been extended in their direction, it must be manifest to everyone that their value, owing to their unfavorable situation for the purposes of mining, was comparatively small. Reference has already been made to the effect that may have been produced respecting its value by the defendant extending an entry and tramway from its tipple to the line of this coal. The difficulty of determining this effect, depending as it does upon circumstances the force of which is uncertain, is apparent. In this connection it may be well to advert to the situation the plaintiffs would be in respecting the coal when severed. To them it was without value except for the probability that defendant would remove it. They could not themselves transport it, or their share of it, over the defendant's tramway, nor could they reach it by an independent entry, even if that had been in its nature practicable, because the defendant owned $\frac{3}{4}$ of the land through which the entry must have been extended. These considerations show the impracticability of attaining the ends of justice by applying a technical rule of damages to the circumstances of this case. The supreme court commission refused to apply a rule of that character to the circumstances shown in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hutchins, 32 Ohio St. 571, 30 Am. Rep. 629. The right of property in the ties and cordwood which were the subject of that action, while they remained on land where cut or made, was in the owner of the timber. By a well established principle the trespassers who felled the trees, and by their labor turned them into cordwood and railroad ties, did not by these unlawful acts, transfer the property therein to themselves. The wood and ties remained the property of the owner of the timber, and he could have gone upon his land, and hauled them to market, sold them, and retained the proceeds. Still further, if he could have identified them after they had been sold and delivered to the railroad company, he could have reclaimed them in specie if he had desired to do so. This he could do because they were his, and he could not be deprived of his property in them without his consent. The railway, by taking and using them, converted them to its own use without his consent. This constitutes trover, and by the well-settled rules of law the measure of damages is the value of the property. If these well-settled rules of law had been technically applied in that case, the measure of damages would have been at least the value of the ties and wood when converted to its use by the railroad company. The court there, however, paid more regard to the principle of just compensation than to those technical rules which the owner of the wood and ties sought to have applied, and instead of allowing him, in accordance with those technical rules, the value of those articles at the time of conversion, limited his compensation to value of the timber as it lay upon the earth immediately after being felled. The principle that underlies this case and those cases which support its conclusions, and upon which all of them rest, is that of fully compensating one who has suffered injury to his property without doing injustice to others. This case was again before this court in 37 Ohio St. 282, and beginning on page 292, McIlvaine, J., says: "As we understand the rule laid down by the commission, the value of the timber as enhanced by the labor of cutting down, was the true measure of damages. And surely, as the labor of felling the trees was a trespass on the real estate of the plaintiff, who has waived the wrong done to his realty, such labor was not an accession to the value of his personal property, which the trees first became after they were cut down and severed from the land. The value, at least, of the property after it became personal, was the measure of the injury complained of by the plaintiff." This rule, when applied to the circumstances of that case, is reasonable (the mere felling of the trees did not require any appliance beyond an ax, and was an inconsiderable proportion of the labor necessary to convert the timber into either cordwood or railroad ties), and did not extend beyond compensating the plaintiff for his timber, and the trespass (which seems to have been wilful), which he had waived, to his real estate. Judge McIlvaine, in the course of the opinion, says further, on page 294: "Indeed, it appears to me to be axiomatic that, as between man and man, where no wrong was intended, equal and exact justice is done when the party wronged is made whole for all that he has lost by reason of being deprived of property." If this principle had been pursued in ascertaining the damages suffered by the plaintiffs on account of the coal mined and removed by the defendant, a verdict many times greater in amount than the value of the entire coal in place, could not have been rendered. This result could have been accomplished only in one of two ways: (1) Either by applying to the case some technical rule of damages, which though usually applicable to actions of this class, and generally with just results, was in fact inapplicable here by reason of some particular circumstance that distinguished it from its class; or (2) by a misconception of the principles by which the market value of the coal should have been ascertained.

The court, in its instructions to the jury, regarded the coal as a chattel from the instant of severance, and authorized the jury to find its market value there, as if no restrictions whatever in respect of its removal existed. It said to the jury that if the defendants acted "inadvertently under the honest belief that they were entitled to mine it [the coal], and remove and sell it, and convert it to their own use, then in that case the plaintiffs will be entitled to recover the value of the coal immediately after the same was severed from the realty, less the cost of severance." It also instructed the jury that "in considering the case in this view, gentlemen, you are not to consider how much it would cost the plaintiffs to have mined the coal under the circumstances, where it laid, but how much did it cost the defendant to mine it under the circumstances as you may find them from the testimony;" and refused to give to the jury each of the following instructions, which the defendant requested, to which refusal defendant excepted: "(1) If you find from the evidence that the only place where the vein of coal in question in this case outcrops is at the northwest corner thereof, and you find from the evidence that it is impracticable or expensive to mine and remove the coal by an opening at such place, these facts must be considered as affecting the value of the coal. (2) If you find from the evidence that the defendant mined the coal, believing in good faith it owned it, and that it had reasonable grounds for such belief, and that the defendant had no notice or knowledge of any claim or interest of the plaintiffs, or any of them, therein, then the plaintiffs will be entitled to recover the value of the coal in place before it was disturbed. (3) The value of the coal in place, or on the floor of the room, is its market value there, exclusive of the facilities and conveniences afforded by defendant's passageways, tracks, cars, tipples, and other fixtures, in removing it."

It is perfectly clear that when the entry and tramway constructed by defendant was extended up to and touched the line of the coal in question, no right to use these means of transportation accrued to the plaintiffs below. True, the entry and tramway were there, and that circumstance, as before shown, may have tended to enhance the value of the coal in place; not, however, because the plaintiffs had a right to use them, but because the defendant might want the coal. If the plaintiffs, while their coal was in place, had no right to the use of the facilities for transportation thus belonging to the defendant, how can it be said that such right would accrue to them in case the defendant, in good faith, supposing it had bought the coal, should sever a portion of it? We think such right would not accrue under those circumstances. If not, then the coal thus situated, and considered as a chattel, would possess little, if any, value. Reference to these considerations has been made because they afford an additional illustration of the difficulties that follow an attempt to adjust the rights of these parties by applying to the facts of the case technical rules respecting the measure of damages. Treat the coal as a chattel; hold the acts of the defendant to constitute a conversion of it; and assess the damages as though the owners before and at the moment of its conversion had an unrestricted right to transport it to market, although in fact it was totally inaccessible to them. The verdict in this case shows the injustice that may be thus produced.

The only rational course to pursue in such a case as this, where the defendant is a joint owner of the coal in place with the plaintiffs, and acts upon the bona fide belief that he has acquired by purchase the interest of his cotenant, and has mined it, or a portion of it, is to ascertain the full value of the coal in place at the time it was mined. The severing, removing, screening, and marketing the coal should be treated as one continued transaction, and the defendant charged with its value at the time he began to mine it. This must be determined by considerations, some of which are quite obvious,—as, for instance, quality of the coal; the thickness of the vein, or veins, if more than one; its situation with reference to existing facilities, natural or artificial, for mining and marketing it. Doubtless other circumstances exist that bear more or less strongly on this question of value in place; but among them should not be classed the necessity, if any exists, that the defendant may be under to use these lands, after the coal has been exhausted, in its future operations, for a right to such use of the land would not accrue to defendant upon the exhaustion of the coal, but by purchase only. In Hilton v. Woods, L. R. 4 Eq. 492, the value of the coal in place was made the measure of damages against a defendant who had mined it under a belief he was its owner. He had bought of one who had no title, and, having mined a part of it, an action was brought against him by its owner to restrain further mining, and for an account of the coal already mined. The syllabus reads: "In assessing compensation for coal already gotten by the defendant, the court, being of opinion that he had worked it inadvertently and not fraudulently, held that he was to pay only the fair value of such coal, as if he had purchased the mine from the plaintiff." This rule was applied by Parke, B., in Wood v. Morewood, 8 Q. B. 440. The coal in that case had been mined by the defendant under a claim of title that was held invalid in an action to recover its value. Parke, B., "told the jury that if they found for the plaintiff, they were to determine what damages should be given; that, if there was fraud or negligence on the part of the defendant, they might give as damages under the count in trover the value of the coals at the time they first became chattels, on the principle laid down in Martin v. Porter; but, if they thought that the defendant was not guilty of fraud or negligence, but acted fairly and honestly in the full belief that he had a right to do what he did, they might give the fair value of the coal as if the coal fields had been purchased from the plaintiff." The jury adopted the latter estimate, and found for plaintiff, damages £210 per acre. This rule of damages, in substance, was applied in Jegon v. Vivian, L. R. 6 Ch. 742. We cannot say that the court of common pleas erred in saying to the jury that the value of the coal when severed, less the cost of severance, would be the measure of damages, in case it found the defendant had acted in good faith, because there is, in substance, no difference between the rule as thus stated and a rule which would fix the measure of damages at the value of the coal in place, for the very simple and obvious reason that the value of the coal in place is just equal to its value when severed, less the cost of severance. The statement of the rule as given by the court doubtless was a principal cause which led the jury to find the excessive verdict rendered by it. Because it was not accompanied by sufficient qualification, the jury was suffered to enter the field of conjecture and speculation, without any certain guides by aid of which its conclusions should be reached. Instead of saying to the jury that "in considering the case in this view, gentlemen, you are not to consider how much it would cost the plaintiffs to have mined the coal under the circumstances, where it laid, but how much did it cost the defendant to mine it under the circumstances as you may find them from the testimony," the court should have said that the difficulties attending its mining and transportation by the plaintiffs might be very material in fixing its value. If the principle of compensating them was to be followed, if they were to be given the value of what they had lost, a consideration of all the conditions that surrounded their property, and tending to affect its value, was material. In this connection, and for the foregoing reasons, the request No. 1 should have been given. It reads: "If you find from the evidence that the only place where the vein of coal in question in this case outcrops is at the northwest corner thereof, and you find from the evidence that it is impracticable or expensive to mine and remove the coal by an opening at such place, these facts must be considered as affecting the value of the coal." In the nature of things the value of the coal would be affected by the circumstances recited in this proposition. The second of the three propositions before referred to, which the court refused to give to the jury, prescribed the rule of damages, if the defendants acted in good faith, at "the value of the coal in place before it was disturbed." This rule, as already shown, did not differ in substance from that given, but it was much easier applied to the circumstances of the case than the one given, where compensation is the end in view; and we think the defendant was entitled to have the question of damages considered from that point of view, and that the verdict was materially affected by the refusal of the court to instruct the jury according to the principle there announced.

The last of the three propositions above noted which the court declined to give relates to the conveniences afforded by the entry, tramway, etc., constructed by defendant for mining and removing the coal. The proposition denied to the jury the right to consider these facilities and conveniences at all in fixing the damages. This proposition is too broad, for, to the limited extent already adverted to which these facilities and conveniences might enhance the general value of the coal, they should be considered. The purpose to be kept in view is that of compensating the plaintiffs for all they have lost, and that compensation should be full, for without their consent their property has been taken. And to accomplish that purpose every circumstance that may tend to increase its value should be regarded as material.

Judgment affirmed.

STATE of Ohio, Plff. in Err.,

v.

John M. GARDNER.

(58 Ohio St. 599.)

1. The right to labor and enjoy the rewards thereof is a natural right, which may not be unreasonably interfered with by legislation. Where, however, the pursuit concerns, in a direct manner, the public health and welfare, and is of such a character as to require a special course of study or training, or experience, to qualify one to pursue such occupation with safety to the public interests, it is within the competency of the general assembly to enact reasonable regulations to protect the public against evils which may result from incapacity and ignorance.

2. The business of plumbing is one which is so nearly related to the public health that it may, with propriety, be regulated by law, and reasonable regulations, tending to protect the public against the dangers of careless and inefficient work, and appropriate to that end, do not infringe any constitutional right of the citizen pursuing such calling.

3. But it is essential to the validity of an act undertaking to regulate the business that it shall, in its requirements, operate equally.

4. That part of the act of April 21, 1896, entitled "An Act to Promote the Public Health and Regulate the Sanitary Construction of House Drainage and Plumbing," which requires any plumber, whether master or employing plumber or journeyman, before engaging in the business, to undergo an examination as to fitness, and obtain a license, but permits all members of a firm to pursue the business where one only has procured such license, and all

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to state regulation of plumbers, see also People, Nechameus, v. Warden of City Prison (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 718.

For equal privileges and protection, see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. St. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579.

41 L. R. A.

members of a corporation to pursue it where the manager only has procured such license, does not operate equally upon all of a class pursuing the calling under like circumstances, and is invalid.

(June 21, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Summit County reversing a judgment of the mayor of Akron convicting defendant of violating the statute against engaging in the plumbing business without a license. Overruled.

Statement by Spear, Ch. J.:

May 27, 1897, John M. Gardner was convicted, before the mayor of Akron, Summit county, of a violation of the act of April 21, 1896, entitled "An Act to Promote the Public Health and Regulate the Sanitary Construction of House Drainage and Plumbing" (92 Ohio Laws, p. 263), and sentenced to pay fine and costs. It was shown by the agreed statement of facts that for two years Gardner had been a master plumber, and that for ten years prior thereto had been a journeyman; that he was skilled and competent; that at that time he had worked at the trade and was still working; that on May 7, 1897, he was engaged in that business at Akron, as an individual; that he was not a member of any firm or copartnership or corporation; that on that day he put in a certain sink, sewer, and water connection in Akron; and that at the time he had not procured a license therefor from the board of health of said city. Exceptions having been taken by Gardner to the sentence and judgment of the mayor, the same were presented to the court of common pleas of Summit county, the Honorable Jacob A. Kohler presiding, at the October term, 1897, and, on consideration, that court reversed the judgment of the mayor, holding the act on which the charge was founded to be unconstitutional, and discharged the defendant. To this ruling the prosecuting attorney duly excepted, and, on leave, filed his bill of exceptions in this court for its decision upon the points presented, and to establish the law in any similar case.

Mr. R. M. Wanamaker, for plaintiff in error:

The presumption is always in favor of the constitutionality of a statute. If any doubt existed, the benefit of the doubt is to be given to the law.

Sykes v. Columbus, 55 Miss. 143; Com., Wolfe, v. Butler, 99 Pa. 535; Wilkins v. State, 113 Ind. 514; Central Iowa R. Co. v. Wright County Supers. 67 Iowa, 199; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128, 8 L. ed. 175.

The object and spirit of the statute are clearly within the police power of the state.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 7049 et seq.; People, Nechameus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718; Singer v. State, 73 Md. 464, 8 L. R. A. 551.

If the court should find that the provision of § 2, was in itself unconstitutional, we do not believe that this is sufficient to warrant a holding of unconstitutionality as to the remainder of the act.

Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 29 L. ed. 615; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. State, 29 Ala. 573; State v. Ezenicios, 38 La. Ann. 253; People v. Angerstein, v. Kenney, 96 N. Y. 294; Com. v. Hitchings, 5 Gray, 432; Black, Const. Law, 2d ed. pp. 64, 65; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 197, 209.

Messrs. Musser & Kohler, for defendant in error:

The statute is repugnant to the 1st section of the Bill of Rights, which declares, that among the inalienable rights of the individuals are "those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and seeking and obtaining happiness." This court has construed this section to embrace "the right of man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare."

Palmer v. Tingle, 55 Ohio St. 423.

By the absolute rights of individuals, we mean those which are so in their primary and strictest sense; such as would belong to their persons merely in a state of nature, and which every man is entitled to enjoy, whether out of society or in it.

1 Bl. Com. p. 124.

That this statute interferes with the "inalienable," or "absolute," rights of enjoying liberty and of acquiring and possessing property is clear.

A person living under the protection of this government has the right to adopt and follow any lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, which he may see fit. And as incident to this is the right to labor or employ labor, make contracts in respect thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, to enforce all lawful contracts, to sue, and give evidence, and to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, and convey property of every kind. The enjoyment or deprivation of these rights and privileges constitute the essential distinction between freedom and slavery; between liberty and oppression.

State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. Rep. 34; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 114, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585.

The statute discriminates against the individual in favor of firms and corporations.

The statute discriminates in favor of members of the board of examiners.

State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; State v. Hinman, 65 N. H. 103; State v. Penoyer, 65 N. H. 113, 5 L. R. A. 709; Fick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220; Ex parte Westerfield, 55 Cal. 550, 36 Am. Rep. 47; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 114, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

Spear, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The 1st section of the act in question requires that every person, firm, or corporation, engaged in the business of plumbing, either as master or employing plumber or journeyman, shall first secure a license. The 2d section requires that any person desiring to engage in or work at the business of plumber shall apply to the president of the board of health or other officer having jurisdiction in the locality where he intends to engage in, or work at, such business, and be examined as to his qualifications. But "in case of a firm, or corporation, the examination and licensing of any one member of such firm, or the manager of such corporation, shall satisfy the requirements of this act." Section 3 provides that in every city, and in each town having a system of water supply or sewerage, there shall be a board of examiners consisting of the president of the board of health, the inspector of buildings, if any there be, and three practical plumbers. In localities where the required number of plumbers cannot be secured, such vacancy can be filled by the appointment of reputable physicians. The members shall be appointed by the board of health, and, if there be no such board, then by the health officer. If there be no inspector of buildings, then a practical plumber shall be added. Section 4 directs as to time, etc., of examinations, and that "the board shall examine said applicants as to their practical knowledge of plumbing, house-draining, and plumbing ventilation, and if satisfied of the competency of the applicant, shall so verify to the board of health." The board is then to issue a license. The fee for a master or employing plumber is to be $5 and a journeyman $1, to be renewed annually. Section 5 provides for the appointment by the board of health of one or more inspectors of plumbing, who shall be practical plumbers, their term of office, their compensation, and their duties. The 6th section requires the board of health to prescribe rules and regulations for the construction, alteration, and inspection of plumbing and sewerage placed in or in connection with any buildings, subject to approval by ordinance of the council, and the board shall further provide that no plumbing work shall be done, except in case of repairs or leaks, without a permit. Section 7 prescribes punishment, of a fine from $5 to $50, for any violation, and that the license may be revoked for incompetency, etc., after hearing before the board, subject to appeal to the state board of health. All money derived from examinations shall go to the board of health.

Applying to the case the general presumption that the acts of the general assembly are to be held valid unless the contrary clearly appears, the natural order of inquiry leads to a consideration of the objections urged against this act. Two are deemed worthy of special notice: First, that the statute deprives of liberty and property without due process of law, and that it unreasonably interferes with the natural right of the individual to labor and enjoy the fruits thereof; second, that the statute discriminates against the individual in favor of firms and corporations, and thus imposes unequal burdens upon persons of the same class.

1. Does the act unreasonably interfere with the right to labor? That the right to labor and enjoy its fruits is a natural right, which may not be unreasonably interfered with, is we presume, not denied by anyone. But it is equally well settled that it is one of the rights which may, under some circumstances, be subject to reasonable regulation. This principle finds examples in our laws termed "Sunday Laws," in those acts which regulate apprenticeships, the employment of children in factories and in theatrical and other exhibitions, and in a number of other instances which will readily occur. The acts referred to fall within the exercise of the police power of the state; that power, conceded to reside in the people's representatives, which is rightfully exercised by the regulation of the use of private property, or so restraining personal action, as to secure or tend to the comfort, health, or protection of the community. Further examples of its exercise are found in the laws which require study and examination before one is permitted to practice law, or medicine, or engage in the occupation of a dentist or a pharmacist. If, then, the regulation of the business of plumbing, and the performance of the work of a plumber, may naturally be expected to promote the health of a community, or relieve of dangers to health which otherwise might follow its careless exercise, and the legislation be appropriate to accomplish the object sought, it cannot be said that such regulation interferes with a natural right or unreasonably prevents its exercise.

We are aware that an opinion prevails in some quarters, and has found expression in judicial utterances, that the pursuit of plumbing is a mere trade, which may be easily mastered by anyone possessed of ordinary intelligence; that the plumber is not, nor is he expected to be, an expert in the science of sanitation; and hence his work cannot have such relation to the public health as to justify its regulation.

True it is that the business of the plumber is not ranked with the learned professions, and that much of his work is mechanical merely, calling for the exercise of deftness of the hands rather than the possession of scientific knowledge. Yet a certain degree of training and experience is absolutely necessary to render one intelligent as to the groundwork of his calling as well as competent and skilful in its exercise. He is required to put into our dwellings and public buildings tanks, pipes, traps, fittings, and fixtures for the conveyance of gas, water, and sewage, which require, among other essentials, the keeping out and protection against gases which are destructive of health, and not infrequently of life itself. That it is of the highest importance that the drainage and sewerage of our public buildings and private tenements should be as skilfully planned and executed as the modern standard of science admits would seem not to be open to question. And surely it is reasonable to suppose that one who has been educated to understand the scientific principle necessarily involved in work of this character, and to comprehend the reasons and teachings of experience upon which it is based, and the evil results which may follow neglect to observe it, will be more likely to provide the needful safeguards than one who is ignorant upon the subject. It is conceded by those who doubt the power as well as the propriety of regulation of the work itself that the legislature has power to provide for a careful sanitary inspection of plumbing work, and in this way secure a result, as to its system and sufficiency, which will tend towards the protection of the health of the general public. But it is difficult to perceive a reason for the exercise of the power last referred to which does not as well apply to the other, for, if it be wise to devise means by which a good result may be obtained by careful inspection, it would seem clear that methods which are calculated to reduce the hazards of careless inspection would tend in the same direction. And defects revealed by inspection would, it would seem, be more likely to be remedied if the hands which should be called upon to do the work of correction were guided by minds trained in the science of the business as well as skilled in the mere manipulation of the tools. The question really is, Does the requirement of examination as to the fitness reasonably tend to accomplish the object,—is it appropriate to that end? Not, necessarily, Does it fully accomplish it? nor, Does it make further care in the same direction unnecessary? We think it does so tend and is appropriate to the purpose, and that, therefore, the act does not unreasonably interfere with the right to labor. It is not here contended that the same high qualifications as to scientific acquirement should be required of the journeyman, one whose principal work is manual, as is required of the master plumber, the one who makes the plans and specifications for the work, and passes judgment upon the strength, durability, and quality of the material and the devices for perfect work; nor does that seem to be the import of the act, especially when it is noted that the fee for license charged is in the one case $1 and in the other $5. If the examination be sufficiently searching to show that the journeyman understands the principles governing his trade, and is sufficiently skilful to be able to produce good results, that would seem to satisfy the scope of this act.

This conclusion finds support in the case of People, Nechemus. v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718, and is distinctly sustained in Singer v. State, 72 Md. 464, 8 L. R. A. 551, where it is held that an act which provides that no person shall engage in the business of plumbing, unless such person shall have received from the state board of commissioners of practical plumbing a certificate as to his competency and qualification, and providing a penalty for violation, does not violate, in any sense, the constitutional rights of the workman, but is but the ordinary exercise of the police power of the state. See also Soon Hing v. Crowley, 118 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 1145; Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 623, 81 L. ed. 205; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 258; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 36, 32 L. ed. 585, and Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 628.

2. But a graver objection inheres in the claim that the act imposes unequal burdens upon those of the same class. It will be recalled that the 1st section requires that all who engage in the business of plumbing, whether master or employing plumber or journeyman, shall first secure a license, and that § 2 provides that, in case of a firm or corporation, the examination and licensing of any one member of such firm, or the manager of the corporation, shall satisfy the requirements of the act; that is, a journeyman, for whomever he works, must have a license, and an employing plumber, if not a member of a firm or a corporation, may not pursue the calling without a license. But a master or employing plumber, if he be a member of a firm, another member of which has procured a license, is exempt, although he may be one who has, as a journeyman, applied for a license and failed for incompetency. So, too, in case of a corporation, if the manager is licensed, other members of the corporation may work without a license, without reference to their competency.

Our bill of rights prohibits the granting of privileges to one which are denied to others of the same class, and the imposition of restrictions or burdens upon certain citizens from which others of the same class are exempt, and § 26 of article 2 of the Constitution requires that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state. A statute, therefore, which imposes special restrictions or burdens on, or grants special privileges to, persons engaged in the same business, under the same circumstances, cannot be sustained, because it is in contravention of the equal right which all are entitled to in the enforcement of laws and in the enjoyment of liberty, and in the enjoyment of an equal right in the acquisition and possession of property, and so is not of uniform operation.

The constitutional objection to this statute is that it operates unequally, in that it imposes the burden of an examination and license fee upon certain persons, and exempts others of the same class, pursuing the same business, in the same way. It is contended that the act permits firms and corporations to employ such journeymen as they may choose, whether they be licensed or not, but we are not impressed that it will bear this construction. It is further suggested that the act does not prohibit the doing of plumbing work wholly by apprentices. If it is open to this construction, an additional reason is thus offered for holding it invalid, but the spirit of the act would not, we think, permit this.

Objection is made to the composition of the examining board, on the ground that one who has been appointed a member of the board, although possibly inexperienced and incompetent, may, without any test whatever, continue his occupation. We deem it enough to say, as to this, that the act does not so provide. It would be possible, of course, that one appointed on the board might meet with greater favor from his fellows in his examination than another, but this possibility would not render the act itself invalid. It also might seem, at first blush, that the appointment of a board to examine others as to fitness and qualifications, the members of which may not have themselves been examined as to their qualifications, is a trifle incongruous. It is possible that the law in this respect might be improved. Yet there must be a start some where along the line, and the objection goes to the efficiency of the service rather than to the power of the legislature to authorize the method.

Believing that the act does discriminate unjustly between persons in the same calling, we agree with the conclusion of the learned judge of the court of common pleas, and, for the reasons stated, the exceptions are overruled.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Oregon, ex rel. James McCAIN, Respt.,
v.
Phil. METSCHAN, State Treasurer, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. The owner of a state or county warrant is a necessary party to a suit to enjoin its payment.
2. A demurrer does not distinctly specify the objection under Hill's Anno. Laws, § 68, by stating that there is "a defect of parties plaintiff and defendant."
3. All expenditure of public money at a place prohibited by the Constitution is a misapplication thereof which may be prevented by injunction for the reason that it is against the declared will of the people.
4. The validity of a location by the legislature of a public institution is not beyond review in the courts on the ground that it is a legislative question, under Const. art. 14, § 3, which amounts to a location of such institutions at the seat of government.

5. An insane asylum maintained by the state is a public institution of the state within the meaning of Const. art. 14, § 3, locating such institutions at the seat of government.

(November 9, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County restraining him from paying a state warrant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. C. Moreland for appellant.

Messrs. James McCain, W. W. Thayer, Henry St. Rayner, H. J. Bigger, and W. H. Holmes, for respondent.

It does not appear from the complaint that there are other parties who should have been made parties plaintiff or defendant in the suit, and if it had so appeared a demurrer would not lie unless it also appeared that such party was living.

Bliss, Code Pl. § 411; Brainard v. Jones, 11 How. Pr. 569; Scofield v. Van Syckle, 28 How. Pr. 97.

NOTE.—For injunction against use of money to build a state institution, see also State, Taylor, v. Pennoyer (Or.) 25 L. R. A. 853.

41 L. R. A.

For injunction against illegal appropriations of public money, see also Russell v. Tate (Ark.) 7 L. R. A. 180, and cases cited in note thereto.

The demurrer should state specifically in what the defect consists. It is not sufficient if it merely follows the words of the statute.

Irwine v. Wood, 7 Colo. 477; Kent v. Snyder, 80 Cal. 666; Skinner v. Stuart, 13 Abb. Pr. 442; Baker v. Drury, 29 Wis. 580; Dewey v. State, McCollum, 91 Ind. 182; Marz v. Croisan, 17 Or. 398.

An individual taxpayer, whose burdens would be increased by the wrongful acts of public officers, and where a fraudulent or illegal diversion or misapplication of the public funds is about to be consummated, has such an interest, by reason of the special and peculiar injury he would sustain, as would give him a standing in a court of equity by injunction to restrain such acts and prevent such diversion of the public funds.

Sherman v. Bellows, 24 Or. 553; 2 High, Inj. § 1327.

Courts cannot, and will not, shun the discussion of a constitutional question when fairly presented and the case cannot be disposed of without considering it.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 163; State, Taylor v. Pennoyer, 26 Or. 205, 35 L. R. A. 862.

The appellant, by his demurrer, admits that he is about to, and will, pay out the public money for an unconstitutional purpose, unless he is restrained by order of the court; therefore, the only question that is left for consideration, since the appellant admits that if he is not restrained that he will pay this money under color of the act in question is: Is this a public institution? That it is one of the public institutions contemplated by the constitution, there can be no question.

State, Pennoyer v. Torth, 34 N. J. L. 377.

State officers will be restrained by injunction from the commission of a breach of trust, or from committing some illegal act under color of right, which will affect public rights.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 968, and cases cited; 2 High, Inj. § 1327; Wood v. Brooklyn, 14 Barb. 425; Davis v. American Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 75 N. Y. 869; People v. New York, 32 Barb. 102; Blake v. Brooklyn, 26 Barb. 301; Self v. Jenkins, 71 N. C. 578; Aurora & C. R. Co. v. Lawrenceburgh, 56 Ind. 80; 2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 1573; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 526; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 2d ed. 708, 712; Ellis v. Grey, 6 Sim. 214; Doolittle v. Broome County Supers. 18 N. Y. 155; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116.

Courts will compel public officers to perform ministerial duties.

United States, Goodrich v. Guthrie, 17 How. 809, 15 L. ed. 108; Brashear v. Mason, 6 How. 92, 12 L. ed. 357; Murbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 187, 3 L. ed. 60; United States v. Schurs, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167; Butterworth v. United States, Hoe, 112 U. S. 50, 28 L. ed. 656; United States, Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 32 L. ed. 354; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit, commenced by the district attorney of the third judicial district, in the name of and on behalf of the state, to enjoin the defendant, as state treasurer, from paying a $25,000 state warrant, issued on account of the purchase of certain land in Union county for the site of an insane asylum, under an act of the legislature of 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 186), on the ground that the act in question is void, because in contravention of the provision of the Constitution locating such institution at the seat of government. A demurrer to the information, for the reason that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit, and "that there is a defect of parties plaintiff and defendant," was overruled; and, defendant declining to plead further, a decree was entered as prayed for in the information, and hence this appeal.

In support of the demurrer it is contended that there is a defect of parties defendant, because the owner of the warrant, the payment of which is sought to be enjoined, is not a party to the suit. If this is true, and the objection had been properly taken, it would have been fatal. The rule undoubtedly is that the owner of a state or county warrant is a necessary party to a suit to enjoin its payment, and in some instances the courts, deeming him an indispensable party, refuse to proceed to a final determination of such a suit until he is brought in, although the parties to the record make no objection on that account, or even consent to proceed without him. Anthony v. State, 49 Kan. 246; Buie v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 801; King v. Throckmorton County Commissioners Ct. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 114; State v. Anderson, 5 Kan. 90; Graham v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 436; Ship Channel Co. v. Bruly, 45 Tex. 6; Board v. Texas & P. R. Co. 46 Tex. 316. But in this case, while it is not apparent, from the face of the information, to whom the warrant was issued, or by whom it was owned at the time the suit was brought, the undertaking and order for a preliminary injunction and the decree appealed from all state that it was issued to the present defendant; so that the court would hardly be justified in holding that it affirmatively appears there is a defect of parties. But, however this may be, the demurrer itself is insufficient, both in form and substance, to raise the question. The statute provides that objections apparent upon the face of the complaint, other than such as go to the jurisdiction of the court and that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or suit, are waived, unless taken by demurrer (Hill's Anno. Laws, § 71), and that a demurrer shall be disregarded unless it distinctly specifies the grounds of objection (Id. § 68). At common law a demurrer for want of necessary parties defendant was required to point out, either by name, or in some other definite way, from the facts stated in the bill, those who should have been, and who were not, made parties to the suit, so as to enable the plaintiff to obviate the objection by bringing them in (Story, Eq. Pl. § 548; Dias v. Bouchaud, 10 Paige, 445); and this rule has not been abrogated by the provisions of the Code (1 Rumsey, Pr. p. 383; 1 Van Santvoord, Pl. p. 75; Durham v. Bischof, 47 Ind. 211; Dewey v. State, McCollum, 91 Ind. 178; Baker v. Hawkins, 29 Wis. 576; Kent v. Snyder, 80 Cal. 666; Irwine v. Wood, 7 Colo. 477). Now, the language of the demurrer in this case is "that there is a defect of parties plaintiff and defendant," and this, as we have seen, is insufficient; so that the question is not raised by the demurrer, nor can the case be classed with those in which the courts have refused to proceed to the determination of a suit to enjoin the payment of a state or county warrant without the owner or holder thereof being a party to the suit. As already suggested, the record indicates that the warrant in question was issued to the defendant, and, if so, there is no defect of parties. Dorothy v. Pierce, 27 Or. 373. But, whether it was or not, the questions involved do not depend upon controverted facts for their solution, but are questions of law, which have been ably and exhaustively argued, and can be determined on this appeal without affecting the interests of the warrant holder, should he prove to be other than the defendant, except so far as the doctrine of stare decisis may apply to any future proceeding which may be instituted by him to enforce its payment. The demurrer for want of proper parties was, therefore, properly overruled; and if, by reason of the facts, the warrant holder should have been made a party to the suit, either on his own account or as a protection to the defendant, it should have been made apparent by answer, and, if necessary, the court could have stayed the proceedings until he could be brought in.

It is next contended that the information does not state facts sufficient to authorize a court of equity to interfere by injunction to restrain the payment of the warrant in question, for the reason that it does not appear that the state would be peculiarly injured or damaged by the construction of an insane asylum in eastern Oregon, instead of at the seat of government. The question as to when and by whom a suit can be maintained to prevent the construction of public buildings at a place other than the seat of government has been before this court several times, and it has been held that a private individual cannot do so without showing some special injury to himself (Sherman v. Bellows, 24 Or. 553) and that the same rule applies when a suit is instituted in the name of the state upon his relation (State, Taylor, v. Pennoyer, 26 Or. 205, 25 L. R. A. 862, and 26 Or. 214; State, Taylor, v. Lord, 28 Or. 498, 31 L. R. A. 473). But these cases are not in point in the present controversy. The one first referred to was a suit instituted by a private citizen in his individual capacity, without showing any special injury to himself; and the other was a proceeding against the board of commissioners of public buildings by a private citizen, who undertook to use the name of the state without authority, and was decided on the ground that it was not brought by nor against the proper parties. But this is a suit by the state in its sovereign capacity as the guardian of the rights of the people, instituted by its executive law officer, and can, in our opinion, be maintained without showing any special injury to the state. It is enough that the public funds are about to be applied in a manner prohibited by the Constitution. At common law the attorney general of England could, by information in the name of the Crown, call upon the courts of justice to prevent the misapplication of funds or property raised or held for public use, and, in the absence of statutory regulations, the district attorney in this state is vested with like powers. State v. Douglas County Road Co. 10 Or. 198; Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 239, 23 L. ed. 82. Indeed, the right of the state, through its proper officer, to maintain such a proceeding, would seem to be one of the necessary incidents of sovereignty. Without it the rights of the citizen cannot be protected or enforced in cases where he is unable to act for himself. In a suit by an individual he is required to show some special injury to himself; and when, as in this case, the wrong complained of is public in its character, affecting no one citizen more than another, it is impossible for him to do so, and for that reason he is without remedy, although he may be injured in common with the other members of the community. In such cases the state has a right, by virtue of its high prerogative power, to call upon the courts, through its proper law officer, to protect the rights of its people. And to support a proceeding for that purpose it is sufficient that the grievance complained of is a threatened invasion of the right of the people to determine what disposition shall be made of the public funds exacted from them by the extraordinary power of taxation. Now, every use of such funds in violation of the provisions of the Constitution or organic law must necessarily be of this character. The legislature is but an instrumentality appointed by the state to exercise a part of its sovereign powers. In that capacity it holds the public funds in trust for the people. Except as limited by the Constitution, its action within its legitimate sphere is the action of the people; but, when it undertakes to apply such funds in a manner or at a place prohibited by the organic law, it is not only exercising a power expressly withheld, but violating its trust, and a court of equity will interfere at the suit of the sovereign power to prevent or restrain such an application without being required to show any other injury. It is enough that the threatened disposition is in violation of the will of the people, as expressed in the supreme law of the land. There are some dicta in paragraph 7 of the opinion in the case of State, Taylor, v. Lord, 28 Or. 498, 31 L. R. A. 473, in which the writer thereof did not concur, apparently in conflict with this doctrine; but it was not necessary to a decision of the case, and, after more mature reflection, we are now all agreed that it was erroneous. It is based upon the false premises (1) that the location and construction of an asylum at some place other than the seat of government is not a misapplication of the public funds, unless it appears that the burden of taxation will be increased by so doing; and (2) that the location of such an institution is a legislative question. Manifestly, neither of these positions is sound. The expenditure of public money at a place prohibited by the Constitution is a misapplication thereof, for the simple and very satisfactory reason that it is against the declared will of the people; and the location of a public institution, within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution, is not in any sense a legislative question, but has been determined by the people themselves. A sufficient injury, therefore, to enable the state in its sovereign capacity to call upon a court of equity for re-

It is shown whenever it is made to appear that public funds are about to be applied to a use, for a purpose, or at a place prohibited by the Constitution. We conclude, therefore, that the court has jurisdiction, and the only remaining question is whether the act of the legislature authorizing the construction of an insane asylum in eastern Oregon is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution.

By § 1, art. 14, of that instrument, it is provided that the legislature shall not have the power to establish a seat of government, but that such question shall be submitted to and determined by the people at the polls. And § 8 of the same article declares that, when the seat of government is so established, it shall "not be removed for the term of twenty years from the time of such establishment, nor in any other manner than as provided in the 1st section of this article: provided, that all the public institutions of the state, hereafter provided for by the legislative assembly, shall be located at the seat of government." Although the language of the section quoted is somewhat involved, the evident intention of the framers of the Constitution, and of the people when they adopted it, was to declare that all the public institutions of the state thereafter provided for by the legislature should be located at the seat of government. It amounts to, and is, in effect, a constitutional location of such institutions, and the only power vested in the legislature is to determine the necessity for and the amount of money to be used in their construction and maintenance. Any attempt by that body to expend the public revenue for the erection or maintenance of such an institution elsewhere is a mere nullity, and of no more force or validity than a legislative attempt to change the seat of government. All such institutions must be located at the place designated in the Constitution, although it may now seem desirable to do otherwise, until the consent of the people is obtained in the form of a constitutional amendment. In their sovereign capacity the people have so provided, and no other power can alter or change their decree. That an insane asylum is a public institution of the state, within the meaning of the Constitution, is too clear for argument. In view of the practical construction of that instrument by the legislative and executive departments for almost, if not quite, a quarter of a century, as evidenced by the erection of educational institutions away from the seat of government, it no doubt should now be construed so as to include only such institutions as are strictly governmental in their character. But an asylum for the insane comes clearly within this construction. When, therefore, the legislature assumed to authorize the expenditure of the public funds for the erection of such an institution in eastern Oregon, it attempted to exercise a power expressly withheld by the people, and an injury to the state will be conclusively presumed from a threatened application of the public funds to such a purpose.

It follows that the decree of the court below must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Rehearing denied August 17, 1896.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas ROBB

v.

PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY FOR INSURANCE ON LIVES AND GRANTING ANNUITIES, Appt.

(196 Pa. 458.)

1. A depositor's procurement of a rubber stamp which will make a fac simile of his signature, of which the bank has no notice, does not, in the absence of his negligence, make him liable for the loss occasioned by payment of his deposit on forged checks made by one who had unlawfully and clandestinely obtained the stamp and used it in forging checks.
2. The question of the negligence of a depositor in keeping a rubber stamp which will make a fac simile of his signature, and which is unlawfully obtained and used in forging checks, is for the jury.

(Williams, J., and Sterrett, Ch. J., dissent.)

(July 21, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, NOTE.—As to the duty of a drawee to know the drawer's signature, see note to Germania Bank v. Boutell (Minn.) 27 L. R. A. 635.

41 L. R. A.

for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a bank deposit which had been paid out on forged checks. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Superior Court by Presiding Justice Rice, which was as follows:

"This was an action to recover the amount of a bank deposit. The defense was that the money had been paid out on checks purporting to be drawn by the plaintiff. The jury have determined by their verdict that the signatures were forged, and no question is raised as to the correctness of this finding. But there was evidence that the signatures were made by a third person, by the unauthorized and criminal use of a rubber stamp which the plaintiff owned and kept in his safe. Upon this evidence a novel and interesting question is raised. The defendant's first proposition is that if a depositor, without the knowledge of his bank, has a rubber stamp made, which is a substantial fac simile of his bank signature, he cannot hold the bank responsible for a loss which occurs by reason of the unauthorized signing by a third person of the depositor's signature to a check by means of this stamp. It will be observed that this proposition assumes that the depositor is responsible for the loss, although there is no negligence on his part in the manner of keeping the stamp. If he keep it as securely as possible,—if, for example, he should keep it securely locked in the best modern safe, to which no other person has access, and a burglar should break into the safe, and use the stamp to affix the depositor's signature to a check, and the bank should honor the check, the loss would fall on the depositor. This is not an extreme statement of the defendant's position. But it is not unlawful for a man to have a rubber stamp by which a fac simile of his written signature may be affixed to papers. Nor is it so extraordinary a thing as to warrant a bank in presuming, without inquiry, that a depositor will not possess nor use such a stamp for any purpose. If the owner place it in the hands of a third person for the purpose of affixing his signature to certain papers, and he, without authority, use it to forge the signature of the owner to checks, it might well be argued that the bank honoring the checks should not be responsible for the loss. In such a case there might be propriety in applying the maxim that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he should suffer who by his own acts occasioned the confidence and the loss. In the case supposed, the loss would be traceable to the act of the owner of the stamp in the selection of the agent to use it. In the case in hand, it was traceable, proximately, to the criminal act of a third person in the use of the stamp, and more remotely to his tortious, if not criminal, act, in possessing himself of it against the will of the owner. In the former case there would be an element of negligence in the care of the stamp, while in the case in hand (looking at it from the present standpoint) there is none. These distinctions are well illustrated in Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 86 Pa. 80, where it was held that if the owner of stock intrusts the certificates, with blank powers of attorney, to an agent, for safe keeping, who fraudulently transfers them to a third party, who, in turn, without the knowledge of the fraud, had them transferred to himself, the owner cannot recover from the corporation for the loss. This decision was put upon the ground that the owner had been negligent, and should not be permitted to shift from herself to the corporation the loss which resulted from the dishonesty of her own agent. Said Sharswood, J.: 'Where one of two parties, who are equally innocent of actual fraud, must lose, it is the suggestion of common sense, as well as equity, that the one whose misplaced confidence in an agent or attorney has been the cause of the loss shall not throw it onto the other.' As Judge King has well expressed this principle in Bank of Kentucky v. Schuykill Bank, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 248: 'The true doctrine on this subject is that, where one of two innocent persons is to suffer from the tortious act of a third, he who gave the aggressor the means of doing the wrong must alone bear the consequences of the act.' Neither statement of this important principle sustains the defendant's proposition now under discussion; and, in the case cited, Judge Sharswood conceded that had the certificates of stock been lost or stolen from the possession of the owner, the corporation would have been responsible for permitting the fraudulent transfer. See also Biddle v. Bayard, 13 Pa. 150.

41 L. R. A.

'We are referred to the decisions relative to the alteration of negotiable instruments by filling up blanks left by the maker. But in these cases there is an element of either negligence or of agency. It is a well settled principle in the law of negotiable securities that if the maker of a bill, note, or check issues it in such a condition that it may be easily altered without detection, he is liable to a bona fide holder who takes it in the usual course of business before maturity. 'The maker ought surely not to be discharged from his obligation by reason or on account of his own negligence in executing and issuing a note that invited tampering with.' Brown v. Reed, 79 Pa. 370, 21 Am. Rep. 75, citing Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa. 59; Garrard v. Hadden, 67 Pa. 82, 5 Am. Rep. 412; Zimmerman v. Rote, 75 Pa. 188. According to these decisions, the question is not whether the maker so drew the paper as to make it possible to alter it without detection, but whether he used ordinary care and precaution. In Leas v. Walls, 101 Pa. 57, 47 Am. Rep. 699, the instrument was a printed blank note, with an open space for the insertion of the amount; the word 'dollars' being printed at the end of the space. The successful alteration of the amount from 'eight' to 'eighty' was made possible by the maker's omission to close up the space so that not even a single letter could be inserted. It was held, however, that the question whether the maker was negligent was clearly a question of fact for the jury. 'In these circumstances, to hold that the defendant was so palpably guilty of negligence, in not taking sufficient precautions against forgery, as that the jury could not be permitted to determine the question, and the court must determine it as a matter of law, would be equivalent to holding that the maker of a negotiable instrument must so execute it as to prevent the possibility of alteration in any event. Such a doctrine would be monstrous, and contrary to every legal principle.' The rule that where one of two innocent persons must suffer loss, that party who did the act which was the occasion of the loss ought to bear it, is often misapplied to cases where the two persons are not equally without fault, but where one owes a duty to the other to do, or to refrain from doing, a particular thing, and has failed in the performance of that duty. But a man's responsibility, even for his negligence and that of his servants, must end somewhere. As was truly remarked in Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 298, 27 Am. Rep. 658, there is possibility of carrying an admittedly correct principle too far. It may be extended so as to reach the reductio ad absurdum so far as it applies to the practical business of life. The doctrine as to remote and proximate cause, as held in Pennsylvania, had been thus stated in many cases: 'In determining what is proximate cause, the true rule is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence,—such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act.' Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa.

293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; South Side Pass. R. Co. v. Trich, 117 Pa. 390; Swanson v. Crandall, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 85. The same rule, and for a stronger reason, applies when it is sought to hold one liable for the consequences of a lawful and non-negligent act. To apply the maxim invoked here, without regard to the question whether the act was the remote or proximate cause of the injury, would establish a degree of responsibility 'quite beyond any legal limitations which have yet been declared.' This would be a striking illustration of the danger of carrying an admittedly correct principle too far.

"A bank is bound to know the signature of its depositor; and, if it pays out the money on a forged check, it cannot charge the depositor with the amount, but, as against him, must bear the loss. It may be conceded that the relation of the depositor to the bank implies a duty on his part to subject it to no extraordinary risks with regard to payment of his checks, which he may avoid by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. But we cannot assent to the proposition that it is negligence per se for him to have in his possession a harmless and useful thing, and one lawful for him to have, but which, in the hands of a thief breaking into his house or his safe, may be used to forge his signature. If he commits the use of it to an agent, selected by himself, or leave it in such a place as to invite the use of it for illegitimate purposes, there would be plausibility in the contention that he should be deemed to contemplate such use as one of the natural and probable consequences of his act. But, where he has used due care in securing it against unlawful use by others, it cannot be said that his mere possession of the thing was the proximate cause of the mispayment of the money to one who unlawfully possessed himself of it, and used it to commit a forgery.

"The defendant's second proposition is that, even if the court did not err in leaving the question of negligence to the jury, the instructions given by the court were insufficient and erroneous and laid down a wrong standard of negligence. In order to discuss this proposition properly, it will be necessary to state some of the undisputed facts: In 1893, the plaintiff, as president of a corporation, had occasion to send out a large number of invitations to a banquet, and, in order to save himself the labor of writing his name so often, had a rubber stamp made which would make a facsimile of his signature. For a time the stamp was kept in the company's office, but after he resigned the presidency it was sent to his private office, which he rented from a gentleman who had the adjoining office. With this office, he was entitled to the services of an office boy of about sixteen years of age. For about nine months he employed this boy for errands and messages, including the sending of him to bank to draw money on checks. He never had occasion to doubt the boy's honesty. When the rubber stamp was returned to the plaintiff from the corporation office, he placed it in a compartment inside of a fire-proof safe. He locked this compartment, and put the key in a drawer in the safe, behind some papers, and covered it up. He then locked the drawer, and put the key in another unlocked drawer in the safe. He then locked the safe, and put the key in a little box, which he put in a wooden drawer or box, and this was kept on top of another safe. The plaintiff's surmise was that the office boy had watched his moves, found where he kept the safe key, opened the safe, and rummaged around until he found the stamp, and with it signed the two checks. Assuming this theory to be correct it turned out that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's precautions to guard the stamp, it was not kept where it would be absolutely inaccessible to others. It follows that an unqualified affirmance of the defendant's second point would have been equivalent to binding instructions to find for the defendant. But, for the reasons given in our discussion of the first proposition, the defendant was not entitled to such instructions. The practical effect would be to hold the owner of a rubber stamp up to the same standard of responsibility as the owner of a vicious animal; in other words, to hold that he is bound to keep the stamp, at all hazards, where a trespasser or a thief cannot possibly get possession of it and use it. This is not the standard of his responsibility to the bank in which he is a depositor, or to the public. He is not an insurer against its unlawful use, but it may be conceded that he is responsible for the consequences of his negligence in keeping it. He is bound to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent man. To adopt the language of the learned trial judge, was it put away in such a manner as was, in view of all the probabilities of the case, sufficient to protect the stamp from being improperly used? This was a question of fact for the jury, and was fairly submitted. There are cases in which the court can determine that omissions constitute negligence, but they are exceptional,—those in which the precise measure of duty is determinate; the same under all circumstances. What constitutes negligence when the standard shifts, not according to any certain rule, depends upon the facts and circumstances developed at the trial, and cannot be determined by the court, but must be submitted to the jury. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Jones, 128 Pa. 308, and cases there cited. But complaint is made that the court set up an erroneous standard of negligence. We do not think so. The illustration used by the learned judge in his answer to the second point was not intended as a standard to govern the jury. He evidently had in mind the rule that is laid down in the cases heretofore cited, relating to the alteration of a negotiable instrument in which the maker has carelessly left blanks 'so that it may be easily altered without detection.' Following the rule laid down in those cases, he told the jury that, under the facts of the supposed case, the owner of the stamp would clearly be guilty of negligence, and the bank would not be liable for the loss. But, recognizing the distinctions pointed out in Leas v. Walls, 101 Pa. 57, 47 Am. Rep. 699, he did not undertake to decide that, under the actual facts of the case on trial, the plaintiff had or had not exercised the precaution of a prudent man in guarding the stamp against improper use. The defendant has no just cause to complain of the submission, or of the manner of the submission, of that question to the jury. Judgment affirmed."

Messrs Frank P. Prichard and John G. Johnson, for appellant:

If a depositor without the knowledge of the bank has a rubber stamp made which is a fac simile of his bank signature, and by means of that stamp a check is executed not distinguishable by ordinary inspection from genuine checks, and is paid by the bank in the exercise of due care and without any negligence, the loss must fall on the depositor.

Where one of two innocent persons is to suffer from the tortious act of a third, he who gave the aggressor the means of doing the wrong must alone bear the consequences of the act.

Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 86 Pa. 80; Bank of Kentucky v. Schuylkill Bank, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 248.

This principle has been repeatedly applied to the relations between a depositor and a bank.

Orr v. Union Bank, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 518, 29 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 1; Grant, Banks & Banking, 17; Morse, Banks & Banking, 2d ed. p. 831; Van Schaack, Bank Checks, p. 119; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 568, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253; Gurrard v. Haddan, 67 Pa. 82, 5 Am. Rep. 412; Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B. N. S. 82; United States v. National Ech. Bank, 45 Fed. Rep. 168; Burnett Woods Bldg. & Sav. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 3 Ohio N. P. 84.

Mr. Samuel Gustine Thompson, for appellee:

A paying teller having the most moderate experience should have been able at a glance to have discovered these forgeries, especially with his attention necessarily directed to the different handwriting in the bodies of the checks.

It is very clear from the testimony that these forgeries were not committed by simply stamping the checks, as indicated by appellant's argument. It indicates also that the stamp could not alone have been used to accomplish the forgeries, and this cuts up the roots of that argument by establishing that the stamp, if used, was not alone the agency in accomplishing the result. The appellee did not know, nor is it known now definitely, that the forgery was committed by using in some way a stamp.

There can be no escape from liability where a payment is made upon a forgery so skillfully executed as to almost defy detection, much less can there be any where the difference is marked and clearly made manifest.

The mere fact that a depositor has a stamp or check book which someone, by a criminal act, gets possession of and uses to commit forgery, will not make him liable for the loss consequent upon the forgery.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 480; Belknap v. National Bank, 100 Mass. 376, 97 Am. Dec. 105; Leas v. Walls, 101 Pa. 64, 47 Am. Rep. 699; Brown v. Reed, 79 Pa. 372, 31 Am. Rep. 75; Zimmerman v. Rote, 75 Pa. 191; Mackintosh v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 398.

McCollum, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to recover the amount of a deposit made by the plaintiff with the defendant.

It may be conceded, for the purposes of this appeal, that the deposit was paid out by the latter on checks purporting to be drawn by the former, and that the checks were forgeries. In the trial of the case in the court of common pleas, and on the appeal to the superior court, the principal defense to the action was that inasmuch as the plaintiff had, without notice to the defendant, procured a rubber stamp which would make a fac simile of his signature, he must sustain the loss occasioned by an unauthorized use of the stamp by a person who had unlawfully and clandestinely obtained possession of it, and by means of it perpetrated the forgeries on which the deposit in question was paid out by the defendant. The trial court being of the opinion that it was not unlawful for the plaintiff to have such a stamp produced for his own proper use and convenience, refused to hold that his procurement of it without notice to the defendant constituted a bar to his suit for the money paid out on the forged checks. It held, however, that, if the possession of the stamp by the forger of the checks was attributable in any degree to the negligence of the plaintiff in the care of it, such negligence would relieve the defendant from responsibility for the loss, but that the question whether he failed in the performance of his duty in this respect was for the jury, and determinable on the testimony affecting it. This view of the case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon an appeal was taken to the superior court, which, in an opinion by its learned president, affirmed it. The case is now before us on the allowance of an appeal from the judgment of the superior court, and the defense made to the plaintiff's claim is simply a reiteration of the defense made in the trial court and on the appeal, which resulted in the decision we are asked to reverse.

We cannot regard the production of the rubber stamp, on the plaintiff's request, as an unlawful act; nor can we assent to the claim that his procurement and possession of it without notice to the defendant relieved the latter from liability for the amount paid out on the forged checks. An act which is in and by itself entirely lawful, and which had no relation to the plaintiff's deposit with the defendant, did not impose upon the former the duty of notifying the latter of the performance of it; and, if such a duty was not created by the plaintiff's procurement of the stamp, the loss occasioned by the use of it in the perpetration of the forgeries did not necessarily fall upon him. If, however, the forger obtained possession of the stamp through the negligence of the plaintiff, the responsibility for the loss occasioned by the forgeries would not rest upon the defendant, if its cashier exercised due care in the inspection of the checks. It is needless to inquire on this appeal whether such care was exercised by the cashier, because the question is not raised by the assignments. The principal questions considered in the court of common pleas and in the superior court were whether the plaintiff's possession of the stamp, without negligence in the care of it, and without notice to the defendant that he had it, relieved the latter from liability for the money paid out on the forged checks, and, if it did not, whether the evidence in the case was sufficient to authorize a finding by the jury that the plaintiff, as owner and custodian of the stamp, had taken proper precautions to prevent an unlawful appropriation or use of it. It seems to us that these questions were rightly determined by the courts referred to, and that the reasons given for the conclusions arrived at by them were sound. The clear, concise, and convincing opinion of the learned president of the superior court fairly includes and disposes of the material questions in the case, and upon it we unhesitatingly rest an affirmance of the judgment. The fourth assignment alleges error in the instructions to the jury on the question of negligence, but a careful consideration of the charge has satisfied us that there is no error in it.

Judgment affirmed.

Williams, J., dissenting:

I dissent earnestly from this judgment, and from the reasons given in support of it in the opinion just filed. It puts an additional burden upon the defendant bank, not resulting from the commercial contract between it and its depositor. When an account is opened at a bank by the deposit of money, the depositor leaves his genuine signature with the banker for his guidance and protection in the payment of checks. When checks are presented bearing this signature, they must not be refused; but if the signature is a forgery, no matter how skillfully it is done, or how difficult of detection, they must not be paid. The contract which the commercial law raises upon the deposit of money with a banker is that the deposit shall be paid out only to the depositor or his order. Payment upon a forged check is, therefore, no payment, and in no way affects the depositor. But if the depositor executes a check, and for any reason leaves it on his table, where it is found by another, who fills it up, presents it at bank, and receives payment upon it, this is a good payment by the bank, and the loss is that of the depositor, for the check was signed by him. If, instead of leaving his check upon the table, the drawer had deposited in a drawer within his safe, locked the safe, and put the key away in a box in his office, precisely as Mr. Robb did with his stamp, nevertheless if a clerk or employee had taken the key from the box, unlocked the safe, abstracted the check and used it for his own benefit, its payment by the bank would have bound the depositor. His loss would have been due, not to the failure of the banker to distinguish his genuine signature, but to the crime of his employee, who had obtained it surreptitiously. One of two innocent persons must suffer because of the payment of the check, and the law determines that the loss shall fall upon him whose act or omission made the loss possible. If the depositor had not signed his check and left it where it was possible for a criminal to appropriate it, palpably the loss could not have happened. This principle rules the case now before us. It is conceded that Mr. Robb caused the stamp to be made with which this check was executed. He says he only intended to use it for a particular purpose, but it is perfectly apparent that he intended his signature produced by this stamp should be recognized as his by the friends and acquaintances who should receive it, as it certainly would be. The signatures made by it as they are presented to us in the paper books, when placed by the side of admittedly genuine signatures, are indistinguishable from them. Now, this stamp belonged to him, was made under his direction, and for his use. It was intended for the rapid production of his signature. It was in his possession. He was bound to take care of it as safely as of his own signature made by himself with his own hand. He was bound to do this at his peril. There is no question of reasonable or sufficient care in the case. As with the signed check, so with this stamp signature. When he put it in his safe, and left the key where it was possible for anyone to get it, and so gain admission to the safe, he exposed himself to the loss that might follow, and that loss is his. He seeks in this action to put his own proper loss upon the bank that paid the checks, by alleging that the checks were forged. But they were not forged. The signature was his. He prepared it. All that can be said is that he did not affix it to the checks. But he had prepared it so that anyone could affix it to a check or any other paper, and when so affixed it was absolutely impossible to tell that it had not been done by him. There would be some justification for his claim upon the bank if he had advised the banker that he had prepared such a signature that might by a possibility be clandestinely gotten from his possession, and given him an impression made by it, and pointed out, if he could have done so, how it might be distinguished from his signature as made by a pen; but he did nothing of the kind. If the bank is not protected by his signature made by means of his own private stamp, if it is bound at its peril to know and discriminate between his signature made with his pen and that made with his private stamp, then he has, by the use of the stamp, very greatly increased the responsibility and peril of the bank without so much as giving it notice or affording the slightest intimation of the necessity for additional vigilance in scrutinizing checks purporting to bear his signature. Upon every rule of commercial law, and upon every consideration of equity and good conscience, the judgment entered in the court below in this case should be reversed, and judgment should be entered here in favor of the defendant.

Sterrett, Ch. J.: I fully concur in the foregoing dissenting opinion.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

HERMAN BROTHERS, LINDAUER &
COMPANY et al.

v.

KATZ BROTHERS et al.,
and
SPRINGFIELD FIRE & MARINE IN-SURANCE COMPANY et al., Appts.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. The word "occupants" in the provision of a policy making it void for change of interest, title, or possession, "except change of occupants without increase of hazard," is not limited to real property, but applies to personal property also.
2. The levy of attachments and executions subject thereto on property without increasing the hazard does not avoid an insurance policy which provides that it shall be void for change of interest, title, or possession, except change of occupants without increase of hazard.
3. An increase of the risk or hazard is not shown by the mere fact of the levy of attachments and executions upon property.

(December 10, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant insurance companies from a decree of the Chancery Court for Dyer County in favor of complainants in a proceeding brought to reach the proceeds of certain insurance policies upon property destroyed while under attachment by complainants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. M. Marshall, Stokes & Stokes, Harwood & Tyree, and Deason & Rankin, for appellants:

By the issuance and levy of the attachment writs, and the issuance and levy of the justice's execution upon the stocks of goods by the sheriff and constable, and the taking possession of said goods by said officers under said levies, and the appointment of a receiver, the policies were rendered void under their terms, provisions, and stipulations.

The word "occupant" in its legal meaning is limited and peculiar when applied to personal property, if, indeed, at the present time it applies to personal property at all.

Rapalje & Lawrence, Law Dict. p. 892; 4 Kent, Com. 12th ed. pp. 255, 256.

By legal process the possession passed into the hands of others, and these companies are entitled to the contract they made. This contract of insurance was personal to the insured.

Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Speed, 273.

Title by execution is classed along with other titles, and is recognized as an independent title, and it is such a title as is provided for in the policy.

Anderson, Law Dict. p. 1084; Brown v. Allen, 8 Head, 439; Bradley v. Keesee, 5 Coldw. 226, 94 Am. Dec. 246; Connell v. Scott, 5 Baxt. 598.

NOTE.—On the question of the applicability of the word "occupants" to personal property, there seem to be no precedents for the above decision except those cited therein.
41 L. R. A.

The levy of an execution upon personal property in this state avoids an insurance policy inhibiting change of title without the consent of insurer.

Pennebaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 603.

In Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 144 N. Y. 195, 26 L. R. A. 592, the Walradt Case, 186 N. Y. 875, while not in express terms criticised, is in our judgment very greatly modified, if not in effect overruled.

Drennen v. London Assur. Corp. 20 Fed. Rep. 658.

The proof in this case shows that there was such an increase of hazard that the policies were avoided under the stipulations and conditions contained in the policy.

The proof in the record discloses the fact that there is a custom among the insurance companies not to write insurance upon property that was held by officers under attachment and execution levies.

It is competent to prove this particular custom of the companies to show the increase of hazard.

Kirby v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 18 Lea, 343.

The character of the fire forfeited the policies.

Messrs. John Ruhm & Son, for appellees:

The proviso relied on is only a condition subsequent. It should be construed strictly against the right of forfeiture.

McNutt v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 45 S. W. 61; 1 Phillips, Ins. 78; May, Ins. § 174; 2 Beach, Ins. § 1809; 2 Biddle, Ins. §§ 1810, 1829.

The policy was prepared by insurers who are presumed to have had their own interests primarily in view; hence, when a meaning is the least doubtful it should be construed most favorably to the insured who had nothing to do with the preparation thereof.

Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 818; Matthews v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 154 N. Y. 449, 39 L. R. A. 483.

The words "occupant" and "occupancy" are, without qualification, applied and used with reference to personal property by the great law commentators and by lexicographers.

2 Bl. Com. chap. 26, §§ 400 et seq.; Bouvier, Law Dict. title Occupancy and Occupant; Broom, Legal Maxims, § 855; Kent, Com. pt. 5, Lecture 34; Walradt v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 186 N. Y. 875; Driscoll v. German-American Ins. Co. 74 Hun, 158; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 144 N. Y. 195, 26 L. R. A. 591; Wood v. American F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 888; Rickerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 818; Matthews v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 154 N. Y. 449, 39 L. R. A. 483.

The levy of an attachment does not divest the debtor of the property levied upon, and the levy does not change the condition in the title.

Green v. Shaver, 8 Humph. 189; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan, 208.

Nor was there a change of title by the subsequent dependent levy of the writs of fi. fa. by the constable.

Even in the case of an absolute levy of an execution, the general property and title re main in the execution debtor, which he may sell. The officer has only a special or limited property.

Overtun v. Perkins, 10 Yerg. 329; Tyler v. Duntun, 1 Tenn. Ch. 361; Evans v. Barnes, 2 Swan, 292; 2 Freeman, Executions, § 268; Herman, Executions, §§ 172, 174; Clark v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 342, 58 Am. Dec. 44; Hammet v. Queens Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 72, 41 Am. Rep. 1; note to Morrison v. Tennessee F. & M. Ins. Co. (Mo.) 59 Am. Dec. 304; Rice v. Tower, 1 Gray, 426; May, Ins. § 274, note 4.

The distinction as to effect of levy under fl. fa. and attachment attempted to be drawn in some of the Tennessee cases is mere obiter.

Pennebaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 594; Green v. Shaver, 8 Humph. 189; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan, 208; Bogges v. Gamble, 8 Coldw. 154.

Even if the levy of the executions had been absolute, there is nothing in the Tennessee decisions which would change the common-law doctrine that the general property and title remain, after levy of fl. fa. in the debtor who may sell the same, and that the officer acquires merely a special or limited property.

Philadelphia F. & L. Ins. Co. v. Mills, 44 Pa. 241, 84 Am. Dec. 437; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Berger, 42 Pa. 285, 82 Am. Dec. 504; May, Ins. §§ 247, 249.

It cannot be that the constructive levy of an execution by another officer can change the status of the property while it is held by the sheriff under an attachment.

Tyler v. Duntun, 1 Tenn. Ch. 361; James v. Kennedy, 10 Heisk. 616; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Findlay, 6 Whart. 483, 37 Am. Dec. 430; Rice v. Tower, 1 Gray, 426.

By the levy of the attachments complainants had acquired rights which the consent of Katz could not defeat.

Carpenter v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 1 Lea, 202.

The mere levy of an execution, without more, would not result in such an increase of the hazard as to take the case out of the exception.

Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Findlay, 6 Whart. 483, 37 Am. Dec. 430.

Meurs. Draper & Rice and Nathan Cohn also for appellees.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainants, who are creditors of the defendants Katz Bros., filed these bills in the chancery court of Dyer county, alleging that defendants were fraudulently disposing of their property, and caused attachments to be levied upon a stock of goods in defendants' storehouse, in the town of Dyersburg, Tennessee. On the same night the attachments were levied, to wit, December 8, 1895, Katz Bros. procured judgments, aggregating about $3,800, to be rendered against their firm before a justice of the peace of Dyer county, in favor of certain relatives and friends. Instantly executions were issued upon these judgments, which, by consent of the sheriff, who had levied the attachments, were levied upon the same stock of goods subject to the prior levy. On December 9, 1895, on motion of complainants in the attachment cases, a receiver was appointed to take charge of the stock of merchandise; and sell the same. About 2 o'clock A. M. on December 10, 1895, and before the receiver had taken charge, the entire stock of goods was destroyed by fire. Katz Bros. were insured against loss by fire on this stock of merchandise in the aggregate amount of $10,500. Complainants thereupon filed amended and supplemental bills in these causes against the defendant insurance companies, attaching the policies, and seeking to subject their proceeds to the satisfaction of their claims. Defendant insurance companies denied any liability on said policies, and, among other defenses, relied principally upon the following clause contained in each of the policies, to wit: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if any change, other than by the death of the assured, take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject-matter of insurance (except change of occupants, without increase of hazard), whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of the assured, or otherwise." The contention made on behalf of the insurance companies is that the levy of the attachments and executions invalidated the policies, under the express provisions of this clause. The chancellor was of opinion that the levies of the attachments and executions did not render the policies void, and did not cause any increase of hazard, and that defendant insurance companies were liable on said policies to complainants to the extent of their respective debts, and so decreed. The chancellor further found that, when the fire occurred, the key to the storehouse in which said stock of merchandise was stored was still in the possession of the sheriff. The court further found that the stock of goods was worth more than $10,500, the amount of the insurance. Defendant insurance companies appealed, and have assigned errors.

The second assignment is that the chancellor erred in holding that the levy of the attachments and executions by the sheriff and constable, and the possession of said officers under their levies, and the appointment of a receiver, did not render the policies void under their terms, provisions, and stipulations. It will be observed that each of the policies provides that if any change take place in the interest, title, or possession, whether by legal process or judgment or otherwise, the entire insurance shall be void, excepting, however, a change of occupants, without increase of hazard. The argument is that the levy of the attachments and executions worked such a change in the title, interest, and possession of the subject-matter of the insurance as avoided the policies. It is argued that the limitation contained in the clause "except change of occupants without increase of hazard" refers alone to cases where real estate is the subject of insurance, as the word "occupant" clearly indicates. It is said, further, that if the word "occupant" may properly be applied to personal property as the subject of insurance, it can only limit the words "possession and interest," and not the word "title." It is further insisted that, if the word "occupants" be construed to limit the entire phrase "interest, title, or possession," the proof shows an "increase of hazard," which, by virtue of said clause, avoids the policy. It is not true, as assumed by counsel for appellants, that the word "occupant" has reference always to real estate. As shown by counsel for appellees, the words "occupant" and "occupancy" are frequently used in connection with personal property by commentators and lexicographers. Blackstone, in chapter 26, bk. 2, pp. 400 et seq., under the head of Of title of things personal by occupancy, says: "Whatever movables are found, upon the surface of the earth, or in the sea, and are unclaimed by any owner, . . . they belong . . . to the first occupant or fortunate finder." In a subsequent part of the chapter, "accession" is used where title of realty by "occupancy" is discussed. And in the same chapter, on page 399: "A property [or title] in goods and chattels [movable] may be acquired by occupancy, which . . . was the original and only primitive method of acquiring any property at all." See also Bouvier, Law Dict. title of Occupancy and Occupant, and also, Broom, Legal Maxims, 355. Richardson's Dictionary defines "to occupy:" "To take or seize; to hold or keep possession of; to possess." Standard: ". . . to have in possession and use. . . ." Webster defines "occupant" thus: "One who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession or is in possession of a thing." Worcester: "One who has the actual use or possession of a thing."

The case of Walradt v. Phenix Ins. Co. 186 N. Y. 375, presents a striking analogy on its facts, and the questions of law involved, to the case now in judgment. The suit was upon an insurance policy which contained a clause identical in terms with the one at bar. The court said, viz.: "We must first determine what the parties to the contract intended when they made use of the terms 'change in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance' [whether by legal process, etc.] . . . The change of possession produced by the levy and the action of the sheriff remains to be considered. The policy is not avoided, by the terms of the condition referred to, by every change of possession that may take place in the property. A change of occupants without increasing the hazard is excepted from the operation of the condition, and does not invalidate the insurance. The learned counsel for the defendant argues that the exception in the condition does not apply when personal property is the subject of the insurance, and does not apply in this case, as there cannot be an occupant of goods in a store, consistent with the ordinary and appropriate use of language. The general term has shown that the word occupant is sometimes used with reference to personal property. When the subject of insurance is a ship, a building not attached to the soil, so as to become part of the realty, or other things of like character [as, for instance, a tent, or a chair, or a sofa], the term 'change of occupants' would [it will be admitted], be appropriate. When it is used in reference to goods in a store its fitness is not [at first glance] so [appropriately] apparent. But as the words of the policy were used to meet all cases we have no right to say that the exception in the condition was not designed to apply when goods were the subject of insurance, merely because the term 'change of occupants' does not seem to be the most natural and appropriate. A large part of the contracts of insurance now entered into relate to personal property, and to hold that such an important exception as that now under consideration, to the broad terms of a condition, had no application to such contracts, would make the rights of the parties turn upon the literal meaning of a word [and to the meaning most in use.] What the parties intended was that a change in the control and dominion over the property should not avoid the policy, unless such change rendered the risk more hazardous. A change in the possession of a store of goods must, moreover, refer to the place where the goods are situated. In this case they are described as situated in a brick store. The place where the goods were kept, though not the subject of insurance, was an important element in the risk, and it was natural and proper for the parties to provide against a more hazardous change in the occupancy of that place, and hence the parties agreed that in case the possession of the goods changed that fact alone would not avoid the policy unless the occupancy of the place where they were was also changed in such a manner as to become more hazardous. In this way the words of the exception can be given their ordinary and natural meaning and the exception itself can have effect. It is only in a plain case that we are warranted in saying that the parties have used language not intended to have any application to the subject matter of the contract." See also Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 144 N. Y. 195, 26 L. R. A. 591; Wood v. American F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 882, where the Walradt Case is approvingly cited. We think that case presents a conclusive answer to the argument submitted by counsel for insurance companies, and no further discussion is needed on this branch of the case.

It is argued, however, by counsel for appellants, that whether the proviso applies to real or personal property, or both, in no event could it refer to or limit the preceding word "title," and that a change of title, whether the risk is increased or not, would terminate the policy under this clause. The argument is that, under the decisions of this court, the levy of an execution invests the levying officer with the title to personal property,—citing Pennabaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 603; Brown v. Allen, 3 Head, 429; Bradley v. Keesee, 5 Coldw. 226, 94 Am. Dec. 246; Connell v. Scott, 5 Baxt. 598; Freeman, Executions, § 268. It is well settled in this state that the levy of an attachment does not divest the debtor of the title to the property, but simply creates a lien upon it. Green v. Shaver, 3 Humph. 139; McKnight v. Hughes, 4 Lea, 525; Puckett v. Richardson, 6 Lea, 58; Montgomery v. Renlhofer, 85 Tenn. 668; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan, 208; Connell v. Scott, 5 Baxt. 598.

It is insisted by counsel for complainants, in an argument evincing much research and ability, that the levy of an execution on personal property vests in the officer a special or limited property, and does not divest title out of the debtor. It is argued that this is so because the debtor may sell the property subject to the right of possession in the officer; and further, that the mere payment of the debt by the debtor operates as a discharge of the execution, and causes the possession to revert instantaneously to the debtor, without a decree or conveyance. Overton v. Perkins, 10 Yerg. 329; Tyler v. Dunton, 1 Tenn. Ch. 861; Pennabaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 602. It is said in several of our cases that, by the levy of an execution, the title of personal property levied on passes to the officer, and that this is so because a seizure to the value of the debt prima facie satisfies it, and discharges the debtor. Brown v. Allen, 8 Head, 429; Bradley v. Keesee, 5 Coldw. 226, 94 Am. Dec. 246; Conell v. Scott, 5 Baxt. 598; Evans v. Barnes, 2 Swan, 298. Other cases speak of the possession of the levying officer as a limited or special property in the goods. Malone v. Abbott, 8 Humph. 533; Evans v. Barnes, 2 Swan, 298; Caruthers, History of a Lawsuit, Martin's ed. § 831. A careful review of the cases will probably show that the terms were used interchangeably, and to mean that the title thus acquired by the sheriff was not absolute, but only for the purpose of satisfying the execution debt. However this may be, the levy in this case was subordinate to the attachment levy, and contingent upon any surplus arising after the satisfaction of the attachments. The levy of the executions was merely constructive, and did not change the status of the property or its custody or control. Since, then, these levies were dependent, and made with the consent of the sheriff to reach a contingent surplus, there is no merit in the contention that the policies were thereby vitiated.

It is next insisted by appellants that there was in fact an increase of risk or hazard, and therefore the policies became void, notwithstanding the exception. It suffices to say the record fails to show there was any increase of the risk. The situation of the stock of goods after the levy was identical with that surrounding it prior to the levy. In the Waldrat Case, 186 N. Y. 875, the New York court, upon a state of facts precisely like that in the case at bar, even to the removing of the insured from the store, and the locking up of the store, and the taking possession of the keys, by the sheriff, submitted to the jury the question whether, under the circumstances, the condition of the goods was more hazardous after the levy than before. The jury answered the question in the negative. And in an early case, decided by the Pennsylvania supreme court in 1841 (Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Findlay, 6 Whart. 483, 37 Am. Dec. 430), that court found that the sheriff had levied the execution in his hands upon a stock of goods, had put the execution debtor out of doors, had fastened the shutters, locked the doors, and took and kept the keys. Says the court in the latter case: "From the evidence it appears . . . that the goods remained precisely in the same situation after the seizure that they were in before. . . . It is said that the sheriff . . . fastened down the windows, closed the window shutters, and locked the doors, . . . and having done this took and kept the keys. . . . The fire . . . happened in the night, long after the usual time of closing stores and ceasing to do business in them, indeed after all the citizens had gone to bed; so that the storehouses were really in the same situation at the time of the fire that they doubtless would and ought to have been had no seizure been made. . . . [The sheriff had the keys, and was away; but that] is immaterial, because it had nothing to do with producing the fire, and could not in the least degree prevent the goods from being destroyed by, or saved from, it; for the doors could have been forced open, had it been thought that it would have availed anything, in as short a time without the keys, as they could have been opened by the use of them. . . . There is not . . . ground, so far as the evidence goes, upon which any increase of risk can well be imagined."

Other questions of fact were disposed of orally, and the decrees of the chancellor affirmed.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

James W. HARRISON et al., by Next Friend,

v.

Robert TURNBULL, Exr., etc., of M. R. Walton, Deceased, et al.

(95 Va. 721.)

1. An infant is not prevented from asserting his rights by next friend against a decree settling an estate in which he is interested whenever he sees fit to do so by Code, § 3424, allowing him to show cause against such decree within six months after he becomes of age.
2. An infant can impeach a decree in a suit to which he was a party only upon a ground which would invalidate it in case of any other person, such as fraud, collusion, or error.
3. Unborn heirs of a person against whose estate an action is brought to establish claims to which living heirs of the same class are made parties will be regarded as parties by representation, and will be bound by the decree rendered as effectually as if they had actually been parties to the action.

4. A bill to impeach a decree establishing claims against a decedent's estate and ordering the sale of real estate to pay them is fatally defective if the persons who purchased the land under the decrees are not made parties.
5. There is no error in dismissing a bill as to a defaulting party if the defense of the party who appeared went to the foundation of the right to recover upon the case stated.
6. A decree establishing the claims against a decedent's estate, and ordering sale of real estate to pay them, is a complete bar to an action against the executor for a devastavit, and against the claimant to compel a return of the property so long as it remains in force, when the action is brought by heirs of decedent who were parties to the former suit in person or by representation.

NOTE.—For power of court to cut off the proprietary rights of persons not in case, see also Kent v. Church of St. Michael (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 331; Loring 41 L. R. A.

v. Hildreth (Mass.) 40 L. R. A. 127, and Gavin v. Curtin (Ill.) 40 L. R. A. 776.

(March 31, 1896.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Brunswick County in favor of defendants in an action brought to hold an executor liable for a devastavit, and to compel a return of property to the estate by one who had established a claim against it. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. P. Buford and H. R. Pol-lard, for appellants:

The bill presents a case for equitable relief, and therefore the decree sustaining the demurrer is erroneous.

It clearly charges a devastavit as to the fictitious debt of $2,282.68 established and enforced in favor of Sallie E. Harrison.

Neither at common law, nor particularly under the Virginia statute, Code 1887, § 2665, making real estate of decedent assets for the payment of debts, is a devastavit by an executor limited to waste of personality, but embraces any act or omission in violation of his duty by which personality or realty is subjected to unjust or illegal loss or charges.

3 Minor, Inst. pp. 583, 584, 635; Black, Law Dict. p. 363; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (18) p. 548; chap. 9, § 531; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 346; Adams, Eq. p. 254.

Independently of Code, § 2665, the will, by devising the property "after the payment of debts," and appointing the executor "to settle" the estate, charges the debts upon the land as well as upon the personality, and makes the land equitable assets in the hands of the executor for the payment of debts. The realty being thus "confided" to him by the will, he is liable for any devastavit thereof.

3 Minor, Inst. p. 635; 2 Matthew's Dig. 577, note 5, and cases cited.

As to personality it is not necessary that the executor had manual possession in order to charge him with a devastavit.

Nelson v. Cornwell, 11 Gratt. 747; Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 877; Lacy v. Stamper, 27 Gratt. 42; 8 Minor, Inst. p. 635.

Turnbull, as executor, was charged with the duty of protecting the rights of your petitioners. Therefore, in assuming the adverse position of attorney for creditors he transcended "the scope of his powers" (Walker v. Grayson, 86 Va. 337; Arrington v. Arrington, 116 N. C. 170), and is liable to your petitioners for all losses resulting therefrom.

Lingle v. Cook, 32 Gratt. 262; Nelson v. Cornwell, 11 Gratt. 724.

This is true, as a rule of law, without regard to whether or not the executor was guilty of fraud or other actual misconduct.

Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581.

Turnbull should be made to account for the value of the personal estate alleged in the bill to be $1,000, which should have been applied to the payment of the just debts outstanding against the estate of M. R. Wallton, and which would have been so applied if he had not so grossly misrepresented to the court the amount of such debts.

41 L. R. A.

Personality is primarily liable for the payment of debts.

8 Minor, Inst. pt. 1; Elliott v. Carter, 9 Gratt. 541; 2 Minor, Inst. 3d ed. p. 516.

And it is the executor's duty to protect the realty.

Beall v. Taylor, 2 Gratt. 532, 44 Am. Dec. 398; Dandridge v. Minge, 4 Rand. (Va.) 397.

Turnbull is liable also for the personal property, or the value thereof, because of his failure to take security therefor of the life tenant. Hawthorne v. Beckwith, 89 Va. 786.

It is questionable at least whether your petitioners have any recourse against the purchasers of the land, who may be protected as innocent purchasers.

Walker v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636; Zirkle v. McOus, 26 Gratt. 517; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 694; Durrett v. Davis, 24 Gratt. 302.

Even if it be possible for your petitioners to eventually recover the land, a court of equity will not subject your petitioners, who are innocent, to the hardships and expense of such a course with its uncertain prospects.

Ruth v. Owens, 2 Rand. (Va.) 507; Davis v. Newman, 2 Rob. (Va.) 664, 40 Am. Dec. 764.

As to the debt of $2,282.68 they are entitled to a decree also against Sallie E. Harrison, under their prayer for "general relief," and it was therefore error to dismiss their bill.

Beverley v. Brooke, 2 Leigh, 426; Beall v. Silver, 2 Rand. (Va.) 401; Sands, 2d ed. Suit in Equity, p. 29; Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 358.

Turnbull should be required to refund the fees, commissions, and costs which were paid him out of the assets of the estate for services rendered creditors in fraud of the estate.

Gurnee v. Bausmer, 80 Va. 867; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Manoni, 76 Va. 802.

Under the statute and by the former practice infants may show cause, not only within six months after attaining their majority, but during their minority also.

Sledge v. Boone, 57 Miss. 222; Newland v. Gentry, 18 B. Mon. 666; Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 736; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 696, notes; Ralston v. Lahee, 8 Iowa, 17, 74 Am. Dec. 291.

The bill clearly sets forth facts and circumstances which make a case of fraud, entitling the appellants to relief.

Story, Eq. Pl. § 426; Keran v. Trice, 75 Va. 690; Meek v. Spracher, 87 Va. 168.

Infants, like adults, may invoke this jurisdiction and seek such relief.

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 164; McLemore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 58 Miss. 514; Ralston v. Lahee, 8 Iowa, 17, 74 Am. Dec. 291.

It is a mistake to suppose that they are bound to wait until they have attained their majority before they can do so.

Newland v. Gentry, 18 B. Mon. 666; Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 736; Sledge v. Boone, 57 Miss. 222.

The doctrine of res judicata is never applied to protect a fraudulent decree.

Smith v. Cuyler, 78 Ga. 654; Cordova v. Hood, 17 Wall. 1, 21 L. ed. 587; Arrington v. Arrington, 116 N. C. 170; Walker v. Grayson, 86 Va. 337; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 910; Weber v. Reid, 11 How. 437, 13 L. ed. 761; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed.

98; Wells, Res Adjudicata, § 499; Pearce v. Olney, 20 Conn. 544; Wierich v. De Zoya, 7 Ill. 885; Kent v. Richards, 3 Md. Ch. 392; Smith v. Lowry, 1 Johns. Ch. 820; De Louis v. Meek, 2 G. Greene, 55, 50 Am. Dec. 491; Newland v. Gentry, 18 B. Mon. 666; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 692.

It is not necessary that there should have been any actual fraud in the transaction, but the rule which forbids it rests upon the broad principle of public policy which precludes persons occupying these fiduciary relations from representing conflicting interests that may tempt them to disregard duty and lead to injury on one side or the other.

Gooch v. Peebles, 105 N. C. 411; Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 502, 25 L. ed. 1008; Arrington v. Arrington, 116 N. C. 170; Spinks v. Davis, 32 Miss. 152; Beall v. Taylor, 2 Gratt. 582, 44 Am. Dec. 398; Dawingerfeld v. Smith, 88 Va. 81; Elliott v. George, 23 Gratt. 738; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 169, and notes; Dandridge v. Minge, 4 Rand (Va.) 397.

The bill clearly sets forth conduct and circumstances which entitled the appellants to the relief prayed on the ground that the appellee, Turnbull, was guilty of a devastavit of the estate of his testatrix, Mary R. Wallton.

2 Lomax, Exrs. 898; Hargrave v. Tindal, 1 Bro. Ch. 136, note; Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. Ch. 185; Batson v. Lindegreen, 2 Bro. Ch. 94; Pope v. Gwynn, 8 Ves. Jr. 28, note; Bailey v. Elkins, 7 Ves. Jr. 819; Shiphard v. Lutwidge, 8 Ves. Jr. 26; 2 Rob. Pr. old ed. 83.

The administrator is bound to make as good defense as he can or ought to make, and if he fails in his duty, he will be responsible upon his bond for the consequences.

Black's Law Dict. p. 363; 3 Wms. Exrs. 360; Reynolds v. Zink, 27 Gratt. 29; Dees v. Freeman, 87 Ga. 588; Anderson v. Northrop, 30 Fla. 612; Re Saunders, 4 Misc. 23.

The facts coupled with the executor's knowledge, charged in the bill, constituted a sufficient allegation of fraud and collusion.

Keran v. Trice, 75 Va. 698.

For fraud and collusion adults and infants, and for error of law or other cause infants, may proceed by original bill.

Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 736; Anderson v. Woodford, 8 Leigh. 828.

The allegations of the bill constituted a direct attack upon the former decree, and if in the opinion of the court it was necessary to set aside the former decrees in order to grant the relief prayed, the court should set aside the former decrees under the prayer for "general relief."

Adams, Eq. pp. 308, 309; 1 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 265, 266.

And especially since the plaintiffs were infants whose rights were peculiarly within the custody of courts of equity.

If a special prayer that the former decrees be set aside were necessary, the trial court should have allowed an amendment, and not have dismissed the bill absolutely.

1 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 265, 266.

Mr. George Mason, for appellees:

Every matter about which complaint is now made was a subject of litigation in the former suit, and was therein brought to the attention of the court, and after all of them were adjudicated and settled a final decree was entered and the suit removed from the docket. This being the case those matters are res judicata.

Diamond State Iron Co. v. Alex. K. Rarig & Co. 93 Va. 595.

These matters being res judicata, they cannot be again inquired into and made a subject of litigation in a collateral way, as is attempted in this case.

2 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 787, 788, and cases cited in note.

It will not be contended that the bill in this case is a bill of review. It conforms to none of the special requirements of such a bill.

Diamond State Iron Co. v. Alex. K. Rarig & Co. 93 Va. 595.

It is not an original bill in the nature of a bill of review.

2 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 787, 788, and cases cited in note.

It makes no difference that the appellants were infants, for an infant is as much bound by a decree as an adult, and can only get rid of its operation in the same way and for the same causes that will avail an adult.

Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 530; Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 688.

Fraud or collusion in the decree must first be inquired into before the propriety of the decree can be investigated.

Keran v. Trice, 75 Va. 698.

None of the facts charged in relation to payments are brought home to the knowledge of the appellee, R. Turnbull.

There is a conspicuous absence of the necessary direct charge of such knowledge.

1 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 427; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 653, note 3; Story, Eq. Pl. § 452, note a.

In no event can the executor be held liable for the personal estate. It did not come into his hands and the will did not intend that it should.

Hawthorne v. Beckwith, 89 Va. 786.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the appellants, the children of Sallie E. Harrison, against their mother and Robert Turnbull, in his own right and as executor of M. R. Wallton, deceased, for the purpose, as stated by the appellants in their petition for appeal, of charging the executor with the devastavit of the estate of his testatrix, occasioned by his misconduct in the case of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor and others.

The suit of Harrison and wife was instituted by the father and mother of the appellants against the appellee Turnbull, as executor of Mrs. Wallton, and three of the appellants, all that were then in being, to ascertain the indebtedness of Mrs. Wallton's estate, and to make sale of so much of the real estate left by her as might be necessary to pay the debts.

A history of the proceedings in that case, and the misconduct of the executor relied on to show that he was guilty of a devastavit, are set out in the bill in this case, and with it are filed copies of portions of the record in that case, viz., the bill and its exhibits, the answer of the guardian ad litem, the decree of the court directing one of its commissioners to take an account of the debts of the estate and their priorities, and to report what portion of the real estate could be sold to pay off the debts, extracts from that commissioner's report, the decree confirming it, and directing the sale of the land, the report of sale made by the commissioner to sell, the decree to sell enough of the personal estate to pay the residue of the debts remaining unpaid after exhausting the proceeds of the sale of the land upon certain conditions, the report of the commissioner showing the payment of the debts of the estate and the completion of his duties as commissioner, and the final decree approving that report, and striking the case from the docket.

The appellee Turnbull, in his own right and as executor, demurred to the bill, and upon a hearing of the case upon the demurrer the court dismissed the bill without prejudice to the rights of the appellants, under § 3424 of the Code.

From that decree this appeal was taken.

If, as the appellants contend, the court sustained the demurrer to their bill because they could not bring suit to assert their rights until they became of age, it erred. Section 3424 of the Code, allowing an infant, within six months after he becomes of age, to show cause against a decree or order in certain cases, does not prevent him from asserting his rights while an infant, by a next friend, as soon as he sees fit to do so. Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 738-737; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 178; Judge Carr in Tennent v. Patton, 6 Leigh, at page 208.

The grounds relied on here by the appellee to sustain his demurrer are that the bill and exhibits in this case show that all matters about which complaint is now made were adjudicated and finally settled in the case of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor, etc., and that these matters being res judicata, they cannot be inquired into, and made the subject of litigation in a collateral proceeding, as is attempted in this case.

The injuries complained of, and for which the appellants seek compensation, resulted from, as is alleged, the gross negligence and misconduct of the executor in allowing the claims of Mrs. Harrison to be established as a debt against the estate of her mother, when in fact there was nothing due her, and from injuries arising from the subjection of the real estate primarily to the payment of that and other debts due from the estate, instead of first subjecting the personal estate to their payment. The bill and exhibits in this case show that both the validity and amount of Mrs. Harrison's debt, and the propriety of subjecting the assets of the estate to the payment of the debts in the manner in which they were subjected, were necessarily adjudicated and settled in that case.

There can be no recovery in this case against the executor without showing that the debt asserted by and adjudged to be due to Mrs. Harrison in that case was not due her, in whole or in part, or without showing that the manner in which the real estate was decreed to be and was subjected in that case was erroneous. The proceedings in that case not only bar a second suit between the same parties or their privies upon the same claim or demand, but they also bar a suit between the same parties or their privies upon a different cause of action if it appears that the issue presented in the latter suit was involved and determined in the former suit. Shumate v. Fauquier County Supers, 84 Va. 574; Bigelow v. Winsor, 1 Gray, 299; 1 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 253-258. See also Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 387; Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 35, 17 L. ed. 755; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 851, 24 L. ed. 195; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, § 17.

Such a judgment or decree is conclusive upon the parties to it until reversed upon appeal, or until set aside or annulled by some proceeding instituted for that purpose.

And it is well settled with us that an infant, as a general rule, is as much bound by a decree against him as a person of full age. The law recognizes no distinction between a decree against an infant and a decree against an adult. And therefore it is that an infant can impeach only upon the grounds which would invalidate it in the case of another person, such as fraud, collusion, or error. Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 517, 518; Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. at p. 671; 1 Minor, Inst., at pp. 507, 508.

It is insisted that only those appellants who were in being and were parties to that suit are bound by the proceedings in that case.

Mrs. Wallton had devised and bequeathed all her property, both real and personal, after the payment of her debts, to her daughter, Mrs. Harrison, for life, and at her death to her children then surviving and the heirs of such of them as might be dead. The children of Mrs. Harrison in being at the time the suit of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor, etc., was brought were made parties defendant, and answered the bill by their guardian ad litem.

The general rule certainly is that no person is bound by a judgment or decree except those who are parties or standing in privity with others who were parties. But there are exceptions to the rule, of equal authority with the rule itself. Baylor v. Dejarrette, 18 Gratt. at page 164. It would certainly be unreasonable and unjust that a party having a charge upon an estate affecting the whole fee should be delayed or embarrassed in enforcing his claim because of limitations by way of remainder to persons whom it might be impossible or improper to make parties to the cause. To obviate this difficulty, the doctrine of virtual representation has been introduced by which certain parties before the court are regarded as representing those coming after them with contingent interests. Baylor v. Dejarrette, 13 Gratt. 166.

It was said by Lord Redesdale in Giffard v. Hort, 1 Sch. & Lef. 386, 407, 403, that where all the parties are brought before the court that can be brought before it, and the court acts upon the property according to the rights that appear, without fraud, its decision must, of necessity, be final and conclusive. And this statement of the law is cited with approval by Judge Lee in Baylor v. Dejarrette, 18 Gratt. 164, and by Judge Moncre in Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 651, 690, 98 Am. Dec. 698, where the question is fully discussed.

The appellants who were not in being when the suit of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor, etc., was instituted, and whom it was impossible to make parties to that suit in person, must be regarded as parties to it by representation, and are as effectually bound by the decrees rendered in that cause as if they had been in being, and made parties to it in person.

The counsel of the appellants also insist that if it be necessary to set aside and annul any of the decrees in the case of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor, etc., in order that the executor may be held responsible for the devastavit charged, the averments of the bill in this case and the prayer for general relief are sufficient (treating it as an original bill in the nature of a bill of review) to enable the court to set aside and annul the decrees in that case which would bar a recovery in this.

In all suits instituted for the purpose of impeaching transactions on the ground of fraud, it is essential that the nature of the case should be distinctly and accurately stated. It must be shown in what the fraud consists, and in what manner it has been effected. Where it is sought to set aside or annul a regular judgment or decree upon the ground that it was obtained by fraud practised upon a party or upon the court during the trial, or in prosecuting the suit, or in obtaining the judgment or decree, it is necessary, it is said, that the bill should state a case which shows actual fraud. Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, p. 553; Patch v. Ward, L. R. 8 Ch. 208. See also Milford & T. Pl. & Pr. pp. 190, 191; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93; and that the suit should be brought for the express purpose of impeaching the decree, otherwise it will be regarded as a collateral attack (2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 336; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 147j; Milford & T. Pl. & Pr. pp. 190, 191).

It is clear that this bill was not filed for the express purpose of impeaching the decrees rendered in the former case.

Neither do the statements of the bill make a case of actual fraud. This is not contended. The claim is that it does show a case of constructive fraud, and that this is sufficient.

Whether it is essential, in order that a judgment or decree may be set aside and annulled for fraud, that the suit shall be brought expressly for that purpose, and that the bill shall state a case of actual fraud, it is unnecessary to decide or express any opinion upon in this case, as the bill is fatally defective as a bill for that purpose in another respect.

None of the purchasers of the lands sold in that case, or those who held under them, are made parties to this suit, except Mrs. Harrison. The persons whose right would or might be affected by setting aside the decrees complained of were necessary parties to any suit brought for that purpose, or in which such relief could be granted. Story, Eq. Pl. § 420; Harwood v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. 17 Wall. 78, 21 L. ed. 558; 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 620, etc.

We are of opinion that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer of the executor to the bill, and dismissing the cause as to him.

Neither did it err in dismissing it as to Mrs. Harrison, although she failed to appear and make defense. The defense of the executor, her codefendant, was not personal to him. It went to the foundation of the appellants' right to recover upon the case stated.

The bill did not make a case entitling the appellants to relief. It showed that the validity of Mrs. Harrison's debt had been established in the case of Harrison and wife against Wallton's executor, etc., to which suit they were all parties. The court having jurisdiction both of the subject and the parties, the decrees in that case were a complete bar to a recovery against Mrs. Harrison as well as the executor, as long as they remained in force. See Cartigne v. Raymond, 4 Leigh, 579, 580; Terry v. Fontaine, 88 Va. 451; Aiken v. Connelley (Va.) 24 S. E. 909, 910.

The decree complained of must be affirmed.

Cardwell and Riely, JJ., absent.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

Hyman HILLER et al., Appts.,

v.
I. N. ELLIS et al.

(72 Miss. 701.)

1. The device of an agreement to pay interest on a loan from the time appli-

Norm.—Effect of preferring an usurious debt in an assignment for creditors.

- I. General doctrine stated.
- II. Limitations of this note.
- III. Debt of assignment rendered void.
- IV. Preference of actual debt sustained, but usury rejected.
- V. Preference of usurious debt sustained generally.
- VI. Who may, and who may not, urge the usurious character of the debt preferred.

1. General doctrine stated.

The common law, both in England and America, permits a debtor, whether in failing circumstances or not, to make, in the application tion is made for it, when the loan is not consummated until some time afterwards, cannot be resorted to for the purpose of preventing the reservation of interest in advance at the highest legal rate from the date to the maturity of the notes from being usurious.

2. An assignment for benefit of creditors will be annulled by the preference of his property and effects to the payment of his debts, the preference of one creditor over the others. He may likewise create a trust for the payment of one creditor in preference to the others. The private motives of the debtor cannot annul the preference so long as nothing improper is resorted to; but any acts savoring of fraud or collusion inuring to the benefit of the debtor or to the illegal advantage of the preferred creditor, as by fictitious increase or creation of the debt preferred, will generally be held void for the reason that "the wilful, deliberate introduction of fictitious debts, or the intentional exaggeration of the amount of real debts, in which debtor and creditor participate, therein of an usurious debt, where there is a statutory right of action to recover back the entire interest when usury has been paid.

3. The release by creditors of personal claims against the assignor in consideration of a preference in their favor in an assignment for benefit of creditors does not entitle the assignee to hold the assigned property as a purchaser for value for the satisfaction of such claims if he was a party to a fraudulent preference which annulled the assignment.

4. The release by a creditor of all personal claim against an assignor for creditors who makes a preference in favor of such creditor will not make the creditor a purchaser of the assignment if the assignor was hopelessly insolvent and the release was executed to uphold the assignment, and not to procure either it or the preference.

5. One who refers to a statement by a commercial agency for his standing for the purpose of procuring credit is guilty of fraud which will entitle the seller to rescind if the condition there shown is infinitely better than in truth it is, although he did not give the information to the agency.

6. A sale made on the faith of a report furnished by a commercial agency cannot be rescinded for fraud if it is not shown that the buyer ever made any statement of his standing to the agency, or referred the seller to such report.

(February 13, 1896.)

A PPEAL by cross petitioners from a decree of the Chancery Court for Copiah County setting aside a general assignment by Charles Hiller for the benefit of his creditors. Reversed in part. Affirmed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

is feigning a consideration, and a fraud, which will vitiate the assignment." (This rule is quoted from Perry Ins. & T. Co. v. Foster, 58 Ala. 502, 518, 29 Am. Rep. 779.) The rule is sometimes applied to the entire deed of assignment, sometimes only to the preferred creditor on the holding that an assignment to creditors of unconnected debts is the same as several deeds of assignment, and may therefore be void as to one and not void as to all, and sometimes only to the fraudulent part.

The rule permitting a preference, though well established, has not been generally favored, especially when the debtor making the preference is in failing circumstances. Many statutes expressly prohibit preferences; some by making the deed of assignment void, some by making the preference void and applying it to the benefit of all the creditors, and some by providing that a preference or security made or given within a stated time before the making of a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors shall inure to the benefit of all the creditors.

In the states not having prohibitory statutes the common-law rule still generally obtains, and in some of the states having prohibitory statutes the prohibition is only enforced when a statutory assignment is made for the benefit of creditors, and not when a common-law assignment is made in such state.

II. Limitations of this note.

The provision for the payment of an usurious debt by a deed of assignment creating a trust may be in fraud of creditors, and may be void because of an intent to cheat, hinder, and de-

Mr. J. S. Sexton, for appellants:

The assignment was fraudulent in fact. Selleck v. Pollock, 69 Miss. 870.

The assignment should be set aside in toto, because the debt preferred to the Merchants' & Planters' Bank is usurious.

H. Wetter Mfg. Co. v. Dinkins, 70 Miss. 885.

The assignment cannot be upheld as to the bank and Mrs. Klotz, on the ground that these parties released the assignor from personal liability. This was a mere attempt to circumvent the law and get the benefit of the principle announced in—

Anderson v. Lachs, 59 Miss. 111.

Mr. R. P. Willing, Jr., for appellants
Marshall Field & Co. and J. Kyle & Co.:

The goods sold by these appellants were obtained through Hiller's fraud, and they had the right to rescind the sales.

Klein v. Rector, 57 Miss. 538.

The assignee is not a purchaser for value, and the goods may be recovered from him.

Frank v. Robinson, 65 Miss. 162.

The false representations need not be made directly to the seller. It is sufficient if they are made to a mercantile agency through which they are communicated.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 297, 298, and authorities cited; Eaton, C. & B. Co. v. Avery, 88 N. Y. 81, 88 Am. Rep. 889.

Messrs. R. N. Miller and George S. Dodds, for appellees:

The creditors seeking rescission cannot prevail: (1) Because there was no fraud in the purchase of the goods; (2) because, admitting the fraud, the assignee is a bona fide purchaser. If Hiller's fraud were fully admitted, it could in no manner affect the rights of the assignee, because, at the time of the execution of the as-lay, on the same principle that a fictitious debt, or a debt fictitiously increased in amount, is a fraud upon creditors; but only cases in which the increase is by usury will be considered herein.

Likewise, deeds or deeds of trust based on an usurious consideration may be void in whole or in part upon the same general principle, though they are not deeds of assignment for the benefit of creditors generally. Such cases may be relevant, but they do not come within the scope of this note.

The note will therefore not include any of those analogous cases in which conveyances other than deeds of assignment for the benefit of creditors are rendered void in whole or in part by usury, nor any of those cases in which deeds of assignment for the benefit of creditors are rendered void because of fraudulent increase of the debt by other means than usury.

Claims asserted in statutory insolvency, or bankruptcy proceedings are distinguishable from those provided for by an express and voluntary trust in an assignment for creditors, and are therefore not included.

III. Deed of assignment rendered void.

It is held in HILLER v. ELLIS that making a preference of an usurious debt in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors will cause the deed to be declared void when attacked by creditors on the ground of fraud. The reasoning upon which this decision is based is that the assignee, in paying the sum directed, pays it by virtue of the deed by the force of which he holds, which deed neither he nor the court can signment, the bank and Mrs. Klotz each released Hiller from personal liability in consideration of being preferred. This makes them bona fide purchasers.

Craft v. Bloom, 59 Miss. 69, 43 Am. Rep. 351; Anderson v. Lachs, 59 Miss. 111; Soule v. Shotwell, 52 Miss. 236.

Cooper, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 10th day of October, 1893, Charles Hiller, an insolvent merchant, made a general assignment of his property to the appellee Ellis, for the benefit of his creditors. Preferences were given to Messrs. Miller & Dodd, the attorneys by whom the instrument was prepared, for their fees, and also, in the order named, to F. Dillard for the sum of $250 and interest, to the Merchants' & Planters' Bank of Hazlehurst for the sum of $5,000 and interest, to Mrs. Hannah Klotz for the sum of $5,500, to Hyman, Hiller, & Co. $9,100, and after the payment of said sums, the assignee was directed to distribute any remaining funds to all other creditors pro rata. The assignee filed his petition in the chancery court of Copiah county as required by law, and gave bonds as receiver. Many creditors of Hiller, soon after the execution of the assignment, exhibited cross-petitions against the assignee, seeking to vacate the assignment as fraudulent and void on the grounds that it was made for the purpose and with the intent of defrauding creditors; that some of the preferred debts were simulated; that the debt to the Merchants' & Planters' Bank was composed in part of usury, and upon other grounds not necessary to be stated. The firm of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, exhibited their cross-petition, charging that add to or subtract from, and, as it is not susceptible of complete execution without depriving creditors of their legal rights, it is rendered void because of the usury. The law requires that in assignments by insolvents, and especially in preferential assignments, the utmost good faith to creditors must be observed; and further, as the insolvent debtor claims to act under the law, the law will try his action by strict rules, and confine him to travel along a narrow path, and will lend him no assisting hand if he departs therefrom.

Where, however, in the same state the deed of assignment expressly directs the assignee, though in obscure terms, to pay the amount really due, purged of usury, the fact that the amount stated to be due in the deed of assignment is usurious because of mistaken and usurious calculations will not invalidate the deed, but the preference named will stand for the sum which is legally due. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. v. Dinkins, 70 Miss. 835.

It is said in Selleck v. Pollock, 69 Miss. 870, which is a case not relevant except as stating the doctrine of the courts of the state in the construction of assignments, that, like the moral law in its entirety, "an assignment, however meritorious in the main, however free from censure in its chief provisions, however perfect except in some small particular, is condemned for that."

IV. Preference of actual debt sustained, but usury rejected.

The case of Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615, is often cited as authority in the general con-among the assigned property was a lot of goods bought from them by the assignor, and for which the purchase price had not been paid; that Hiller procured the sale of said goods to be made to him on credit, by falsely and fraudulently representing himself to be solvent, and the owner of a large amount of property, and by falsely and fraudulently understating and concealing the amount of his liabilities; that the assigned goods were in the hands of the assignee, and capable of identification. They prayed that the purchase of said goods by Hiller be declared fraudulent, and the goods returned to them. A like cross petition was exhibited by the firm of Kyle & Co. to recover certain goods they had sold to Hiller. It was admitted by the assignee that the goods mentioned in the cross-petitions of Marshall Field & Co. and Kyle & Co. came to his hands, and were identified by the claimants; but the fraudulent purposes of Hiller were denied. Under agreement they were sold, and the proceeds yet remain in the hands of the assignee, subject of the order of the court. On final hearing the court found all the issues joined on the several cross-petitions in favor of the assignee, and dismissed the petitions, and from the decrees the cross-petitioners appeal.

In considering the questions presented for decision it is only necessary to state such facts as are relevant to the points on which the cause turns. The record is voluminous, and contains much evidence not necessary to be stated in the view we take of the cause. One of the preferred debts—that due to the Merchants' & Planters' Bank—is evidenced by five promissory notes, each for $1,000, dated at different times, and which, when executed, the bank discounted at the rate of 10 per cent per struction of usury laws, and it is directly in point in this connection. It holds that where the assignor has expressly directed the payment of a debt founded upon an usurious consideration the usurer is entitled to be paid all that is fairly due to him, although he could not have recovered the amount in a suit at law against the assignor himself; but that he will not be entitled to any more than is honestly due to him, for the reason that the court will not lend its aid, either directly or indirectly, to enable the usurer to obtain payment of an usurious premium, the receipt of which would subject him to a penalty under the laws against usury. The court holds further, however, that a general provision for the payment of debts will not include debts founded upon an usurious consideration. To entitle a usurer to claim under the deed of assignment there must be a clear indication in it that the debts founded upon an usurious consideration should be paid out of the fund, as well as those which are legally valid, and then only such amount will be paid as is honestly due.

In respect to the payment of the sum actually due as freed from the usurious interest, the above case of Pratt v. Adams is followed, with doubt as to its correctness, by Green v. Morse, 4 Barb. 332. The court says the distinction as to the excess of interest may perhaps be supported on the ground that the bill is quasi a bill for specific performance, and that the court may refuse to enforce an unconscionable agreement or trust. See further, infra, VI.

In the case of Peyser v. Myers, 135 N. Y. 599, the question whether or not an assignment for the benefit of creditors will be subject to an annum, that is, retained the interest as prepayment thereof at the full legal rate. Mr. Ellis, the cashier of the bank, and who is the assignee in the assignment, gives this explanation of the circumstances of the negotiation of the loan by Hiller, and the execution and discount of the notes: Some time in January or February Hiller applied to the bank, "and stated that he wanted to borrow four or five thousand dollars, and wanted to know when he could get it, and what security would be needed. I told him that he could get it. He said, however, that he would not want it until later in the year, and I told him, to be sure of getting it, he would have to pay interest from that time. He stated the time he would want it, which was about the 1st of March, I think. We agreed upon the amount of security he was to give. I do not remember the amount of interest he was to pay. I do remember having told him that we could not hold the money for him all that time and not charge him interest for it, and he agreed to pay interest at whatever rate was required. I think this was in January or February, and I do not think he had any list of securities with him. The understanding was that he was to get up his collaterals, and also give Mrs. Klotz as security. There was no security furnished at that time, but the collaterals which he agreed to give were such as are usually given in such cases. I would have been at liberty after that to decline the loan, unless satisfactory security had been furnished. . . . There was no written contract entered into between the bank and Hiller with reference to the interest he was to pay, when he first approached the bank to borrow money. I don't remember that the rate of interest that he agreed to pay from that date was mentioned, though I suppose, of course, it was; and I do not think it could have been less than 10 per cent. . . . I did not lay aside any specific money at that time in separate packages to save for Hiller, but I promised to let him have it. In making our arrangements we loan so much money, and no more, and we have to know what we are going to do with it. . . . I made the discounts on the notes with a view of charging him and covering the interest from the time I promised to let him have the money. Mrs. Klotz was in Texas, and we had to send the notes over there for her signature." These facts, stated by the officer of the bank by whom the money was negotiated for by Hiller, are in effect agreed to by Hiller, who was examined as a witness in the cause, and they fixed beyond doubt the usurious nature of the debt. As a matter of fact, interest was not charged on the amount Hiller applied to borrow from the date of application, of which date no memorial was made, and which neither of the parties can attack for fraud on account of a preferred debt on which too great an amount of interest is calculated by mere mistake and without dishonest intentions, was not decided, but it was held that where such debt had been paid, and the excessive interest refunded, the creditor could retain the amount actually due as against judgment creditors of the assignor who brought an action against him for the money.

But such judgment creditors can maintain an action against the preferred creditor in such a case for the excessive interest, if the assignment has been set aside for fraud, notwithstanding a judgment by default had been obtained by the preferred creditor. The preference, when the assignment was made with intent to defraud other creditors, is "no more than a gift" of the excessive interest. Peyser v. Myers, 56 Hun, 175.

In Mississippi usury renders the entire interest uncollectible when opposed by the debtor, but it is held that the assignor, by directing the payment of the sum actually due, makes a valid preference in a valid deed of assignment. If, then, such a direction can be gathered, even from obscure terms in the deed of assignment, the amount really due on such usurious contract should be paid preferentially as directed in the deed. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. v. Dinkins, 70 Miss. 835.

It may be added here, although the case of receiverships is not here considered, that a similar doctrine has been laid down in a receivership case, to the effect that one creditor can suggest usury in the claim of another where a fund of an insolvent debtor is to be distributed and compel the excessive interest to be written off. Brooks v. Todd, 79 Ga. 692.

V. Preference of usurious debt sustained generally.

An attempt to avoid the deed of assignment on the ground that the usury in the debt preferred rendered the assignment void for usury was unsuccessful in Murray v. Judson, 9 N. Y. 78, 59 Am. Dec. 516.
41 L. R. A.

In that case, the assignor, by his deed of assignment, had preferred a judgment which another creditor in a proceeding in the nature of a creditor's bill alleged was usurious, and prayed that so much thereof as would satisfy the same might be applied to the plaintiff's debt. It was proved on the trial that there was usury to the extent of $50. The trial court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the plaintiff could not avoid the judgment confessed to the defendant because of usury. This judgment was affirmed at a general term of the supreme court, and is affirmed by the court of appeals. The reasoning of the court was that the defense of usury was personal to the defendant, and having been waived by him and the debt recognized by his deed of assignment, it could not be attacked by another creditor. Justice Gardiner called attention to the fact that the assignment was not a contract with the holder of a judgment, nor a mere security for that debt, but was the setting apart of the property for the payment of a specified demand—the creation of a trust with directions to the trustee how to execute it; and that the trust, when created, was irrevocable. He said: "We are not asked to determine whether a provision for a usurious debt may not, in certain cases, be evidence, more or less cogent, of a fraudulent intent on the part of the debtor, but whether the law will permit a trust for that person, to any extent under any circumstances." Justice Willard called attention to the fact that the plaintiff in the proceeding in the nature of a creditor's bill was a junior judgment creditor of the preferred judgment creditor, and did not stand in legal privity with him, so as to enable him to avoid such prior usurious judgment.

Upon the theory that although the usurer may not enforce an usurious contract, yet the debtor on such contract may make voluntary payment of the amount due thereon and thereby perform it, and that he may also create a trust for the performance of such contract, fix, except approximately. The bank did not then lend Hiller any amount, and no contract which obligated it so to do was entered into. The bank was not bound to lend, nor Hiller to borrow, any specific sum, for in truth no specified sum was applied for; Hiller stating only that he would need four or five thousand dollars. When and as the money was borrowed no calculation of interest on the money from the date of the application to the dates of the respective notes was made, nor any amount reserved or included in the notes therefor. What was done was to reserve from the money loaned the full legal interest for the time intervening between the date and maturity of each note, and this was usury. Commercial Bank v. Nolan, 7 How. (Miss.) 508; Hyde v. Finley, 26 Miss. 468; Folkinghorne v. Hendricks, 61 Miss. 386. Our statutes against usury would go for nothing if so simple a device as charging interest on a promise to lend money, and carrying such interest in addition to full legal interest into the note when the money is loaned, could be successfully resorted to. Because of the usury thus reserved in the notes to the bank, all interest thereon was forfeited, and might, if paid, be recovered back by suit at law. Code, § 2348.

What effect does the fact that this usurious interest was secured to be paid and preferred by the assignor have upon the deed of assignment? Is the assignment thereby annulled, or is the consequence only that the assignee shall withhold the payment of the forfeited interest? In H. Wetter Mfg. Co. v. Dinkins, 70 Miss. 835 and 839, the assignor preferred a debt as to which usurious interest had been reserved, and attempted to fix the amount to be paid as that of the principal and legal interest, and this we held he might lawfully do. But by error in calculation $10 in excess of legal interest was stated as the sum due. The assignor had, however, by the terms of the assignment, provided that of the debts stated to be due in the instrument the assignee should only pay the amounts really found to be due, and this was held to preserve the assignment. There is great conflict of authority as to what effect the fact that a simulated, usurious, or excessive debt is provided for or preferred will have upon the assignment. In some of the states, by statute or decision, the assignee is treated as a purchaser for value; in others the courts separate the valid from the invalid debts, and uphold the assignment as to the valid debts it secures; in others this will be done if the invalid debt does not rest upon an unlawful, as distinguished from an insufficient, consideration. We need not go into an examination of these decisions. They are noted and discussed in Marks v. Bradley, 99 Miss. 1. Throughout all our decisions there runs the controlling which trust will be valid and may be carried into effect notwithstanding the defense existing against the original contract, it was held in Chapin v. Thompson, 89 N. Y. 271, that where a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors made provision for the payment of an usurious bond and mortgage, the trust thereby created was valid for the reason that "the result of establishing a trust was to convert the creditor into a cestui que trust, and give him rights against a trust fund, which, as a simple contract creditor, he did not possess, and which did not belong to that relation—rights not to be enforced against the debtor, but the trust property, and adhering to that property until the debt is satisfied, or the property applied upon it according to the terms of the trusts; and so long as any debt named by the creditor of the trust remains unpaid, no part of the proceeds of that property can be applied, except to its payment, without a plain violation of the trust declared by the assignment." It was therefore held that a judgment denying relief against the mortgagor should not affect the claim of the holder of the bond and mortgage under the assignment.

Re Thompson, 30 Hun, 198, follows the case of Chapin v. Thompson, 89 N. Y. 271, and holds that the debtor, by scheduling an usurious bond and mortgage in compliance with the law, within the time allowed after making an assignment for creditors, thereby indicates his recognition of the validity of such mortgage, and causes it to be enforceable against the property in the hands of the assignee.

The court of common pleas of the city and county of New York, in 1882, upon the authority of Chapin v. Thompson, 89 N. Y. 270, held it to be a settled principle that a preferred debt must be paid by the assignee, even though it be usurious. Re Brown, 10 Daly, 115.

In Denn v. Dodds, 1 Johns. Cas. 158, an assignment in trust to pay debts, some of which were usurious, was involved, and it was held to be "an absolute conveyance upon trusts," and the court said: "An act of this nature cannot be rescinded on the ground of usury."

The fact that the deed of assignment is irrevocable will not, however, remove the taint of usury from the debt preferred, and it may be susceptible to an attack by a proper party.

VI. Who may, and who may not, urge the usurious character of the debt preferred.

As to who may interpose the defense of usury generally, see notes to Cheney v. Dunlap (Neb.) 5 L. R. A. 465, and Banks v. Flint (Ark.) 10 L. R. A. 459; also note to Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615, 4 L. ed. 300.

Attention is called to the distinction regarding the powers and duties of the assignee to urge the usurious character of the debt in the case of a general provision in an assignment providing for the payment of debts, and in case of an assignment particularly directing the payment of a preferred debt. In the former class of cases debts founded upon an usurious consideration are not to be paid, while in the latter class of cases the debt must be paid. This principle is sustained by Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615, 642, and Green v. Morse, 4 Barb. 332, 342.

In the case of Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615, and hereinbefore cited, supra, IV., it is further held that if the deed of assignment was in itself void because of providing for the payment of the usurious debt (and the court did not decide whether it was or was not), yet the other creditors who claim under such deed were estopped from questioning its validity, for, by claiming under it, they ratified it; and that if it were void they could not themselves enforce the payment of their own claims for which it provided. Chancellor Walworth in rendering the decision said (p. 641): "In the case of a voluntary assignment, where the assignor creates his own trusts, a creditor who comes in to claim a share of the fund under it must be content to take such share of it as the assignor intended to give him; and cannot claim that which was intended to be given to the assignees in trust for others. A creditor of the assignor, rule that in assignments by insolvents, and especially in preferential assignments, the utmost good faith to creditors must be observed, that the insolvent, claiming to act under the law, which, notwithstanding his insolvency, recognizes his dominion over his property as owner, must keep himself within the law, which not only recognizes, but controls, his conduct; that, while the law will not obstruct the exercise of the legal right to prefer one creditor over others of equal merit, it will try his action by strict rules, confine him to travel along a narrow path, and lend him no assisting hand if he departs therefrom. The assignment as written is the law for the administration of the insolvent's estate. Neither the assignee nor the courts may add to nor subtract therefrom, and as written it must be susceptible of complete execution without depriving creditors of their legal rights, or it may not stand against their attack. Richardson v. Stapleton, 60 Miss. 97; Marks v. Bradley, 69 Miss. 1; Selleck v. Pollock, 69 Miss. 870. Applying the principle of these cases, it follows that the preference given by the assignor to the usurious debt due to the bank annuls the deed. The assignee is by the deed directed and required to pay to the bank the debt and the usurious interest, and this he must do. He pays it, if at all, not as debtor, nor by virtue of the obligation springing from the contract between the assignor and the bank, but by reason simply of the terms of the deed under which he holds. The deed is the law under which he acts, and "ita lex scripta est." In the payment thus directed to be made the estate of the assignor is to that extent diminished, and prevented from being devoted to the demands of other creditors. But more than this results, for the payment, when made, creates eo instanti a right of action in the assignor to recover from the bank, not only the usury, but the whole interest reserved. The assignee may not sue, for it is not his money that has been paid. Nor is the right thus arising a chose in action which passed by the assignment, for it did not exist when the assignment was made. The assignee, in paying the usurious debt, would be paying as the representative of the assignor (Chapin v. Thompson, 89 N. Y. 270); and the payment so made, though a voluntary one, would create a right of action in the assignor to recover the whole interest paid. Code 1892, § 2348. The legal effect of what the assignee was directed to do was a purchase by the assignee of a right of action for the assignor at the expense of the fund which he professed to devote to the payment of his creditors. That this cannot lawfully be done we think is clear. In some of the states the statutes against usury simply declare a forfeiture of the usury, or of all the interest; but no provision is made, as with us, that the usurious interest, if paid, may be recovered back. In some states it has sometimes been held that by providing for the payment of the debt in an assignment the forfeiture is waived. These authorities are not applicable under our statute, under which active payment is not a waiver.

At the time of the execution of the assignment the Merchants' & Planters' Bank and Mrs. Klotz, two of the preferred creditors, indorsed thereon a release to Hiller of their demands against him personally in consideration of the provision made in the deed for the payment of their debts. It is now urged that, whatever may have been the fraudulent pur whether provided for by the assignment or not, who wishes to repudiate the trusts of the assignment on the ground that they are illegal and a fraud upon the honest creditors of the assignor, must apply to set aside the assignment as fraudulent and void against him as a creditor, instead of coming in under the assignment itself as a preferred creditor or otherwise."

It is said in Green v. Morse, 4 Barb. 332, that an assignee cannot refuse to pay an usurious debt, which is specifically directed to be paid. He is the mere agent of the assignor when he is not himself a creditor thereof. It is further said that a creditor at large cannot object to the payment of such usurious debt because he is not a privy to the usurious contract when he has no lien on the property by judgment or execution, or upon the choses in action by a creditor's bill. In this case the court proceeded upon the well-settled principle that the defense of usury cannot be set up by anyone except a party to the usurious contract or one who represents him as a privy in blood or estate; and that inasmuch as in this case the assignee sought to avoid payment of the usurious debt (which was by the deed of assignment directed to be paid) simply because he had been informed it was usurious, and not because he had any adverse interest therein for which he was seeking to have the assignment set aside, he was not in a position to urge such defense, since he had accepted the trust created by the deed of assignment, and upon a good consideration agreed to perform it, thereby becoming estopped; and that inasmuch as the assignor, who owed the debt, did not set up the defense, no one had a right to do it without authority

The court further held that the assignee could not, as the representative of other creditors for whom the assignment provided, urge the defense of usury, for the reason that the assignee's authority to act for such creditors is fully to execute the plain conditions of the assignment, and to pay over to them upon their debts what the assignor has directed in the deed of assignment to be paid; that in undertaking to act for other creditors the assignee not only acts without authority, but in violation of the directions of the assignor, and that in seeking in behalf of other creditors to avoid the payment of the alleged usurious debt and apply it on the shares provided for them, he establishes the fact that they have elected to enforce the assignment instead of assailing it by hostile proceedings, and that they are therefore estopped from questioning its provisions in favor of others while they claim the benefits of it for themselves. The court suggests that it might have been different if the creditor had obtained a judgment and execution against the assignor and seized the assigned property, or filed a creditor's bill to set aside the assignment as fraudulent against bona fide creditors for the reason that it provided for the payment of usurious and void debts; that in such a case the creditor would not be estopped from assailing the assignment as he is when he claims under the assignment; that without having acquired a lien on the property by judgment and execution, or upon the choses in action by a creditor's bill, the creditors at large are not privies in any sense which will entitle them to question any disposition the assignor may choose to make of his property in the payment of an usurious debt.

pose of Hiller in executing the deed, the assignee is a purchaser for value, at least to the extent of holding the assigned property to an amount sufficient to pay these claims. This position is taken on the authority of Anderson v. Lachs, 59 Miss. 111. We think the principle announced in that case—i. e. that when a creditor, in consideration of the assignment, releases the assignor from personal liability on the debt for the payment of which the assignment is made, the assignee is a purchaser for value, and not bound by the undiscovered fraud of the assignor—cannot apply on the facts disclosed by this record. Unquestionably the bank which, in lending the money, reserving the usury, accepting the assignment, and releasing Hiller, acted by and through its cashier, Ellis, who, as the assignee in the deed, is chargeable with full notice of the unlawfulness of the assignor. Mrs. Klotz is in no better attitude. The assignee, Mr. Ellis, had knowledge of the unlawful act, and, though Mrs. Klotz had paid value for the deed, he would not have been a bona fide purchaser, for to make one a bona fide purchaser he must take, not only for value, but without notice. The purpose of Hiller, the assignor, and the purpose of Ellis, the assignee, to devote the estate of Hiller to the payment of the usurious debt to the bank were identical. It does not matter that, as to Ellis, the assignee, and probably that as to Hiller, the assignor, this purpose involved no moral turpitude. In law many things are dealt with as fraudulent because of their results as against creditors, as to which moral delinquency may not be predicated. If the purpose of the assignor and the assignee be to do a thing not recognized by the law as valid, the instrument by which it is attempted to effectuate this design cannot be upheld. But we do not think it can be said that Mrs. Klotz gave up anything for the conveyance. The assignor was her son-in-law, and hopelessly insolvent. Nothing could be hoped for in the present case except to get what might be realized from the assigned estate, and the future promised nothing except by resorting to the earnings the assignor might thereafter accumulate. The evidence makes it entirely certain that Mrs. Klotz did not in fact surrender anything which she thought was of value, nor give up anything for the deed. Under the advice of the attorneys for Hiller, that by surrendering her claim against him she would probably import to the assignee the character of a purchaser for value, under the decision in Anderson v. Lachs, she signed the release, not in consideration, but in aid, of the conveyance. In no just sense can it be said, on the evidence in the cause, that she purchased the conveyance. The facts that it had been determined on, and that she was to be preferred without reference to a release by her to Hiller, and that the release was not at all influential in bringing about the assignment or the preference given to her claim, and that she signed the release for her own benefit, and not for his, are as distinctly and fully shown as it is possible to establish any fact of evidence.

The cross-petitioners Marshall Field & Co. should have had the relief they prayed. Whether Hiller in fact made all the statements to the representative of the reporting agency of R. G. Dun & Co. contained in the report made by the representative, Moorman, as testified to by Moorman, or made only a part of them, as testified to by Hiller, is immaterial in view of the fact, which we think is abundantly

(See also the opinion of Justice Willard in case of Murray v. Judson, 9 N. Y. 73, 59 Am. Dec. 516, as cited supra, V.)

Where an assignee had paid usurious (compounded) interest to a creditor preferred in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, it was held, in Peyser v. Myers, 56 Hun, 175, that where the assignment had been held void an action by judgment creditors would lie against such preferred creditor to enforce the appropriation of the money thus received to the satisfaction of their demands. This was upon the principle that the payment of such interest was a fraud upon the unpreferred creditors.

In case of an assignment to certain creditors to pay debts due to them and other debts also, the court said, respecting the effect of usury, that the assignees were not bound to set up the usury, but added: "No doubt they are not bound by their obligation as trustees to pay notes which have no legal validity. This, however, is not supported by the later New York cases above considered."

It is an obiter statement in Morse v. Crofoot, 4 N. Y. 114, where sureties on a note of a discharged bankrupt were seeking relief against it for usury, and had received an assignment of property to pay that debt and others, that if the debt should be proved to be usurious it would be their duty to refuse payment thereof out of the property in their hands, but this was declared obiter and the rule was rejected by Chapin v. Thompson, 89 N. Y. 271, nor was it even considered in Murray v. Judson, 9 N. Y. 73, 59 Am. Dec. 516, though that case was called to the attention of the court.

41 L. R. A.

Strong v. Strickland, 32 Barb. 284, is a case in which the usurious character of a mortgage debt preferred in an assignment was set up by the mortgagor himself against the mortgage in an action to cancel it. It holds that the defense of usury, being personal, can be set up by the debtor alone, and not by his assignee for creditors, but that notwithstanding the debtor may have, in his deed of assignment, directed the payment of the usurious debt, he may himself bring an action to cancel and set aside such debt on the ground of usury.

Where it is lawful for a debtor to pay more than 6 per cent interest, his transactions involving greater interest will not be subject to objection by his creditors on an accounting by his assignee for creditors. Selzer's Estate, 141 Pa. 529.

In Kentucky an assignee for creditors should not pay usury. When it appears on the record the chancellor will not order it paid, even if the objection comes from one who is not a creditor. Hill v. Cornwall, 95 Ky. 512.

There is nothing in the report of this case to show that the usurious debt was expressly mentioned or the usury waived by the assignment.

However, in Mississippi, where payment by the debtor is not a waiver of the defense of usury, it is held in HILLER v. ELLIS, that the deed of assignment, to be valid, must be susceptible of complete execution without depriving creditors of their legal rights, and as a deed of assignment containing an usurious debt cannot be so enforced, it is open to attack by injured creditors on the ground of fraud, and will be declared void.

R. S.

proved, that when called on by the manager of the credit department of Marshall Field & Co. for a statement of his financial condition Mr. Hiller referred them to the report then standing on the books of Dun & Co. as a true one of his then condition. Mr. McConnell, the manager of the credits of Field & Co., testifies distinctly that Hiller, when applied to for a statement of his financial condition, stated that he was not prepared to make a statement, but that the reports standing on the books of the commercial agencies correctly represented his condition. Hiller in some manner implies that this he did not do, but that his memory is not clear appears from his statement that he does not remember to have seen or talked with McConnell at all. It is true, he says, that he made no statement of his condition, and so says McConnell, but he does not deny that he referred McConnell to the mercantile agencies as supplying the information desired. It cannot be denied that the report on the books of Dun & Co. exhibited his condition to have been infinitely better than in truth it was, and, accepting as true the testimony of McConnell, which Hiller had an opportunity and failed to controvert, we are of opinion that the purchase so procured was a fraudulent one, and that the sellers have the right to rescind the sale and retake the goods.

The decree on the cross-petition of Kyle & Co. must be affirmed. They state that they sold to Hiller on the faith of a report made by Bradstreet & Co. that on August 1, 1893, Hiller had made a certain statement to them, and on the faith of a report by Dun & Co. that on August 9, 1893, he had made certain statements to them of his financial condition, which reports showed to Kyle & Co. the statements purporting to have been made by Hiller. But there is nothing in the record tending to show that Hiller at these times made any statements to these agencies. The only occasion on which the evidence tends to prove a statement made by him to any agency, was in February, 1893, to Dun & Co., and it is not pretended that on this statement any goods were purchased from these cross-petitioners.

The decree is reversed, except on the appeal of Kyle & Co. As to them it is affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Grace A. MERRILL, as Next Friend of Chester Fulton et al., Appl.,

v.

W. W. HARRIS et al.

(..... Ark.)

A sale of a homestead under order of a probate court for the benefit of minor children who enjoy it as a descended or transmitted homestead from the deceased homesteader is not in violation of Const. art. 9, § 6, giving them an interest in the rents and profits of the homestead during minority, and providing that on the widow's death all the homestead shall be vested in them.

(Battle, J., dissents.)

(June 4, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to recover possession of certain real estate as the property of the minor plaintiffs which had been sold under order of the probate court. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hill & Auten, for appellant:

The only case in which the probate court seems to have any jurisdiction over the homestead is under §§ 3698-3701 of Sanderls & H.'s Dig., where the value of the homestead exceeds the limit. It can't be ordered sold to pay debts, nor partitioned.

Nichols v. Shearon, 49 Ark. 75; Kirksey v. Cole, 47 Ark. 504; Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400; Sansom v. Harrell, 51 Ark. 429; Bond v. Montgomery, 56 Ark. 568.

NOTE.—As to the nature of homestead estates, see also Stern v. Lee (N. C.), 26 L. R. A. 814.
41 L. R. A.

Creditors cannot reach the homestead of minor children, and they cannot waive or abandon it.

Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 633; Kirksey v. Cole, 47 Ark. 510; Alzheimer v. Davis, 87 Ark. 316.

Neither the Constitution nor the statute law gives the probate court any jurisdiction over the homestead; for it is not part of the estates or property embraced in the grant of jurisdiction made by the Constitution or any law in force then or since.

See Const. art. 7, § 84; Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400; Burgett v. Apperson, 52 Ark. 219.

If a valid sale could be made of the homestead interest, it would, ipso facto, terminate the right, and amount to a waiver and abandonment of the same; and thus per se extinguish the very right or estate sought to be conveyed.

McCloy v. Arnett, 47 Ark. 452.

When the children become orphans, the effect of granting them direct homestead protection tends rather to the preservation of the family than otherwise. The purpose, and generally the effect, of conferring this benefit upon them, is to preserve the family, keep its members together, and thus promote the welfare of society and the state. Before the death of the father, this purpose was better served by giving the children no independent rights: now it is advanced by the bestowal of such rights upon them.

Waples, Homestead & Exemption, p. 643.

Messrs. Ratcliffe & Fletcher, for appellees:

The homestead descends to minors as any other property, except it is exempt from sale for the debts of the ancestor, and it becomes the duty of the guardian immediately upon his appointment to take charge of the homestead and manage and care for it for the benefit of the minors, the same as any other property belonging to them.

Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 636; Kirksey v. Cole, 47 Ark. 510.

The homestead then comes within the jurisdiction of the probate court the same as any other property of the minors.

There is nothing which limits the jurisdiction of the probate court over the homestead in the possession of the guardian any more than over any other property of the minor, and if the probate court is satisfied that a sale of the homestead would be for the benefit of the minors, there is no reason why it should not order the guardian to sell it the same as any other property.

Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 13 L. R. A. 490.

The statute (§§ 3606 and 3613, Sandels & H.'s Dig.), to say nothing of the Constitution, art. 7, § 84, and § 1141 Sandels & H.'s Dig., expressly gives the probate court jurisdiction to sell the real estate of minors, "or any part thereof." The court having the power to sell, all presumptions are in favor of the rightful exercise of the jurisdiction.

Apel v. Kelsey, 53 Ark. 841; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 54 Am. Dec. 217; West v. Waddill, 33 Ark. 575; Reinhardt v. Gartrell, 38 Ark. 727; Mock v. Pleasant, 34 Ark. 63.

If the minors had no title, or a defective one, that was the misfortune of the purchaser at the guardian's sale. But as the minors claim the same title under which appellees hold in this case, they would not be heard to dispute that title or to set up claims of creditors if there were any.

Stafford v. Watson, 41 Ark. 17; Griesler v. McKennon, 44 Ark. 517.

Bunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented by this record is: Has a probate court (in which a guardianship of minors is pending) the power to order the sale of the homestead left them by the mother (the surviving parent) for the benefit of said minors? Lucy M. Fulton died seised and possessed of lots 1 and 2 in block 17 in the city of Little Rock, and occupied the same and the improvements thereon as her homestead until the day of her death, her husband having died previously. So far as this record shows, she left no other property and no debts, and no children except her minor sons Chester and Freddie, named in the caption, who were nineteen and seventeen years, respectively, at the institution of this suit. After the mother's death, and before the institution of this suit, the duly appointed and acting guardian of these minors, presumably on proper showing, was ordered and directed by the probate court to sell in the usual manner the said homestead property as that of the estate of said minors, and for their benefit; and the sale was accordingly made, and one W. H. Halliburton became the purchaser, and he subsequently sold to appellee Harris, who took immediate possession under his deed, and was in possession at the institution of this suit, which is a suit in ejectment to eject him from the premises. The foregoing facts appear in the complaint, to 41 L. R. A.

which the defendants interposed a general demurrer, raising the question stated at the outset, which demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff appealed to this court.

This is a new question in this court, so far as we have been able to ascertain, and without a question which, from the very nature of things, has not been very often presented in any of the courts, and for that reason precedents are not numerous. All the cases, without exception we believe, which have been called to our attention by the appellant's counsel, are cases of sales or attempted sales under the orders of probate court, at the instance of administrators, to pay debts of the deceased owners of the homestead property; and none of them are cases where the object of the sales was to appropriate the proceeds to the support and education of the minor or minors or for his or their benefit in any way. That the homestead, during the holding of the widow or the minority of any of the children, cannot be sold to pay the debts of the father's estate, goes without further controversy in this state; and the same is to be said of the sale of the homestead left by the mother, as in this case, for her debts during the minority of her children or any of them. But the question is: Can the probate court, in any case, lawfully order the sale of such homestead for the benefit of the minor children, who enjoy it as a descended or transmitted homestead from the deceased homesteader? In Morton v. McCannless, 68 Miss. 810, the supreme court of Mississippi said: "The whole object of the exemption law of 1865 was to preserve the property from creditors, and not to affect the power of the courts to deal with the property as that of the children and heirs of the exemptionist." Such is the view we take of it. The Mississippi law on the subject, while different from ours in some particulars, yet is so far like ours as to render the same principles applicable in all essential particulars. There are several other cases from the same court, which either directly or incidentally sustain the same doctrine. The supreme court of Georgia expresses some doubt as to the power in the probate (chancery) court to sell; but, if it exists, it exists only as in cases of sale of other property of the minor. Sloan v. Nance, 45 Ga. 310. See also, as to sales of interests of remainderman, Jenkins v. Fahey, 78 N. Y. 855; Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Gratt. 551; Bell v. Clark, 2 Met. (Ky.) 578; Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U. S. 519, 84 L. ed. 531. In discussing this identical question, with the foregoing decisions, as well as others on the subject, in mind, Woerner, in his work on the American Law of Guardianship (§ 75), after a general reference to the subject of a minor's rights in the homestead, and the sale thereof, has this to say: "Under this aspect of the question, and remembering that a homestead right descending from a deceased parent may be the only property owned by a minor, it would appear that the court having jurisdiction over the estate of such minor should be possessed of the power to order the sale of such homestead right, if it be necessary for his education, maintenance, or well being." Following the argument of the author, suppose, as in the case at bar, there were no debts, no other property, and that there was but one child, and he or she, as the case may be, the only child, and heir; and, upon that, suppose that the rents and profits of the homestead place were nothing, or not enough to support and educate the child, and that there was no one willing or bound to occupy the premises with the minor, and thus assist in his support and education; in other words, suppose the homestead right was unavailable or utterly inadequate for the purpose. Can it be the law that the probate court, or the court of general, original, and exclusive jurisdiction of minors and their estate, cannot sell the property, and thereby give it the only real value it has so far as the minor is concerned? We cannot think such is the law. The Constitution does not in terms seek to do more than protect from the grasp of creditors. There is neither expressly nor by implication a restriction upon the powers of the probate court in respect to this class of the property of minors. The case we have supposed presents the question fairly, and in such a case we cannot see how but one answer can be given. If one case could exist wherein the probate court would possess the power, that is all that is necessary to solve the question. To carry the discussion further than that would simply be to discuss questions pertaining to the proper or improper exercise of the court's discretion in the instances as they may arise accordingly as the facts may determine.

In the present case there is no controversy as to an abuse of the discretion of the court, and we therefore affirm the judgment of the court below.

Battle, J., dissenting:

The order of the probate court in question, which directed the sale of the homestead of minors, is a nullity.

What is a homestead? In Williams v. Dorris, 31 Ark. 466, (Chief Justice English, in defining it, said it "is the place of a home or house—that part of a man's landed property which is about and contiguous to his dwelling house. A homestead necessarily includes the idea of a house for residence, or mansion house. The dwelling may be a splendid mansion, a cabin, or tent. If there be either, it is under the protection of the law, but there must be a home residence before it and the land on which it is situated can be claimed as a homestead." Tillar v. Bass, 57 Ark. 179.

The homestead law creates no new estate, but protects the occupant in the use and occupancy of the land set apart as a homestead during the time of such occupancy. Chambers v. Sallie, 29 Ark. 412; Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 637. Hence "an estate held in common with others is sufficient to support a homestead exemption, without exclusive possession by the tenant who claims the privilege." Robson v. Hough, 56 Ark. 621; Thompson v. King, 54 Ark. 9; Sentell v. Armor, 35 Ark. 49; Sims v. Thompson, 39 Ark. 801; Ward v. Mayfield, 41 Ark. 94; Stull v. Graham, 60 Ark. 461. A leasehold estate is sufficient for that purpose (Robson v. Hough, 56 Ark. 621), or an equitable title (Rockafellow v. Peay, 40 Ark. 69). In the case last cited the court said: "Indeed, it is probable that the homestead exemption withdraws from the demands of creditors whatever interest the claimant has in the property dedicated to that use." All these cases prove that the homestead interest is a mere right to use and occupy land as a home or residence.

Upon the fact that the right to a homestead is a personal right to occupy the place of residence as a home, this court held in Garibaldi v. Jones, 48 Ark. 280, that the sale of the homestead by the widow was an abandonment of it. In that case the court said: "One of the objects of the Constitution is to secure to the widow and orphans the family roof-tree as a fixed home, during the widowhood or life of the widow and minority of the children. It would be clearly against the policy and spirit of the Constitution, in thus providing a home for her, to permit her to alienate it, and to allow others to enjoy the benefits of the homestead of a deceased husband and father, which were only intended for the widow and orphan. If she could do so, the exemption which passes, under the Constitution, to the widow and minor children upon the death of the husband and father, would not be a reservation of a homestead, but a reservation of land of a certain quantity or value, irrespective of its uses."

In nearly every case, if not all, an abandonment of a homestead with no intent to return to it as a residence produces a forfeiture. Ordinarily, a lease for life is conclusive evidence of an abandonment and forfeiture. Gates v. Steele, 48 Ark. 539.

In Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 633, a question arose as to how minors could occupy a homestead so as to maintain their right to it. The court said: "The intention of the legislature evidently was to extend to the child or children the same protection of the property from sale by the creditor which had been extended to their parents; and as it is our duty, as far as possible, to carry this intent into effect, we must necessarily give to the term 'occupied' such a liberal construction as will uphold, not defeat, the humane intent of the legislature; and must hold that an infant is incapable, either by act or declaration, of abandoning or waiving his homestead right; not to do so would be to defeat the provisions of the statute as to them. Actual occupancy of the infant upon the homestead place is not necessary; is not required of an infant. It is the duty of his guardian to take possession of the homestead place, and to rent or lease it for the benefit of his ward, as a means for his support and education; and this must have been the possession and occupancy contemplated by the legislature, because it is the only one consistent with the condition of the minor child or children."

The minor children do not create the homestead. It descends to them. During minority they are incapable of waiving or abandoning it by act or declaration. As it is a mere occupancy, how can they utilize or enjoy it? The question is answered by Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 633: By their guardian taking possession, and renting or leasing it for their benefit, as a means for their support and education. In this way it is held and occupied by them. The occupancy of their guardian or tenant is their occupancy. In case of a sale it would not be so held, but would be abandoned or forfeited.

The Constitution intends and directs that the homestead of the father should be preserved for the benefit of the minor children, in a particular manner, during their minority, and that is by occupancy or renting. It does not authorize any other disposition to be made of it. It provides "that if the owner leaves children, one or more, said child or children shall share with said widow and be entitled to half the rents and profits till each of them arrives at twenty-one years of age—each child's rights to cease at twenty-one years of age—and the shares to go to the younger children, and then all go to the widow, and provided that said widow or children may reside on the homestead or not; and in case of the death of the widow all of said homestead shall be vested in the minor children of the testator or intestate." Const. art. 9, § 6. Under this section they are entitled to reside upon it, and to one half of the rents and profits if there be a widow,—that is to say, to rent it,—till each of them arrives at twenty-one years of age.

In Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400, the court said: "The land was set apart by the law to appellants [minors] when their father died, as a home and means of maintenance during their minority. Until the younger of them reached the age of twenty one years, it could not have been lawfully sold to pay the debts of their father's estate, or partitioned between them. . . . It was not subject to sale, but might have been rented to raise means for their support. Until the younger reached his majority, it remained set apart as 'a place, a sanctuary, to which he or she might return to find the shelter, comfort, and security of a home' during his or her minority."

In Sansom v. Harrell, 51 Ark. 429, the order in question was made by the probate court for the purpose of vesting a homestead in a widow, under a statute which provides: "When anyone shall die, leaving a widow or children, and it shall be made to appear to the probate court that the estate of the deceased does not exceed three hundred dollars, the court shall make an order that the estate vest absolutely in the widow or children, as the case may be." Mansf. Dig. § 3. The husband of the widow left minor children surviving him at the time of his death. This court held the order void, and said: "The Constitution sets it apart as a home and sanctuary for the widow and children, and, for the purpose of preventing any other person invading it under a claim of right, or interfering with them in the undisturbed enjoyment of shelter, comfort, and security of it as a home, guards and protects it against sales and transfers. The same reason which makes it unlawful to sell the land constituting it for the payment of the debts of the deceased owner, subject to the homestead rights of the children during their minority, makes it unlawful to vest it in the widow, subject to the same rights of the children during their minority. One endangers the quiet, security, and comfort of a home provided in the homestead as much as the other, and both equally violate the spirit and manifest intent of the Constitution."

The homestead right of minor children, and the estate in the lands, which constitute the homestead, inherited by them in addition thereto, it was held in Kessinger v. Wilson, 53 Ark. 400, are like two separate and distinct estates, vested in different persons, and following in immediate succession. Their right to the enjoyment and possession of the same cannot exist at one and the same time, and neither merges in the other. The probate court cannot authorize the sale of the homestead right; for that is a personal right, and a sale of it is an abandonment which forfeits it. Neither can it order the sale of the estate inherited in addition to it, subject to the same, for the same reason it cannot be sold for the payment of the debts of the deceased owner, and that is: "One endangers the quiet, security, and comfort of a home provided in the homestead as much as the other, and both equally violate the spirit and manifest intent of the Constitution."
41 L. R. A.

The object of the Constitution as to homesteads is not the protection of the impecunious, and no others. It protects the family homes of all classes. It conserves only the homesteads owned and possessed by a resident of this state "who is married or the head of a family." Upon the death of the owner, it gives it to the widow for her life, and the minor children during their minority. From this it appears that the policy of the Constitution "is to foster families as the factors of society, and thus protect the general welfare." "To save them from disintegration," as said in Waples on Homestead & Exemption, chap. 1, § 2, "and secure their permanency," the Constitution "seeks to protect their homes from forced sales so far as it can be done without injustice to others." It "protects homes as the pillars of the state edifice," and thereby fosters the sentiments of patriotism and independence and the spirit of free citizenship. "There is," said Tarben, J., "unquestionably no greater incentive to virtue, industry, and love of country than a permanent home, around which gathers the affections of a family, and to which the members fondly turn, however widely they may become dispersed." In fostering these sentiments and affections, for the purpose of accomplishing its object, the policy of the Constitution in preserving the homestead of the father for his minor children during their minority is further advanced by giving to the children an opportunity, when all of them have arrived of age and become sui juris, to acquire the homestead lands, in the event it became necessary to sell the same, and thereby hold them in the family. A sale of such lands during the minority of the children tends to defeat the beneficent policy of the Constitution, and should be treated by all courts as void.

It follows that the probate court cannot sell the fee in the land without defeating the spirit and intent of the Constitution. It seems to me that no argument or authority is necessary to prove that the Constitution, from which it derives its jurisdiction, did not vest the probate court with the authority to defeat its policy or violate any of its provisions.

Rehearing denied January 27, 1893

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Louisiana
v.
Amos CALDWELL et al.

(.....La. Ann.....)

Accused were indicted by a grand jury composed of twelve, under the provisions of article 117 of new Constitution, and convicted by a petit jury of twelve, of whom less than the whole number concurred, under the provisions of article 116. The crime was burglary committed before adoption of Constitution of 1898. The defense was made that these provisions of the Constitution were ex post facto as applied to past offenses, and that accused could be indicted only by a grand jury composed of sixteen, and convicted only by a concurrence of all twelve of the petit jury. Held, the provisions referred to operate changes in the method of procedure only, relate to the remedy, and are in no sense ex post facto in character, and that articles 116 and 117 of the Constitution are self-operative.

(June 22, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Red River Parish convicting them of burglary and larceny. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. A. Wilkinson and J. M. Pincus for appellants.

Messrs. Milton J. Cunningham, Attorney General, and C. C. Egan, for appellee:

The number of the grand jury is a matter of criminal procedure and might have been changed at any time by the legislature until it was fixed in the Constitution of 1898, at twelve. And the change made by the constitutional convention went immediately into effect, and thereafter a grand jury of twelve is a legal grand jury, even to pass upon crimes and offenses committed before said change was adopted.

See Rev. Stat. § 976.

Article 116 of the Constitution of 1898 is self-operative and went into effect immediately upon the adoption of the Constitution.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 912.

The provision in article 116 for the finding of a verdict by less than twelve jurors, in a case not capital, took effect immediately upon the adoption of the Constitution, and it applies to the trial of crimes and offenses committed prior to the adoption of said Constitution, as well as to those committed afterwards. It is merely a change in a matter of criminal procedure, and not an ex post facto law or a law having retroactive effect.

State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109; Mathis v. State, 81 Fla. 291; State v. Bates, 14 Utah, 293; Lynn v. State, 84 Md. 67; State v. Gay, 18 Mont. 51; Am. Dig. 1897, p. 962, § 53, No. 9.

*Headnote by BLANCHARD, J.

NOTE.—As to number of grand jurors necessary or proper to act, see note to State v. Belvel (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 846.
41 L. R. A.

Blanchard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendants appeal from a conviction and sentence on a charge of burglary and larceny. The indictment was found by a grand jury composed of twelve under the provisions of the recently adopted Constitution of the state. It was met by a motion to quash on the ground that, at the date of the alleged commission of the crimes charged, the Constitution of 1898 had not been adopted, and hence the accused were entitled to have a grand jury impaneled, composed of sixteen of their countrymen, to pass upon the charges, and return a true bill. It was further alleged as ground to quash that article 117 of the new Constitution, authorizing a grand jury of twelve is not self-operative, and requires legislative action to carry the same into effect. The motion was denied, and a bill reserved. There was no error in this ruling. The law is well settled that changes in the tribunal or method of procedure relate to the remedy, are always within the discretion of the lawmaking power, and are in no sense ex post facto so long as they deprive the accused of no substantial right. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 272, 273, 361, 362; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 531. That article 117 of the Constitution is self operative is shown by its terms, which declare that its provisions shall "go into effect on the adoption of this Constitution."

The court having charged the jury that nine of them concurring could find a verdict, defendants excepted and reserved a bill. The grounds of exception are that the crime is charged to have been committed at a time antecedent to the adoption of the present Constitution; that the provisions of the Constitution in reference to trial by jury are not self-operative; that they require legislative action; and that the enforcement of the same in the instant case would be to deprive defendants of a substantial right. It is averred in the bill that one of the jury, upon a poll following the announcement of the verdict, refused to assent to the same, and from this it is insisted that no legal conviction has ensued. In answer to this, the trial judge says: "Article 116 of the Constitution of 1898 requires only nine of a jury to find a verdict in a case not capital. This is not ex post facto. It is a mere change in the remedy, or mode of procedure, which does not deprive the defendants of any right. Formerly no acquittal as well as no conviction could be had without the concurrence of twelve jurors. The change facilitates acquittals as much as convictions. It merely prevents mistrials. The change in the number of jurors who could convict is a mere change of remedy. This part of the Constitution is clearly self-executory. No legislation is necessary or could add to or take from the provisions of article 116 as to the number of jurors necessary to find a verdict. The first sentence of the article authorizes the legislature to provide for the selection of jurors, but this provision has no relation to the remainder of the article. The third paragraph of the schedule of the Constitution of 1898 declares that the provisions of all laws inconsistent with it shall cease upon its adoption, except such as require legislation to enforce them; and the eighth paragraph declares that the new Constitution is in full force and effect from and after May 12, 1898, except as otherwise provided in it. Article 116 is therefore now in force, and was properly applied in this case.

For number of grand jurors necessary to concur in finding an indictment, see note to State v. Hartley (Nev.) 28 L. R. A. 33.

This is the first time the question has been raised under the recently adopted Constitution and the views above, so tersely and clearly expressed by our learned brother of the district court, who was himself a distinguished member of the convention which framed the new organic law, meet our full approbation. Mr. Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations (pp. 272 and 273), states the law to be that, so far as modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right, in a criminal than in a civil action, to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place. Remedies must always be under the control of the legislature, and it would create endless confusion in legal proceedings if every case was to be conducted only in accordance with the rules of practice, and heard only by the court, in existence when its facts arose. The legislature may abolish courts and create new ones; and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure in its discretion, though it cannot lawfully dispense with any of those substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime. So, too, on pages 861 and 362, he declares the state may give a new and additional remedy for a right already in existence, and it may abolish old remedies, and substitute new. If a statute providing a remedy is repealed while proceedings are pending, such proceedings will be determined thereby, unless the legislature shall otherwise provide. Any rule or regulation in regard to the remedy which does not take away or impair the right itself cannot be regarded as beyond the proper province of legislation. An ex post facto law is one which is enacted after the offense has been committed, and which, in relation to it or its consequences, alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 525. The term is a technical one, and relates only to penal and criminal proceedings, which impose punishments or forfeitures and not to civil proceedings, which affect private rights retroactively. 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 786. It has been held that a law is not ex post facto because it changes the manner of summoning and making up the jury, as applied to past offenses; nor because it reduces the number of peremptory challenges allowed the accused; nor because it increases the number of such challenges allowed the prosecution; nor because it permits amendments to pending indictments; nor because it authorizes the jury to fix the punishment at the trial, which, under the law in force at the time the offense was committed, was fixed by the court; nor because it makes the court the judge of the law, whereas at the time of the offense the jury was. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 581, note. In all these cases it was held that the change affected the procedure only, and that the new law was applicable to the trial of the offense. So, too, we must hold with regard to the case at bar. The accused, having committed the offense before the new law went into operation, cannot claim the impairment of any substantial right because of indictment, trial, and conviction thereunder. The new law does but relate to the remedy or procedure which it is the province of the law-making power to enact for the ascertainment, prosecution, and conviction of crime. State v. Bates, 14 Utah, 298; Lynn v. State, 84 Md. 67; State v. Taylor, 184 Mo. 109; State v. Gay, 18 Mont. 51; Am. Dig. 1897, p. 963, § 53, g.

Another bill of exception is leveled at the ruling of the court a qua admitting the confession of guilt made by the accused to one Sol. Cannigan, called as a witness for the state. The objection was that the confession was not free and voluntary, but brought about by inducements held out; also that the signature of one of the accused to the letter wherein the confession was made was not proved. The trial judge states the confession was not offered or received as to Hagan Clark, one of the defendants; and that as to the other two, Amos Caldwell and William Clark, the evidence showed the note was written by Caldwell in presence of Clark, and was concurred in by the latter, who signed it; and that this note contained the same recitals the two had previously made voluntarily to Cannigan who was intrusted by them with the note for delivery to the person to whom it was intended. It seems that Cannigan was the friend of the accused, and went to the jail to see them, taking some tobacco for them. While there he said to Caldwell and William Clark: "If you will tell the truth about Mr. Carnes' money, probably he will help you." Whereupon they told him to tell one of the parties (not Carnes) whose money had been stolen to come to them, and they would tell him where his money was; that Hagan (meaning Hagan Clark, the other accused) had it. This was on Sunday. On Tuesday following, Cannigan saw the party (Mr. Terry) to whom the message was sent, and delivered it. Whereupon Terry said to Cannigan, "Tell them to tell you." Following this, Cannigan again saw the parties, and the incriminating note was written. All the parties accused and Cannigan were colored. Cannigan had nothing to do with the prosecution; was rather interested in getting the accused off as lightly as possible. He was the brother-in-law of William Clark. He was not commissioned by the prosecutors to see the accused, and procure a confession from them. He merely expressed the opinion that Mr. Carnes would probably help them if they would tell the truth about the money. He made no promise, and was authorized to make none. He was not in the service of either Carnes or Terry, and did not live on their plantations, but across the river, some miles away. We agree with the judge below that, "coming from such a source, the mere suggestion that the prosecutor probably would help them does not amount to such an inducement as ought reasonably to attach such doubt to the confession as would exclude it." Especially so when it occurred more than two months after the crime, when the accused parties were in no confusion, and laboring under no excitement nor special dread, and were free from improper influences.

We find no sufficient warrant for reversing the verdict and sentence appealed from, and, accordingly the same stand affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

SUPREME LODGE OF THE ORDER OF THE GOLDEN CHAIN, Appt.,

v.

John C. SIMERING et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. The representation of the 4,000 Maryland members in the Supreme Lodge, Order of the Golden Chain, extends, under Laws 1894, chap. 295 (Code, art. 23, § 1431), to eight members, as the law gives the right to as many representatives as will equal the number of times the membership is greater than the unit of representation, which is the number of members necessary to secure one representative, and the constitution of the organization gives each state one representative for the first 500 members, although it also proceeds to declare that there shall be two representatives for 1,500 and three for 4,500.

2. A court of equity has power to enjoin the members of the supreme lodge of a fraternal beneficiary association from excluding any properly qualified state representatives from the right to vote.

3. An injunction against the performance of the duties of the offices of a fraternal beneficial association, to which defendants claim to have been elected sought on the ground that the election was invalid because persons entitled to vote were denied the right, is not the proper remedy, especially when it does not appear that this was done in bad faith.

(June 30, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiffs in a suit brought to obtain a judicial declaration that a supreme lodge of the defendant order held at Atlanta in 1896 was illegally formed, and to enjoin the officers elected thereby from performing the duties of their office. Affirmed in part. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John P. Poe and Edgar Allen Poe, for appellant.

Injunctions to restrain the corporation from carrying on its business in cases where it has failed to comply with the statute, or exceeded its powers or is conducting its business fraudulently, can be granted only when applied for by the insurance commissioner, leaving in all other respects the powers of a court of equity unimpaired.

Horton v. International Fraternal Alliance, 85 Md. 14.

The whole object of the bill in this case, and the only object, is to test the validity of the election of the individual appellants to their various offices. A court of equity is without power to decide such a question.

Merrill v. Garrett County School Comrs. 70 Md. 272; Washington County New Bd. of School Comrs. v. Washington County Old Bd. of School Comrs. 77 Md. 289; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 764; Johnston v. Jones, 23 N. J. Eq. 216; Moses v. Tompkins, 84 Ala. 618; Moxley v. Alston, 1 Phill. Ch. 790; Hughes v. Parker, 20 N. H. 58; Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am. Dec. 508.

A court of equity has no authority to issue an injunction, indefinitely suspending the officers of a corporation from exercising their functions, for in this way it would be able to accomplish indirectly what it could not do directly, viz., the removal of the officers.

Washington County New Bd. of School Comrs. v. Washington County Old Bd. of School Comrs. 77 Md. 290; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 826; Griffin v. St. Louis Vine & Fruit Growers' Asso. 4 Mo. App. 595.

The appellees have a complete and adequate remedy at law. They should have proceeded by mandamus. It is no answer for them to say that this is not a controversy between rival claimants to office.

Hawkins v. State, 81 Md. 306; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 658; Clark, Corp. p. 244.

Act of 1896, chapter 331, after declaring who shall be entitled to vote, says: "And in computing the number of representatives to which a state or district is entitled in such supreme body, the number of members that is necessary to secure one representative shall be considered the unit of representation." The clause just quoted means nothing, and is void therefore for uncertainty.

The clause does not mention a unit of representation, or state how that unit is to be ascertained, or indicate where it is to be found.

Marwell v. State, Baldwin, 40 Md. 292; Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 52; Smith, Const. & Stat. Const. § 714; Woodbury v. Berry, 18 Ohio St. 462.

Messrs. Isidor Rayner and A. C. Trippe for appellees.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Supreme Lodge, Order of the Golden Chain, of Baltimore city, one of the appellants, was incorporated in this state. Constitutions and by-laws were adopted for the government of the supreme and subordinate lodges of the order. Under the constitution the Maryland members of the association were only entitled to two representatives in the supreme lodge, but in 1896, the legislature passed an act, known as chapter 381 of the Laws of that year, which the appellees claim entitles them to a representation of eight. The appellants contend that the act is not applicable to this association, and is void for uncertainty. The supreme lodge meets biennially, and in May, 1896, met in Atlanta, Georgia. Eight persons including the appellees, claimed to be the regularly elected representatives from this state, and demanded admission to the sessions of the supreme lodge held at Atlanta, but were refused on the ground that Maryland was only entitled to two representatives, which number the supreme lodge offered to admit, but that offer was not accepted. The meetings, at which were the officers of the supreme lodge, several past supreme commanders, and one representative from each of the states of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Georgia, and South Carolina, as well as one from New York, who was also an officer, lasted for several days, and on the last day the officers were elected by them; fifteen out of twenty-three persons present being elected to office. Six of the representatives from Maryland, shortly after their return filed this bill, and afterwards another was made a party complainant. The bill alleges that the eight representatives were denied admittance to the supreme lodge, in defiance of the laws of this state, and that the states of Georgia and Virginia were likewise denied the representation they were entitled to, and that the acts of the supreme lodge were illegal and void. The court below decreed that the proceedings at the sessions in Atlanta, in refusing the complainants' admission, and denying them the right to vote in accordance with the act of 1896, were contrary to law and void, and restrained and enjoined the defendants, claiming to act as officers under that election, from exercising any powers claimed by them by virtue of said election, and from excluding any state representatives properly qualified in accordance with the act of 1896 from the right to vote at any of the sessions of the supreme lodge. The appellants contend that a court of equity is without jurisdiction to grant the relief given, and that the act of 1896 is void, but if valid, does not apply to the defendant corporation. There was no fraud proved, except in so far as it may be inferred from the conduct of the members of the supreme lodge in excluding the representatives, and electing themselves to the offices. Among other prayers in the bill was one for the appointment of a receiver pendente lite, but that was abandoned.

NOTE.—For injunction to protect membership in association, see also Mead v. Stirling (Conn.) 23 L. R. A. 227; Reno Lodge No. 99, I. O. O. F. v. Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. (Kan.) 26 L. R. A. 28. 41 L. R. A.

For injunction to protect personal rights, see note to Chappell v. Stewart (Md.) 37 L. R. A. 783.

When the question of jurisdiction is presented, we would ordinarily dispose of that before considering the other points. But inasmuch as this decree not only enjoins the individual defendants from discharging the duties of their several offices, to which they claim to have been elected at the meeting in May, 1896, but also from excluding any state representatives properly qualified under the act of 1896, from the right to vote at any of the sessions of the supreme lodge, the jurisdiction of the court must be considered with reference to the two branches of the injunction thus granted, as the one is not necessarily disposed of by deciding the other. We will therefore first determine whether the act of 1896 is open to the objections urged by the appellants.

It is conceded that the appellant corporation is "a fraternal beneficiary association," and subject to the provisions of chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894, which added §§ 143 E to 143 R, inclusive, to article 23 of the Code. The act now before us added a section to be known as "143 E 1," to follow 143 E. Although it does not very clearly express all that it is evidently intended for, so far as the matters before us are involved its meaning is sufficiently plain. Its primary object, undoubtedly, was to give subordinate organizations of such associations larger representations in the supreme bodies. By the express terms of § 143 E, every fraternal beneficiary association is required to have a representative form of government; and by the act of 1896 any association of the description set forth in § 143 E was authorized to continue business, provided it complied with that act (and other requirements of the laws of this state) in the supreme body, composed of state, council, conclave, lodge, chapter, or district representatives, who are elected by the members of the association, "and others to the number of one fourth or more of the entire membership of the supreme body who are not so elected as representatives." From article 4 of the Constitution, we find that the supreme lodge of this association is composed of state representatives and other persons, consisting of its officers, the chairman of the advisory board, past supreme commanders, and the originators and members of the supreme lodge at the date of institution who continue in good standing in the order. Those who are not state representatives comprise more than one fourth of the entire membership of the supreme lodge, and hence it would seem that this association is within the very letter of the law. It is urged at length in the answer that it was excluded from the effects of it, by reason of certain proceedings in the legislature when the bill was pending; but as the law, as passed, uses terms sufficiently comprehensive to include the supreme lodge of the defendant, without in any way exempting it, we are not called upon to examine the terms of the bill as originally introduced, or the proceedings thereunder, but must construe the one that became a law. It is also contended that this act does not change the constitution of the defendant association. It provides that "no member is qualified to vote unless he is a state, council, conclave, lodge, chapter, or district representative, elected by the members or their duly accredited delegates, and in computing the number of representatives to which a state or district is entitled in such supreme body, the number of members that is necessary to secure one representative shall be considered the unit of representation and the number of times the membership in any state is greater than this unit of representation is a number of representatives which the state is entitled to in the supreme body." The Constitution of the defendant provides that each state is entitled to representatives in the supreme lodge as follows: "For the first 500 members, one representative; for the first 1,500 members, two representatives; for the first 4,500 members, three representatives;" and for every 5,000 members in excess of 4,500 one additional representative. It is therefore argued that there is no fixed unit and no number that can properly be called such unit. But the language of the statute is, "the number of members that is necessary to secure one representative shall be considered the unit of representation." There can be no question as to what number was necessary, under this constitution, to secure one representative, and that number (500 in this association) is the unit of representation or basis of calculation. That unit is the divisor; the number of members in the state, the dividend; and the quotient, excluding fractions, will be the number of representatives the state is entitled to. Nor is there any difficulty in ascertaining the source from which such unit can be determined. These associations are required by law to have "a representative form of government;" and, if the charters do not prescribe the basis of representation, the Constitution or by-laws should do so. The statute leaves the several associations to fix the number necessary for one representative, but when that is done the law determines the whole number for each state or district, according to the total membership in such state or district, being, then, of opinion that the act of 1896 does apply to the defendant association, and it being shown that there are 4,000 members in Maryland, it follows that they were entitled to eight representatives in the supreme lodge, and not two, as contended by the appellants. The members of the supreme lodge, not only did not admit the eight representatives, as required by the statute, but they totally disregarded it, and elected fifteen of their number to office. This was contrary to the express provision of the law that "no member is qualified to vote unless he is a . . . representative elected by the members or their duly accredited delegates." So far as the proceedings of the sessions at Atlanta show, there was apparently not even a quorum, for this statute says "a majority of the elected representatives shall constitute a quorum." Unless the self constituted members of the supreme lodge are to have a monopoly of the offices and an unlimited control of the association, it would seem that there must and ought to be some remedy for the members. The question, then, is whether the appellees have sought such as the law will afford them.

That a court of equity has power to enjoin the individual defendants, who are members of the supreme lodge, from excluding any properly qualified state representatives from the right to vote at any sessions of the supreme lodge we have no doubt. They hold the offices of supreme commander, vice supreme commander, past supreme commander, supreme secretary, supreme treasurer, supreme medical examiner, and chairman of the advisory board, which are the principal offices of the association. All of them were present at the meeting in Atlanta, and took part in the proceedings refusing to admit the representatives from Maryland, Virginia, and Georgia in accordance with the act of 1896, and by their answer still deny that these members have the right of representation, which we have determined they have. The appellees are not seeking the aid of a court of equity to place them in office. They have not been elected to such offices, and do not claim them. But, as members and state representatives of the association, they have the right to the aid of a court of equity to prohibit these officers, who have thus refused, and still refuse, to permit those entitled to take part in the deliberations and acts of this important body, from excluding them from the right to vote. This branch of the case is clearly within the meaning and reasoning of the decisions in Campbell v. Poultney, 6 Gill & J. 94, 26 Am. Dec. 559; Busey v. Hooper, 35 Md. 15, 6 Am. Rep. 360, and Webb v. Ridgely, 38 Md. 364. It was useless for the appellees to make further appeal for relief to the supreme lodge, and, although ordinarily the rights and interests of a corporation must be asserted by the corporation itself, yet stockholders (or members, when there is no stock) can proceed under such circumstances as these, against those in control of the corporation,—which the members of the supreme lodge are, in this association. Many cases could be cited to sustain a proceeding of this character under such circumstances as we have related, but it is not necessary to refer to those outside of this state, as our own cases are sufficient. See, in addition to those above cited, Davis v. Gemmell, 70 Md. 356; Shaw v. Davis, 78 Md. 314, 23 L. R. A. 294. And in Mason v. Equitable League Supreme Court, 77 Md. 426, it was said: "If the officers of the order should be guilty of misconduct, fraud, or mismanagement, a court of equity has full power to restrain and enjoin them." Whatever the motives of these individual defendants were, their action resulted in not only excluding those that were entitled to be in the supreme lodge, but in securing for themselves control over the association, and lucrative positions which they might not have had if the representatives elected by the members had been permitted to vote. Nor do we think that the act of 1894, chap. 295, in any wise interferes with the right of the appellees to this part of the decree. What is said of that act in the case of Barton v. International Fraternal Alliance, 85 Md. 14, makes it unnecessary for us to discuss it in this connection, as its meaning and scope are there so clearly stated. There may be some question whether this branch of the injunction that was decreed is embraced in the prayer for that writ, but, if there be any defect in that respect, it is cured by § 177 of article 16 of the Code, as construed in the case of Washington County New Bd. of School Comrs. v. Washington County Old Bd. of School Comrs. 77 Md. 291. We are therefore of the opinion that the court had jurisdiction to pass the portion of the decree we have been considering, and to that extent it must be affirmed.

But it was also decreed "that the defendants claiming to act as officers of the Supreme Lodge, Order of the Golden Chain, by virtue of such election, are hereby restrained and enjoined from exercising any powers claimed by them by virtue of said election." That presents the question in a different light from what we have been discussing. The practical effect of that part of the decree is the removal of those defendants from the offices to which they claim they were elected. While it is undoubtedly true that a court of equity has power to enjoin, or otherwise decree against, officers of a private corporation guilty of fraud, misconduct, mismanagement, or some act that is ultra vires, or that would seriously affect the rights of the stockholders or members, we have, after a very diligent search, failed to find any authority that will justify it in not only passing on the validity vel non of an election of officers, but in removing them, without some special or statutory authority. It is true that it is held that, in proceedings over which equity has jurisdiction for some other purpose, if the right to an office or the regularity of an election must be decided in order to give the relief which equity can properly afford, the court has the power to inquire into and determine the validity of the election for the purposes of the suit. Such, for example, are Johnston v. Jones, 28 N. J. Eq. 216, and Mechanics Nat. Bank v. H. C. Burnet Mfg. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 286; and it might be said we have practically done that in the other branch of this case. Even in that class of cases it is held that a court of equity cannot go further, and remove an officer from an office of which he is in possession, or declare the office forfeited. But in this branch of this case, as presented to us by the record, there is no other cause shown for a court of equity to interfere; but the controversy is purely and simply whether it can remove officers, declared elected in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, and not arising incidentally in a matter over which equity admittedly has control. In 1 Thomp. Corp. § 764, it is said: "A court of equity has no authority to determine the validity of an election of the officers of a private corporation, and pronounce judgment of annulment. The title of directors, who are in office under color of an election, and who are, at most, irregularly chosen, cannot be inquired into in a suit in equity instituted to restrain them from exercising the functions of their offices upon the ground of irregularity in their election." To the same effect are 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 52; Johnston v. Jones, 28 N. J. Eq. 216; Mozley v. Aiston, 1 Phill. Ch. 790; Hughes v. Parker, 20 N. H. 58. In High, Inj. 1st ed. § 774, it is said: "Nor will a court of equity, at the suit of stockholders of a corporation, restrain its officers from the exercise of their functions, since such restraint would be equivalent to removal from office and over such a subject equity has no jurisdiction." See also the third edition of the same work (§ 1235), where the subject is more fully discussed. None of the Maryland cases cited go to the extent we are asked to go in this case. It is true, they have sustained the right of stockholders to enjoin proposed illegal or fraudulent methods in the conduct of election of officers; but none of them have decided or intimated that this power can be used, after an election.—although irregular, or even illegal,—to remove those declared elected, or, what is equivalent to that, to prohibit them from exercising the powers vested in them by virtue of such election.

It is said in behalf of the appellees that this is not a contest between them and the individual appellants for the offices held by the latter, and hence mandamus, the proceeding authorized in this state for such purposes, will not answer. But, while it is true they are not asking to be placed in office by this proceeding, they are attempting to oust the appellants, or do what in some respects might have worse results,—to prevent them from discharging the duties of the several offices. The application for a receiver was abandoned, and, if these officers be prohibited from acting, it would necessarily, for the time being, if not permanently, stop the regular business of the corporation; for, if they cannot act, there are no others that can, and unless these offices are filled the affairs of the association cannot be conducted as contemplated by its constitution and by-laws. The court has no power to appoint officers in their stead; and to prohibit these from acting would probably result in the ruin of the association, which might be disastrous to the members, especially the older and delicate ones. The supreme treasurer could neither receive nor pay out money, and the supreme commander could not even call a special meeting, as provided by the constitution, nor could he discharge any of the other important duties devolved on him; and so with the other officers. It may be said that the old officers would hold over. But most of them are the same persons. The treasurer, secretary, medical examiner, and chairman of the advisory board were re-elected to the same positions, and each of the other officers occupied some position before the election at Atlanta. It would, indeed, be difficult for any of them (especially those who have been re-elected to the same offices) to act without violating the spirit of the injunction; but, if they could, it would be of little service to the appellees if a court of equity issued process that would result in the parties who were enjoined being permitted to continue in office by virtue of former elections. There is not even any evidence of mismanagement or misconduct in office on the part of these persons, excepting in so far as their action at the Atlanta meeting reflects on that. If a court of equity assumes jurisdiction, at the instance of a few members of an association, in such cases, where will it end? Is every irregularity in the election of officers to be made the foundation for proceeding in equity? It may be true that this is a more serious one than may often occur, but where is the line to be drawn? There is no evidence in this case of any intentional violation of law, for the record shows that the appellants acted under advice of a learned and prominent member of this bar, who advised them that the law did not apply. In that opinion we do not concur with him, but there is nothing in the record to justify the inference that either he or the defendants did not act in good faith.

It is also said that the appellees and other members of the association are without remedy if a court of equity will not grant this relief. But we cannot agree to that. We have already said they could enjoin the members of the supreme lodge from refusing to let them vote, and they might have gone further, and enjoined those who were not representatives from voting at all. But they could have adopted still easier and simpler methods. The accredited representatives of the members could have organized, elected officers, and then, by application for mandamus, those so elected could have tested the right to the offices; or possibly a mandamus to compel the members of the supreme lodge to admit the representatives would have answered. Other methods suggest themselves which might have been sufficient (although we do not feel called upon to so determine in this case), such as applying for a mandamus to compel the proper officers of the supreme lodge to call another meeting, to hold an election, on the ground that no valid election had been held. So, although we are of opinion that the act of 1896 does apply to the defendant corporation, and is valid, we must reverse that part of the decree that enjoins the individual defendants from performing the duties of the offices to which they claim to have been respectively elected. We will not assume that after the law has been construed by this court these parties will act in defiance of it, but, if they do, there is ample remedy provided for such cases.

Decree affirmed in part and reversed in part, and cause remanded; each side to pay their own costs.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Elwin S. PIPER, Recept.,
v.

NEW YORK CENTRAL & HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(156 N. Y. 324.)

An experienced traveler who opens a vestibule door of a sleeping car by mistake about six o'clock in the morning, while the train is passing through a tunnel and the car is dark, and steps off upon the track, when he supposes he is entering the car closet, is guilty of such negligence as will preclude his recovery, even if the carrier is deemed negligent.

(June 7, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of a General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Kings County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Saunders, Webb, & Worcester, for appellant:

The plaintiff, on his own showing, was clearly guilty of contributory negligence.

No one is justified in incurring known danger merely to avoid an inconvenience.

Adams v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 4 C. P. 789; Hickey v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 429.

The pretended darkness, supposing that the defendant was in any way accountable for it, should ordinarily and properly serve to increase his caution and care on that subject.

Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 186, 60 Am. Rep. 438.

A prudent man attempting to find his way in the dark is bound to take extra precaution.

Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 186, 60 Am. Rep. 438; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 248.

Where a darkness (which did not exist at first) suddenly supervenes, the increase of precaution must be prompt and marked. If the darkness is known to him to be transitory, and the region ahead is one of known and considerable peril, he must stop until the darkness has passed.

Heaney v. Long Island R. Co. 112 N. Y. 125; Purdy v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 87 Hun, 97; Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 148 Ind. 405, 33 L. R. A. 149; Manley v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 18 App. Div. 420; Value v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 18 App. Div. 453.

If there was negligence of the company, it was discovered by plaintiff as a precedent condition, and yet he deliberately determined to take his chances.

Bradley v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 107 Mich. 243.

A prudent man has no right to rely absolutely on the absence of negligence in others.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 39; Waller v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 120 Mo. 635.

The only danger to which plaintiff was exposed was due to the fact that darkness would prevent him from discerning, as accurately as in the light, the difference between the doors. This danger was obvious to him; he deliberately assumed it, and he cannot excuse himself by alleging defendant's negligence.

Weston v. Troy. 139 N. Y. 281; Betta v. Yonkers. 148 N. Y. 67; Hilsenbeck v. Guhring. 181 N. Y. 675; Halpin v. Townsend. 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 417; Reed v. Artell. 84 Va. 231; Adams v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 4 C. P. 789.

The burden is upon the plaintiff to show himself free from contributory negligence.

Myers v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 82 Hun, 86; Winirowski v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 420; Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 529; Bond v. Smith. 113 N. Y. 385.

The slightest contributory negligence will defeat his action.

Dubois v. Kingston. 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804; Cordell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 330.

It is the duty of the court to consult when it clearly appears that the plaintiff's negligence contributed in any degree to the accident.

Cordell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 330; Gonzales v. New York & H. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 440; Krauss v. Wallkill Valley R. Co. 69 Hun, 483; Babcock & Fitchburg R. Co. 140 N. Y. 803.

Defendant had no reason to apprehend an accident like that which the plaintiff claims to have happened, and as the arrangements made by it were such as experience had, up to that time, shown to be safe, suitable, and sufficient, no liability upon its part has been shown.

NOTE.—As to the question of the negligence of a passenger in passing from one car to another, see note to McAfee v. Huidekoper (D. C. App.) 34 L. R. A. 720.

(1 L. R. A.

Cleveland v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 125 N. Y. 299; Dougan v. Champlain Transp. Co. 56 N. Y. 1; Orocheron v. North Shore Staten Island Ferry Co. 56 N. Y. 656; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 455, 38 Am. Rep. 533; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562; Stringham v. Hilton, 111 N. Y. 188, 1 L. R. A. 488; Unger v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497; Sutton v. New York & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 243; Craighead v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 123 N. Y. 391; Fox v. New York, 70 Hun, 181; Race v. Union Ferry Co. 188 N. Y. 644.

Mr. Hamilton Harris, with Messrs. Burr & Coombs, for respondent:

The question of the negligence of the defendant was a question of fact for the jury.

Piper v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 76 Hun, 44; Fiero v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun, 213, Affirmed, 143 N. Y. 674; Ayres v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 4 App. Div. 511; Fox v. New York, 5 App. Div. 849; Boyce v. Manhattan R. Co. 118 N. Y. 814; Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 58, 11 L. R. A. 759; Carpenter v. Boston & A. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 494, 49 Am. Rep. 540.

When there is a conflict of evidence the verdict of the jury is conclusive upon this court, even though the members of the court, had they been on the jury, might have reached a different conclusion on the facts.

Finney v. Gallaudet, 80 N. Y. S. R. 194; Green v. Fortier, 80 N. Y. 640; Duryea v. Vosburgh, 121 N. Y. 57.

All of the testimony being that given by employees of the defendant, who were not disinterested witnesses, the credibility of their testimony was for the jury to pass upon.

Honegger v. Wettstein, 94 N. Y. 261; Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 128 N. Y. 200, 10 L. R. A. 676; Joy v. Diefendorf, 180 N. Y. 9; Karanagh v. Wilson, 70 N. Y. 179.

The question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was submitted properly to the jury, and it was for them to say whether, under all the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff acted as a reasonably prudent man would act under similar circumstances, in proceeding to search for the door of the water closet in the dark instead of returning to the body of the car and asking the porter for a light.

Piper v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 76 Hun, 44; Fiero v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun, 213; Jarvis v. Brooklyn Elev. R. Co. 40 N. Y. S. R. 825, Affirmed without opinion, 133 N. Y. 623; Flagg v. Manhattan R. Co. 17 Jones & S. 251; Dawson v. Sloan, 17 Jones & S. 304; McCauley v. Smith, 47 N. Y. S. R. 500; Palmer v. Dearing, 98 N. Y. 10; Tomkins v. New York Ferry Co. 47 Hun, 563; Morrison v. Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 69 Hun, 100, Affirmed, 144 N. Y. 703.

A person has the right to act on the presumption that another will conduct himself in accordance with the rights and duties of both, and if injured by the act of the other party while so engaged, he will not be guilty of contributory negligence by reason of the place being a point of danger.

41 L. R. A.

Newton v. New York C. R. Co. 29 N. Y. 883; Davenport v. Ruckman, 87 N. Y. 568; Jetter v. New York & H. R. Co. 2 Keyes, 154; Hart v. Erie R. Co. 3 Alb. L. J. 312; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558.

It is not sufficient for a company simply to promulgate a set of rules; they are also bound to exercise such a supervision over their servants and the prosecution of their business as to have reason to believe that it is being conducted in pursuance of such rules.

Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 126 N. Y. 549; Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 58, 11 L. R. A. 759.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff has sought to recover damages of the defendant for personal injuries received by him while a passenger upon one of its trains which were attributable, as he alleges, to neglect in management. He was a passenger upon the train from Albany to New York city in the night of January 13, 1892. He had purchased a ticket entitling him to a berth in a sleeping car, and took possession of it early in the evening, several hours before the car was attached to the train. The car was of the "vestibule" pattern, that being a construction with respect to the platform, which permitted of a continuous passage from and to other similarly constructed cars without exposure to the discomforts or perils incident to a connection by open platforms. The sections for passengers were on either side of a straight aisle, which terminated, at either end, in washrooms for the use, respectively, of men and women. Beyond the washroom was the vestibule, on either side of which were doors opening upon the car steps and furnishing ingress and egress to the train. On the night in question, the men's washroom was in the forward end of the car. On the one side were the washbowls, and on the other were, first, a porter's closet, and, next to it, the water closet. The door of this latter closet was about in the center of the washroom. The plaintiff had entered the car at Albany by that end, which, like the rest of the car, received its light from a hanging lamp. He had frequently traveled on vestibule trains, and was familiar with the sleeping car arrangements upon this and other railroads. He had occasion, after retiring for the night to his section, to go to the men's closet in this washroom, and knew about its location. He was awakened in the morning by the porter, at about 6 o'clock, when the train was at or near Mott Haven, and, while partly undressed, again started for the men's closet. He observed that there was some light from a lamp in the center of the car, and that some came through the windows of the sections whose berths had already been made up. He testifies that, when he reached the threshold of the washroom, the part of the car where he stood was plunged into darkness, and that he believed they were in the Park avenue tunnel. There was no lamplight in the washroom, and none in the dome of the vestibule. He could distinguish such objects as the towels by the washbowls, but not one door from another. He proceeded on for a short distance, reached for the handle of the closet door, opened it, stepped, as he supposed, into the closet, and immediately fell off of the car and upon the track, where, after lying awhile, he was picked up suffering from a fractured leg. He had opened the vestibule door by mistake. He charges the defendant with the responsibility for the occurrence, in that the washroom was not lighted properly, and that the vestibule door was not locked or bolted, and he alleges that more employees were needed to insure a proper observance of the rules in those respects. He recovered a verdict which the general term has sustained (89 Hun, 75); and the defendant now appeals to this court, asserting that not only its own freedom from negligence was shown, but that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that, therefore, it was error to refuse to dismiss the complaint upon the evidence.

I think that the plaintiff should have been nonsuited. If we might assume that the defendant's servants were guilty of some neglect of duty which would impose a liability upon their employer for this accident (a proposition about which I entertain very considerable doubt), it is clear that the plaintiff failed to use that vigilance and prudence which it was incumbent upon him to use in the situation in which he was placed at the time. He had been a frequent traveler upon railroads, and was familiar with such sleeping car accommodations as were furnished in the present instance. Upon this occasion, he was either so confident of his steps as to be indifferent as to where, or how far, they took him, or he was, from some cause or other, mentally preoccupied and oblivious of his surroundings, and acted mechanically, instead of intelligently. That will not do, and cannot be excused, upon such an issue. An intelligent being, as the plaintiff certainly appears to have been, when placed in that unwonted situation which results from being rapidly transported over the ground by the appliance of powerful mechanical forces, and the use of such vehicles as are adapted to the purpose, cannot omit to use his senses, and assume that there is no cause to be prudent and vigilant. He has the right to rely upon the performance by the railroad company of its duty to exercise the utmost degree of care and skill which human prudence and foresight can suggest in transporting him; but that does not relieve him from the duty of using his own senses of sight, hearing, and perception. However great the perfection attained in the operation of railroads, a train is not absolutely a safe place, nor a normal situation for a person. Railroad companies are not insurers of the safety of travelers. When they have done all that human skill, prudence, and foresight suggest, in the way of precautions, and of a safe roadbed, of suitable passenger cars, and of such proper mechanical appliances as are required in the operation of a train, they cannot be required to do more. Such risks as arise from heedlessness on the part of the passenger cannot be foreseen, and if the railroad company is to be liable for them, then, indeed, it becomes an insurer of the safety of its passengers. This accident was not attributable to defects in any of the appliances or machinery designed for the operation of the train. It happened simply because, put in its briefest form, the plaintiff, not regarding the darkness of the moment, opened the wrong door of several, and walked out of the car, instead of into a closet. Was the company bound to foresee and to provide against such an extraordinary occurrence and such heedless conduct? Practically put, the question is this: Can a man, in the full possession of his senses, traveling upon a railroad train, and finding himself plunged into darkness, at a moment when groping about in the car, proceed with the same confidence as in the light and be regarded as a prudent man? The question seems to answer itself.

Of course, the plaintiff insists that whether he contributed to the result by his acts was a question upon the facts for the jury to decide. The argument, in effect, is that, if he had the right to assume that the rules would be observed, and, therefore, that the vestibule door was properly bolted, then he had the right to grope about in the dark without fear of consequences, and whether he acted in so doing as a prudent man is for the jury to say. I cannot find any authority for that in the cases, and I think that reason refuses its approval to such a proposition. If the fact was—and we must under this verdict so assume—that the light was out in the washroom, either from its sudden extinguishment or by inattention, and the sudden entering of the train into the tunnel left the plaintiff in darkness, he had two courses open to him. He could wait for the light to be renewed, or he could try to reach the closet door without any sufficient light to guide him. What he said he did was to step out, without any hesitation, to open the door that he came to, and to continue on in perfect confidence, and that, thus, he fell off of the car. There were several circumstances which should have, more or less forcibly, made a man with his wits about him notice his situation, especially one so familiar as the plaintiff was with the car arrangements. When he crossed the threshold of the washroom, from the car aisle, he had only about 2½ feet to go to be opposite the door knob of the men's closet. Dividing the floor of the car from that of the vestibule platform was a sill of some 9 inches in width, with a total difference in height of the floors of about 4 inches, and the former was carpeted, while the latter was covered with a rubber mat. The vestibule door was divided into two parts, each some 18 inches in width, and united by projecting hinges on the inside, which permitted the door, upon being opened, to fold upon itself. Finally, upon opening the door, there was all the change from the atmosphere of the car to the peculiar atmosphere of a tunnel, and of a foggy and rainy morning. The absence of mind, which deprived the plaintiff of his ability to notice all these remarkable differences in the situation, might well have permitted him to fumble with the latch or bolt of the vestibule door without any awakening of his senses.

I think that we must hold, as matter of law, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in utterly failing to use that prudence which was especially incumbent upon him under the circumstances of the situation. The darkness called upon him to use it, and, had he done so, the accident could not, within any reasonable probability, have happened. A person whose power of vision is temporarily obstructed by some supervening condition should take the greater care, and should, if it be possible, await its passing away. If he neglects to proceed cautiously, he must accept the consequences of his undue precipitation. The following cases among others, will suffice as more or less pertinent illustrations: Loffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 142, 60 Am. Rep. 438; Henney v. Long Island R. Co. 112 N. Y. 125; Hilsen- beck v. Guhring, 131 N. Y. 674. Therefore, without discussing at all the question of whether the defendant was shown to have been guilty of some neglect, I think, upon the plaintiff's own showing, that he was himself negligent, and that it was error to refuse to dismiss his complaint, and to submit the case to the determination of the jury.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered with costs to abide the event.

All concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Ohio, ex rel. F. S. MONNETT, Attorney General,

v.

Grace A. ADAMS.

(58 Ohio St. 612.)

The act of April 26, 1898, to amend § 110 and other sections of the Revised Statutes (98 Laws, 405), is ineffectual to render a woman eligible to the office of notary public, in view of the provisions of § 4 of article 15, and § 1 of article 5, of the Constitution; the former section requiring that an officer shall be an elector, and the latter that an elector shall be a male citizen.

(June 21, 1898.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of quo warranto to oust defendant from the position of notary public for Lake County to which she had been appointed by the governor. Judgment of ouster.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messrs. F. S. Monnett, Attorney General, and John L. Lott, for plaintiff:

Wherever the term "notary" is used, it is always used in connection with the term "office."

An office is defined to be a right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it.

2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 328.

An office is a public station or employment, conferred by the appointment of government; and embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties.

United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830.

A notary is defined to be an officer who publicly attests deeds or other writings to make them authentic in another country. Also an officer who confirms and attests the truth of writings to render them available as evidence.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 753; Proffatt, Notaries, § 1; Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; Notaries Public, 9 Colo. 628; State, Atty. Gen., v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 347; State, Atty. Gen., v. Jennings, 57 Ohio St. 415; Cayon v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 68 Wis. 519.

No person shall be elected or appointed to

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to the right of women to be notaries public, see also Opinion of the Justices (Mass.) 32 L. R. A. 360, and other cases there cited.
41 L. R. A.

any office in this state unless he possess the qualifications of an elector.

Const. art. 15, § 4.

Under the Constitution and laws of Ohio, a woman is not eligible to the office of notary public.

State, Robinson, v. McKinley, 57 Ohio St. 627; Notaries Public, 9 Colo. 628; Story, Const. §§ 789-792; United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830; Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 586, 6 L. R. A. 842.

A notary public is a county officer.

Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; Notaries Public, 9 Colo. 628.

Messrs. A. G. Reynolds, John Kenney, James R. Garfield, and W. E. Fink, Jr., for defendant.

Per Curiam:

The commission was issued to Miss Adams under authority supposed to be conferred upon the governor by the act of April 26, 1898, to amend § 110 and other sections of the Revised Statutes (98 Ohio Laws, 405). Before the amendment, the pertinent provision of this section was: "The governor may appoint and commission as notaries public as many persons having the qualifications of electors," etc. In the amended section the phrase "having the qualifications of electors" is omitted. The amendment is ineffectual for the purpose contemplated, because § 4 of article 15 of the Constitution ordains that "no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possess the qualifications of an elector." The qualifications of an elector are prescribed in § 1 of article 5 of the Constitution, and it is required that an elector shall be a male citizen of the United States. That a notary public is an officer seems clear from the nature of his functions, as well as from the authorities upon the subject. That a notary is an officer, and that a woman is ineligible under these constitutional provisions, are propositions distinctly held in Notaries Public, 9 Colo. 628. That a notary is an officer is held in Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477, and Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 586, 6 L. R. A. 842. The same conclusion is implied in Warwick v. State, 25 Ohio St. 21, where it is held that a woman may be deputy clerk of the probate court, because the acts of such deputy are not independent, but are the acts of the principal. The contrary view is not supported by State, Eastern & W. School Dist., v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio, 178, and State, Mills, v. Columbus Bd. of Elections, 9 Ohio C. C. 184. It was held in those cases that the qualifications of an elector are not essential to the holding of positions of an official character under the school laws, because of the effect of the constitutional provisions relating especially to the subject of schools. Those cases have not sufficient breadth or strength of foundation to admit of additional superstructure. The conclusion here reached is in accord with that announced in State, Robinson, v. McKinley, 57 Ohio St. 627.

Judgment of ouster.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

City of EVANSVILLE, Appt.,

v.

Amelia SENHENN.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Departure from decisions previously made is required by the policy of the law where adherence to them would be productive of more evil than the departure therefrom, and the establishment of a better and sounder rule.
2. Negligence of the parent or guardian having custody and control of an infant in exposing it to danger will not be imputed to the child so as to preclude its right of action against a third person by whose negligence it is injured.
3. The negligence of private parties piling lumber in a street, either for themselves or when delivering it to the city, will not render the city liable in the absence of notice, either express or implied.

On rehearing.

4. If there is any evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that a certain fact exists pertinent to the issues the trial judge must, if requested, instruct the jury what the law arising from such fact is, even though he may be of the opinion that such fact is not established by a preponderance of the whole evidence.

(September 15, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warrick County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George A. Cunningham, for appellant:

The question whether or not there was negligence on the part of the parents of the appellee should have been submitted to the jury.

Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 92 Am. Dec. 269; Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 818; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545; Hathaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25; Higgins v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 52 Ind. 110; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Wolf, 59 Ind. 89; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 828; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 109 Ind. 179, 58 Am. Rep. 387; Louisville, N.

A. & C. R. Co. v. Shanks, 132 Ind. 395; Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Wilson, 134 Ind. 95; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely, 138 Ind. 600.

The doctrine of imputed negligence was recognized as the law of this state in—

Terre Haute Street R. Co. v. Tappenbeck, 9 Ind. App. 423; also Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sears, 11 Ind. App. 654.

Where the duty to keep its streets in safe condition rests upon the corporation, it is liable for injuries caused by its neglect or omission to keep the streets in repair, as well as for those caused by defects occasioned by the wrongful acts of others; but as the basis of the action is negligence, notice to the corporation of the defect which caused the injury, or of facts from which notice thereof may reasonably be inferred, or proof of circumstances from which it appears that the defect ought to have been known and remedied by it, is essential to liability.

3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 1024; Warsaw v. Dunlap, 112 Ind. 576; Leeds v. Richmond, 102 Ind. 372.

If the lumber was piled in a careless manner by the persons having the contract to deliver the lumber to the city, then this was not the act of the city and the city would not be liable until it had notice either express or implied.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 1028; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696.

Stricter vigilance is required of a private than a municipal corporation.

Turner v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 57.

The refusal to instruct the jury that if the lumber was placed in the street, not by the city but by someone else, to be used in the construction or repair of a building, then the city is not liable without notice, was error.

Wood v. Mears, 12 Ind. 515, 74 Am. Dec. 223; Vincennes v. Richards, 23 Ind. 381; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 730.

It will not do for the court below to determine for itself whether or not it was the duty of the city under all of the circumstances to barricade or guard the lumber pile. That question should have been left for the jury to determine. Where, as in this case, the facts are not admitted, the question of negligence is one for the jury.

Franklin v. Harter, 127 Ind. 446; Howe v. Ohmart, 7 Ind. App. 32; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wright, 80 Ind. 236.

NOTE.—The above decision overruling earlier cases brings the law of Indiana into line with that of most other jurisdictions, as shown in note to Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox (Ill.) 21 L. R. A. 76, 41 L. R. A.

On the same question, see Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 734.

The negligence complained of must be the proximate cause of the injury.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1007; Bluffton v. Mathews, 92 Ind. 213; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 765.

They are only bound to exercise reasonable care.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1015; Warsaw v. Dunlap, 112 Ind. 576; Turner v. Indianapolis, 86 Ind. 51; Buscher v. Lafayette, 8 Ind. App. 595.

Mr. J. E. Williamson for appellee.

McCabe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee sued the appellant in the superior court of Vanderburg county for damages arising from a personal injury caused by the falling of a pile of lumber through the alleged negligence of appellant, resulting in the loss of appellee's foot, in August, 1874, when she was about five years old. The venue was changed to the Warwick circuit court, where a trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant. On an appeal to this court that judgment was reversed for error in instructing the jury. Senhenn v. Evansville, 140 Ind. 675. On the return of the case to the circuit court another trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff over defendant's motion for a new trial. The only error assigned is upon the action of the trial court in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial. The only errors complained of and urged by appellant under that motion are the giving and refusal of certain instructions by the trial court.

One of the most important questions in the case arises upon the court's refusal to give instruction No. 13 asked by the appellant, reading as follows: "If the plaintiff's parents knew that the pile of lumber was in the street, and was dangerous, and liable to fall, then it was their duty to exercise reasonable care in keeping the plaintiff away from the same; and if they failed to exercise such reasonable care, and such failure directly contributed to the injury, the plaintiff cannot recover." The evidence was such as to make this instruction applicable if it expresses the law correctly on the facts. This instruction raises one of the most vexed questions in the law. It is well settled that an infant of tender years is deemed in law not possessed of sufficient discretion to make it guilty of negligence for its failure to exercise due care for its own safety. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 8d ed. p. 48, note 1; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1181. On that point there is no conflict of opinion. But there is a sharp conflict of opinion between courts of last resort as to whether the negligence of the parent or guardian having the custody and control of such infant in exposing it to danger from the negligence of others, whereby it is injured, can be attributed to such infant so as to defeat its right of recovery therefor. It is contended in support of the correctness of the instruction by appellee's counsel that the overwhelming weight of judicial decisions condemns the instruction, while appellant contends that this court is committed to the doctrine expressed by the instruction in a long line of its own decisions, in proof of which we are cited to the cases of Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 92 Am. Dec. 269; Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 818; 41 L. R. A.

Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 645; Hathaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25; Evansville & O. R. Co. v. Wolf, 59 Ind. 89; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 109 Ind. 179, 58 Am. Rep. 887; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shanks, 182 Ind. 395; Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Wilson, 184 Ind. 95; Cleveland, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely, 138 Ind. 600.

But it is contended by appellant's counsel that the question here involved, namely, whether the contributory negligence of the parents of an infant plaintiff of such tender years as incapacitates it to exercise due care is imputable to the child, was not presented, considered, or decided in any of these cases.

This claim is a little too broad. That question may not have been presented or considered in any of those cases, and we are inclined to think that is true. But in two of the cases only was it decided. It is recognized as established law everywhere that in an action by a parent on account of the death of such an infant of tender years under statutes for the death of the child caused by the negligence of the defendant and for loss of services where death did not ensue, at common law, the parent's negligence through which the child was exposed to the danger contributing to the injury defeats the parent's action, it being recognized that there is no difference in the effect of such negligence on the part of the parent in such an action and the effect of his negligence contributing to an injury to his own person or property. In either case he attempts to found an action for damages on his own negligence and wrong, which would be manifestly unjust, as well as against principle and authority. But where the child brings the action to recover damages for its own injury, where the judgment recovered must inure to its own exclusive benefit, where its improvident actions contributed to such injury, manifestly a very different question is presented. The law taking cognizance of its want of discretion, and that its tender years renders it impossible for it to know any better, exempts it from the charge of negligence.

Upon what principle, then, we are led to inquire, may its parent's, guardian's, or custodian's negligence be imputed to it so as to take away its property in its cause of action for defendant's negligence making it a cripple for life? We know of none unless this court is by its previous decisions irretrievably committed to that doctrine. The first case cited above, viz., Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 92 Am. Dec. 269, was a case where the father, as administrator, recovered the judgment for the death of his son through the negligence of the defendant railway company. The judgment was reversed for error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint assigning for cause insufficiency of facts; (2) that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue as administrator of his infant son. It was held that the right of action by the statute was in the father as such, and not in the administrator, and it was further held that the complaint was bad for failure to allege that the parents of the infant, being seven years of age, were free from contributory negligence, and it was also held that the evidence was insufficient. This decision was clearly right, because under the statute the cause of action, if any existed, belonged to the father as such. That right of action for the negligence of the defendant could only be maintained by him by allegation and proof that his own negligence did not contribute to the injury sued for, as in any other suit by him for negligence. There was not any question made, as there could not have been made any question, in the case as to the imputability of the parent's negligence to the injured child. Yet this court, in support of its conclusion, cited the leading case, and the one which originated the doctrine of imputing the negligence of the parent or custodian to the child, namely, Hartfield v. Roper (decided by the supreme court of New York in 1839) 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 278. While that case decides that the contributory negligence of the parent may defeat an action for injury through negligence to an infant who is non sui juris, making it to that extent applicable, and affords support to the conclusion reached in Vining's Case, yet Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 278, goes further, and originates the doctrine of the imputability of the parent's negligence to the child so as to defeat its right of action,—a proposition not involved in Vining's Case.

The next case in which any question of the sort was involved coming up before this court was Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 318, and that case did involve the precise question here involved, but it appears from the case that this court did not think any other or different question was presented than that presented and decided in Vining's Case. There is not a word in the case that indicates that this court intended to decide that an infant non sui juris injured by negligence is chargeable with the negligence of its parents contributing to its injury. The case is decided upon the theory, simply, that the parent's negligence contributing to the injury defeats the action. The only authority cited for such conclusion is Vining's Case, and that this court supposed it was deciding nothing but the same question that had been decided by it in that case is clearly evidenced by the language in reference thereto in the Huffman Case, as follows: "We are clear that the law was correctly stated [in Vining's Case], and its application to this case cannot be questioned." That case was correctly decided, as we have already seen, and that seems to be all this court supposed it was deciding in the Huffman Case, the opinion being delivered in both cases by the same judge, Ray. But the latter case necessarily decides an entirely different question than the former, namely, that the negligence of the parent may be imputed to the injured child who is non sui juris so as to defeat its action for its own injury caused by a defendant's negligence. The most cogent reasons ought to be shown why such an inconsiderate judgment should bind this court to a rule thus inadvertently established, and without consideration of the real question involved and decided. We are now for the first time in the history of our court asked to give the question consideration, and say whether, in our judgment, the law imputes the parent's negligence to the child non sui juris in such an action. The decision in the Huffman Case is the principal barrier to such consideration and decision, and, while it is the policy of the law not to depart from decisions previously made by a court of last resort, yet the same law does require such departure where adherence to such decisions would be productive of more evil than the departure therefrom, and the establishment of the better and sounder rule. It is very seldom that a departure from decisions which establish a rule of property can be justified. But the decision in the Huffman Case does not establish a rule of property. The only other case in this court that can be construed into holding to the doctrine necessarily involved in the decision in Huffman's Case is Hathaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25. That case did necessarily involve the same question involved and decided in Huffman's Case. And for the first time this court seemed to realize what had been decided without consideration in the Huffman Case in the following language by Downey, J., delivering the opinion of the court, namely: "It seems harsh to apply this doctrine to a case where damage occurs to a child, and yet the application is made, and this whether the fault is that of the child itself or the negligence of the person under whose immediate care it is."

This doctrine is sanctioned by several decisions of this court. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 92 Am. Dec. 269; Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 318; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545." This language sounds more like an apology than the decision of a great principle. All the other cases decided by this court to which we have been referred named in the forepart of this opinion, including the Bowen Case, in 40 Ind., the last case cited in the foregoing quotation, with certain exceptions, hereinafter mentioned, are cases where the parent sues for damages to him on account of loss of services at common law or under the statute, and the rule was correctly applied that his negligence in exposing his child contributing to the injury defeated his action, which has no influence whatever on the question now before us. But the marked distinction between the two classes of cases was wholly lost sight of by this court in deciding the Huffman Case and the Hathaway Case. The observations of Chief Justice Beasley in discussing Hartfield v. Roper, speaking for the supreme court of New Jersey, are so pertinent that we adopt them: "The problem is, whether an infant of tender years can be vicariously negligent, so as to deprive itself of a remedy that it would otherwise be entitled to. In some of the American states this question has been answered by the courts in the affirmative, and in others in the negative. To the former of these classes belongs the decision in Hartfield v. Roper, reported in 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 278. This case appears to have been one of first impression on this subject, and it is to be regarded, not only as the precursor, but as the parent, of all the cases of the same strain that have since appeared. The inquiry with respect to the effect of the negligence of the custodian of the infant, too young to be intelligent of situations and circumstances was directly presented for decision in the primary case thus referred to. . . . It is obvious that the judicial theory was, that the infant was, through the medium of its custodian, the doer, in part, of its own misfortune, and that, consequently, by force of the well-known rule, under such conditions, he had no right to an action. This, of course, was visiting the child for the neglect of the custodian, and such infliction is justified in the case cited in this wise: 'The infant,' says the court, 'is not ex jure. He belongs to another, to whom discretion in the care of his person is exclusively confided. That person is keeper and agent for this purpose; in respect to third persons his act must be deemed that of the infant: his neglects the infant's neglects.' It will be observed that the entire context of this quotation is the statement of a single fact, and a deduction from it, the premise being, that the child must be in the care and charge of an adult, and the inference being that, for that reason, the neglects of the adult are the neglects of the infant. But surely this is conspicuously a non sequitur. How does the custody of the infant justify, or lead to, the imputation of another's fault to him? The law, natural and civil, puts the infant under the care of the adult, but how can this right to care for and protect be construed into a right to waive, or forfeit, any of the legal rights of the infant? The capacity to make such waiver or forfeiture is not a necessary, or even convenient, incident of this office of the adult, but, on the contrary, is quite inconsistent with it, for the power to protect is the opposite of the power to harm, either by act or omission. In this case in Wendell it is evident that the rule of law enunciated by it is founded in the theory that the custodian of the infant is the agent of the infant. But this is a mere assumption without legal basis, for such custodian is the agent, not of the infant, but of the law. If such supposed agency existed, it would embrace many interests of the infant, and could not be confined to the single instance where an injury is inflicted by the co-operative tort of the guardian. And yet it seems certain that such custodian cannot surrender or impair a single right of any kind that is vested in the child, nor impose any legal burden upon it. If a mother travelling with her child in her arms should agree with a railway company, that in case of an accident to such infant by reason of the joint negligence of herself and the company the latter should not be liable to a suit by the child, such an engagement would be plainly invalid on two grounds. First the contract would be contra bonos mores, and, second, because the mother was not the agent of the child authorized to enter into the agreement. Nevertheless, the position has been deemed defensible that the same evil consequences to the infant will follow from the negligence of the mother in the absence of such supposed contract, as would have resulted if such contract should have been made, and should have been held valid. In fact, this doctrine of the imputability of the misfeasance of the keeper of a child to the child itself, is deemed to be a pure interpolation into the law, for, until the case under criticism it was absolutely unknown, nor is it sustained by legal analogies. Infants have always been the particular objects of the favor and protection of the law. In the language of an ancient authority this doctrine is thus expressed: 'The common principle is, that an infant, in all things which sound in his benefit, shall have favor and preferment in law as well as another man, but shall not be prejudiced by anything in his disadvantage. 9 Vin. Abr. 374.' . . . Nothing could be more to the prejudice of an infant than to convert, by construction of law, the connection between himself and his custodian into an agency to which the harsh rule of respondet superior should be applicable. The answerableness of the principal for the authorized acts of his agent is not so much the dictate of natural justice as of public policy, and has arisen, with some propriety, from the circumstances that the creation of the agency is a voluntary act, and that it can be controlled at the will of its creator. But in the relationship between the infant and its keeper all these decisive characteristics are wholly wanting. The law imposes the keeper upon the child, who, of course, can neither control nor remove him, and the injustice, therefore, of making the latter responsible, in any measure whatever, for the torts of the former, would seem to be quite evident. Such subjectively, would be hostile, in every respect, to the natural rights of the infant, and consequently cannot, with any show of reason, be introduced into that provision which both necessity and law establish for his protection. Nor can it be said that its existence is necessary to give just enforcement to the rights of others. When it happens that both the infant and its custodian have been injured by the co-operative negligence of such custodian and a third party, it seems reasonable, at least in some degree, that the latter should be enabled to say to the custodian, you and I, by our common carelessness, have done this wrong, and therefore neither can look to the other for redress. But when such wrongdoer says to the infant, your guardian and I, by our joint misconduct, have brought this loss upon you, consequently you have no right of action against me, but you must look for indemnification to your guardian alone, a proposition is stated that appears to be without any basis either in good sense or law. The conversion of the infant, who is entirely free from fault, into a wrongdoer, by imputation, is a logical contrivance, uncongenial with the spirit of jurisprudence. The sensible and legal doctrine is this: An infant of tender years cannot be charged with negligence; nor can he be so charged with the commission of such fault by substitution, for he is incapable of appointing an agent, the consequence being that he can, in no case, be considered to be the blamable cause, either in whole, or in part, of his own injury. There is no injustice, nor hardship, in requiring all wrongdoers to be answerable to a person who is incapable either of self-protection or of being a participator in their misfeasance. Nor is it to be overlooked that the theory here repudiated, if it should be adopted, would go the length of making an infant in its nurse's arms answerable for all the negligences of such nurse while thus employed in its service. . . . If the neglects of the guardian are to be regarded as the neglects of the infant, as was asserted in the New York decision, it would, from logical necessity, follow, that the infant must indemnify those who should be harmed by such neglects. That such a doctrine has never prevailed is conclusively shown by the fact that in the reports there is no indication that such a suit has ever been brought. It has already been observed that judicial opinion, touching the subject just discussed, is in a state of direct antagonism, and it would therefore serve no useful purpose to refer to any of them. It is sufficient to say that the leading text-writers have concluded that the weight of such authority is adverse to the doctrine that an infant can become, in any wise, a tortfeasor by imputation. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 75; Whart. Neg. § 811; 2 Wood. Railway Law, p. 1284." Newman v. Phillipsburg Horse Car R. Co. 52 N. J. L. 446, 8 L. R. A. 842.

In the states of Alabama, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Georgia, Vermont, Louisiana, Virginia, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, New Jersey, and perhaps others, the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper has been distinctly repudiated. The supreme court of North Carolina says: "The imputation of the negligence of parents and guardians to children of tender age is, says Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (vol. 1, § 74), an invention of the supreme court of New York in the . . . case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 273, and has been followed in many of the decisions of that state, although it is said by these authors to be founded upon a dictum which has only been assumed to be the law by the court of last resort, but never squarely presented to that tribunal for decision. And they further remark that it may well be doubted whether the question has ever been fully argued anywhere, and that the result of their examination of the cases is to satisfy them 'that the last of the long series of so called decisions on this point is like the first, a mere dictum uttered without hearing argument and without consideration.'" Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 114 N. C. 699, 25 L. R. A. 784.

In reviewing the case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 273, Mr. Beach says that the doctrine, as applied to children too young to exercise discretion, is an anomaly, and in striking contrast with the case of a donkey which is carelessly exposed in the highway, and negligently run down and injured, and also with the case of oysters carelessly placed in the bed of a river, and injured by the negligent operation of a vessel, in both of which cases actions have been maintained. And he forcibly observes that under the principle referred to, the child, were he an ass or oyster, would secure a protection which is denied him as a human being of tender years. Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 415. This author, in his examination of the doctrine, remarks: "It is not true that an infant is not sui juris. In the sense of being entitled to maintain an action for his own benefit, he is sui juris. As far as his right of action is concerned he is in no respect the chattel of his father. . . . The judgment [when suing by guardian or next friend], if any is recovered, is the property of the minor." Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 128. The supreme court of Illinois was classed by text-writers and other courts as was Indiana, as holding to the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper. But the supreme court of Illinois, in Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 188 Ill. 870, 21 L. R. A. 76, after reviewing twelve Illinois decisions, decided in 1891 against the rule in Hartfield v. Roper, and said: "It seems to be assumed by several of the writers on the subject that this court is committed to the doctrine that in a suit by a child to recover damages caused by the negligence of the defendant, the negligence of the plaintiff's parents or custodians may be imputed to the plaintiff in support of the defense of contributory negligence. While there is in some of the cases some foundation for this assumption, yet, in our opinion, the question has never been so considered or determined by this court as to make it the settled rule in this state. Most of the cases to which reference is made as supporting said doctrine were suits brought by a parent in his own right, or as the legal representative of the child, where the death of the child was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant." After reviewing the Illinois cases, that court goes on to say: "It is apparent that in none of the cases above mentioned was there any occasion for the court to determine whether, as a rule of law, the negligence of the plaintiff's parents or custodian would sustain the defense of contributory negligence, nor is there any attempt in any of them to consider or discuss the rule. In several of them language is used which would seem to imply a tacit recognition of the doctrine of imputed negligence, but in none of them was the adoption of that doctrine essential to the decision, nor can we suppose from the language used that the court intended to commit itself definitely to an affirmance of that doctrine." "The rule denying the doctrine of imputed negligence is now recognized and enforced by the courts of many of the states, and is supported by the reasoning and authority of text-writers whose opinions are justly entitled to a high degree of consideration. Among them may be mentioned Mr. Bishop, who in his recent treatise of Non Contract Law, § 582, says: 'This new doctrine of imputed negligence, whereby the minor loses his suit, not only where he is negligent himself, but where his father, grandmother, or mother's maid is negligent, is as flatly in conflict with the established system of the common law as anything possible to be suggested. The law never took away a child's property because his father was poor, or shiftless, or a scoundrel, or because anybody who could be made to respond to a suit for damages was a negligent custodian of it. But, by the new doctrine, after a child has suffered damages, which, confessedly, are as much his own as an estate conferred upon him by gift, and which he is entitled to obtain out of any of the several defendants who may have contributed to them, he cannot have them if his father, grandmother, or mother's maid happens to be the one making the contribution. In these and other respects, it is submitted, the established principles stated in a preceding section are conclusive of the proposition that the doctrine now in contemplation does not belong to the common law.'" To the same effect, see Whart. Neg. §§ 814 et seq.; Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 88-48.

The supreme court of Georgia, in Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 26 L. R. A. 558, in an able opinion, condemning Hartfield v. Roper, and speaking of this Illinois case, says: "In many of the text-books it is stated that the opposite view prevails in Illinois, and numerous decisions of the supreme court of that state are cited in support of this statement, seemingly with good reason. Be this as it may, however, that state, by its recent decisions, has 'wheeled into line,' and joined the procession of those jurisdictions which have repudiated the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper."

Iowa was also classed as one of the states holding to the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper, until Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545, was decided in 1889. In that case the Iowa cases were reviewed, and it was held that the previous decisions of that court had assumed, without deciding, that the true doctrine was that of Hartfield v. Roper, but in this latter decision the court distinctly and emphatically repudiated that doctrine.

We therefore conclude that these authorities announce and declare the only correct rule of law upon the subject, and hence the cases of Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 818, and Huthaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25, in so far as they conflict with the conclusion here reached, are overruled. It follows that the court did not err in refusing the thirteenth instruction.

One of the cases decided by this court and cited by appellant's counsel as sustaining the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper is Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shanks, 133 Ind. 395. But that case does not so decide, but simply assumes that doctrine to be the law, both parties seeming to concede that such was the law.

Another one of the list of cases cited by appellant calling for special mention is that of Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Wilson, 184 Ind. 95. The complaint was held bad in that case because it showed that the plaintiff, a boy nine years of age, was guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding its general averment that he was free from contributory negligence, the complaint having proceeded on the theory that he had sufficient age and discretion to be chargeable with negligence. No question about the imputability of negligence is hinted at in the case, much less decided.

The only other case in the list cited by appellant not embraced in the class where the parent sues as parent for the death of the child under the statute or at common law for loss of services is Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely, 138 Ind. 600. No question of the imputability of the negligence of the parents or custodians was involved or decided in that case. The plaintiff was a boy, who was eleven years old when the injury occurred, suing by next friend. This court, in answer to the objection that the complaint did not allege due care on part of the boy's parents, observed: "The appellee in this case is suing for his own injury. He was himself capable of going to school across the rail road, and his parents are not in the case, nor is it necessary that they should be."

The refusal of two other instructions is complained of by the appellant, reading as follows:

"Seven. If, at the time of the injuries complained of, the defendant had a contract with any person to furnish it with lumber by the year or otherwise, and to deliver the same to the city, and such person did in fact, under such contract, deliver said lumber, and pile the same in the street, then the act of such person or persons in delivering and piling the same was not the act of the city, and the city would not be liable for any negligence of such person in placing the same in the street, unless it had notice thereof, either express or implied." "Twelfth. If the lumber mentioned in the complaint was not placed in the street by the city, but was placed there by someone else, to be used in the construction or repair for a building, or for any other purpose, then the city is not liable for any accident resulting therefrom, unless it had notice, either express or implied, that the same was in the street, and that the same was in an unsafe and dangerous condition." The first paragraph of the complaint proceeded upon the theory that the city itself placed the lumber in the street and the second that it suffered it to exist after notice. There was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that the lumber was piled in the street by sawmill men with whom the city had a contract for its purchase and delivery. There was also evidence from which the jury might have inferred that the lumber belonged to private persons, to be used in the erection of a dwelling house, and with which the city had no connection whatever. The difficulty in determining the particular purpose for which and by whom the lumber was put in the street was greatly enhanced by the great length of time that had elapsed between the act and the bringing of the suit, being about twenty years. But, if the city purchased lumber from outside parties, and such parties, in delivering it, wrongfully piled it in the street, such vendor of the lumber, in delivering it to the city, was not the agent of the city, and the city was not liable for such act. The general rule is that a municipal corporation is not responsible for the negligence of an independent contractor with such corporation. Leeds v. Richmond, 102 Ind. 372; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 1028. But, as was held in the former opinion in this case, a city which suffers an obstruction or cause of danger to remain for an unreasonable length of time upon its streets or sidewalks, so that the city might be presumed to have notice of the obstruction, would be liable therefor to the same extent as if the city had itself placed the obstruction or danger there in the first instance. Glantz v. South Bend, 106 Ind. 805; Bullock v. New York, 99 N. Y. 654, 2 N. E. 1, and notes. Both of the instructions 7 and 12 involve the principle of the necessity of notice to the city, express or implied, of the existence of the obstruction or danger, where the same has not been made by the city or some of its agents. As was said by this court in Ft. Wayne v. De Witt, 47 Ind. 391, borrowing from 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 789, 790: "The ground of the action is either positive misfeasance on the part of the corporation, its officers, or servants, or by others under its authority, in doing acts which cause the streets to be out of repair, in which case no other notice to the corporation of the condition of the street is essential to its liability, or the ground of action is the neglect of the corporation to put the streets in repair, or to remove obstructions therefrom, or to remedy causes of danger occasioned by the wrongful acts of others, in which cases notice of the condition of the street, or what is equivalent to notice, is necessary, as will presently be stated, to give to the person injured a right of action against the corporation, unless, indeed, the matter be otherwise regulated by statute.

Where the duty to keep its streets in safe condition rests upon the corporation, it is liable for injuries caused by its neglect or omission to keep the streets in repair, as well as for those caused by defects occasioned by the wrongful acts of others; but as, in such case, the basis of the action is negligence, notice to the corporation of the defect which caused the injury, or facts from which notice thereof may reasonably be inferred, or proof of circumstances from which it appears that the defect ought to have been known and remedied by it, is essential to liability; for in such cases the corporation, in the absence of a controlling enactment, is responsible only for a reasonable diligence to repair the defect or prevent accidents after the unsafe condition of the street is known, or ought to have been known to it, or its officers having authority to act respecting it." To the same effect is Higert v. Greencastle, 43 Ind. 574. According to these principles, the circuit court erred in refusing to give instructions 7 and 12 asked by the appellant.

The giving and refusing of other instructions are complained of, but what we have already said covers about all the vital questions involved in such other instructions. The circuit court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, McCabe, J., on June 29, 1898, handed down the following response:

A very earnest petition for a rehearing, supported by a very elaborate brief, is presented in this case.

The first fault found with the original opinion is that we stated therein that the venue was changed from Vanderburg to Warrick county before the first trial. We hasten to cheerfully correct the error, if error it is, by saying that the statement of appellee's counsel is probably correct, to the effect that the first trial took place in the superior court of Vanderburg county, resulting in a judgment in favor of the defendant. After the reversal of this judgment the cause was remanded to the trial court, and the venue was then changed to the Warrick circuit court. If we were "in error" in this statement, as counsel says we were, we were excusable, because the record shows that the first trial that it gives any account of took place in the Warrick circuit court. We certainly ought not to be criticised for strictly following the record, especially in the absence of any information from the learned counsel that it does not speak the truth. Nor do we mean to intimate that we could accept the statement of counsel, in conflict with the record, if the point was material.

Appellee's learned counsel, in support of the petition for a rehearing, says that "it is not our purpose to controvert any of the rules of law laid down by this court in its decision in this case. We believe, upon the other hand, that the law is correctly stated, and we have at no time contended for a different statement." And counsel proceeds to favor us with twenty-four printed pages of a brief in support of appellee's petition for a rehearing. And, in the very next statement in his brief, counsel, as to instructions 7 and 12, for the refusal of which we reversed the judgment, says that "both instructions 7 and 12 are contrary to the law." This, at least, seems a little difficult to understand. The principal defense made of the court's refusal to give instruction 12 is that it was substantially given and sufficiently embraced in instruction No. 15 given by the court to the jury. We would be fully justified in refusing to consider this point in support of appellee's petition for a rehearing, because no such defense of the refusal of that instruction was made by appellee's counsel prior to the petition for a rehearing. It has often been decided by this court that a point made for the first time on a petition for a rehearing that might have been made before is not entitled to notice. The correct and orderly administration of justice requires such a rule. Points must be made in the briefs filed before the decision of the cause, if they are to be noticed on a petition for a rehearing. Glittering generalities will not do in the place of points. But in this case there was not a word said, prior to the petition for a rehearing, about instruction 15 given by the court embracing the substance of the proposition couched in instruction 12 refused by the court, as a justification or a defense of the court's refusal of instruction 12. The correct administration of justice does not require this court to search a voluminous record to discover some matter which might tend to establish that an erroneous refusal of an instruction was rendered harmless, when the party to be benefited by such discovery is represented in this court by able counsel, with a voluminous brief, wherein no effort is made to point out such matter, or mention the same. Under such circumstances, this court is justified in presuming that no such matter exists. However, we are inclined to think that the court's refusal of said instruction 12 was justified on the ground that the same was substantially given in the fifteenth instruction. But there is no way of justifying the refusal of the seventh instruction, except that it is not the law as applied to the evidence. Appellee's counsel has attempted to justify the refusal of that instruction, both on the ground that it does not express the law, and that it was not applicable to the evidence, and that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the fact upon which it is based. We quote the instruction again: "If, at the time of the injuries complained of, the defendant had a contract with any person to furnish it with lumber, by the year, or otherwise, and to deliver the same to the city, and such person did in fact, under such contract, deliver said lumber, and pile the same in the street, then the act of such persons in delivering and piling the same was not the act of the city, and the city would not be liable for any negligence of such person in placing the same in the street, unless it had notice thereof, either express or implied." Great stress is put upon the word "deliver," as used in this instruction. It is contended that there could be no such thing as a delivery of the lumber, without an acceptance thereof by the city, and many definitions of the word "deliver" in cases of contracts for delivery of goods or things are cited. Many of them are to the effect that a delivery implies an acceptance, and hence an act of the will and hence knowledge on the part of the party to whom delivery is made. There are many definitions to the word "deliver." What particular meaning among its many definitions is to be assigned to the word depends on the connection in which it is used. The fourth definition given to it by Webster is: "To give forth in action or exercise; to discharge; as to deliver a broadside or a ball." That is the same meaning the word has in the sentence, "To deliver the opinion," "To deliver an address." The word used in such a connection does not imply an act of the will on the part of someone else nor an acceptance of anything. Such was the sense in which it was evidently used in instruction 7, as clearly indicated in the sentence reading: "And the city would not be liable for any negligence of such person in placing the same in the street, unless it had notice thereof, either express or implied." If the court meant by the word "deliver," in the previous part of the instruction, to imply an acceptance by the city, then there would have been no sense and no meaning in the words "unless it had notice thereof express or implied." This is so because the city could not accept the lumber in a pile on the street without notice that it was there. The word "deliver," in the instruction evidently was intended to mean the same that the word "placing," in the sentence above quoted from the instruction was intended to mean. Appellee's counsel does not question the plain meaning of these words, "and the city would not be liable for any negligence of such person in placing the same in the street, unless it had notice thereof, either express or implied," nor that they express the law by themselves correctly; but the contention is that the use of the word "deliver," in the previous part of the instruction changes the meaning of these words. But we have shown that one of the meanings of the word "deliver" is synonymous with the sense in which the word "place" was used in the instruction. But we need not descend into a technical definition of every word in the instruction. The meaning of the whole could not be misunderstood by the jury or anyone else. It told them, in substance, that if the persons from whom the city purchased the lumber in question piled it in the street without notice to the city, express or implied, that it was so piled, the act of placing the lumber in the street was not the act of the city, and it was not liable therefor. Other instructions given by the court properly directed the jury as to when the city would become liable if such lumber pile, so wrongfully placed in the street without notice to it, was left there an unreasonable length of time. In addition to the cases cited in the original opinion holding that the instruction correctly expressed the law, we note a case cited by appellee's counsel in support of the petition for a rehearing, namely Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farner, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696. This case directly and emphatically upholds the correctness of the refused instruction 7.

It is next contended that because it turned out on the trial that the contract the city had with the sawmill men for the purchase of lumber was in writing, and oral evidence of its particular terms was excluded on objection by appellee's counsel, therefore we must treat the case as if there had been no proof upon the subject. There was enough evidence to show that the city had purchased the lumber, and that it was hauled by the sawmill men to the city. At least the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in so inferring. This was sufficient to show the nature of the transaction and to show that the relation of master and servant did not exist between the city and the sawmill men, and hence the city would not be liable for their negligence in piling the lumber in the street, unless it had notice, express or implied, of such negligent act, or suffered it to remain there an unreasonable length of time. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farner, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696. If there was anything in the particular terms of the contract between the city and the sawmill men tending to establish a different relation, or tending to show the relation of master and servant between the city and the sawmill men, then the appellee's counsel ought to have introduced such evidence. The evidence that was introduced was sufficient, prima facie, to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that no such relation as master and servant existed between the sawmill men and the city, and authorized them to infer that the only relation existing between them was that of buyer and seller; making the sawmill men independent contractors with the city. The jury were the judges of the evidence, and on them devolved the duty of determining whether the evidence was sufficient to establish that relation; and the duty devolved on the court of telling them what the law was, in case they concluded that the evidence did establish that relation. The nature of the transaction, as disclosed by the evidence already alluded to makes a much stronger case than Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farner, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696, relied on by appellee, for the application of the doctrine that, in case of the relation of independent contractor, there is no liability on the part of one of the contracting parties for the negligent acts of the other in carrying out the contract, where it does not necessarily create a nuisance. The facts on which that decision was made were that the railway company was engaged in constructing a well or reservoir to supply a water station on the line of its road, near Auburn, Indiana. Running water interfered with the work, and it became necessary to cause the accumulating water to be pumped out of the way, so as to prevent it from running into the well or reservoir which was in process of construction. The construction of the well and laying pipes thence to the water station, had been committed to the charge of a Mr. Kress, an employee of the railway, who, with a force of men under his control, was engaged in providing means to supply the station with water. Williams, who resided in or near Auburn, was the owner of a small portable steam engine, which he was accustomed to employ in sawing wood, threshing grain, pumping water, and the like as opportunity offered. He contracted with Kress, for a stipulated per diem, to furnish and operate his engine in pumping at such times as might be necessary in order to keep the water from interfering with the work which the latter was constructing. Williams agreed to furnish his engine, and personally superintend the running of it, and to provide and pay for such assistance as he needed in keeping the water from obstructing the progress of the work. If it became necessary that he should run the engine at night, he was to receive extra compensation. In pursuance of the agreement, the latter placed his engine in a vacant lot some 6 feet or more outside the line of a public highway, which intersected the railway company's line at or near the point where the reservoir was being constructed. So far as appears, he selected the location of the engine, and controlled its operation, as the work he engaged to do required. While he was thus engaged in carrying out his agreement, the plaintiff's horse in passing along the adjacent highway, took fright at the engine and became unmanageable. The plaintiff was thrown from the carriage and injured. Herecovered a judgment in the trial court, and, in reversing the judgment on the facts above stated, Mitchell, J., speaking for the court, said: "The question is, whether under the circumstances, the railway company is liable for the negligence of Williams, assuming that he was negligent in operating his engine so near the public highway. The rule which controls in cases of this class has become well established, and has more than once been recognized and applied by this court. Ryan v. Curran, 64 Ind. 845, 81 Am. Rep. 123; Sessengut v. Posey, 67 Ind. 408, 83 Am. Rep. 98; Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 86 Am. Rep. 166. Under this rule, where work which does not necessarily create a nuisance, but is in itself harmless and lawful, when carefully conducted, is let by an employer, who merely prescribes the end, to another who undertakes to accomplish the end prescribed by means which he is to employ at his discretion, the latter is, in respect to the means employed, the master. If, during the progress of the work, a third person sustains injury by the negligent use of the means employed and controlled by the contractor, the employer is not answerable. The inquiry in such a case is, Did the relation of master and servant subsist between the person for whom the work was done, and the person whose negligence occasioned the injury? . . . The work contracted to be done was not in itself unlawful, nor was it necessarily a nuisance to operate a portable steam engine in a careful manner in close proximity to a public highway. Injury could only result from its negligent use." And the judgment was reversed on the evidence because it failed to show that the relation of master and servant subsisted between the railway and Williams, the owner and operator of the portable steam engine, and hence the railway was not liable for his negligence. But the rule there laid down is much more applicable to the evidence here, because it clearly indicates that the only relation existing between the city and the sawmill men, was that of buyer and seller, and not that of master and servant. And, there being enough evidence to warrant and require the submission of the question of fact to the jury as to the true relation subsisting between the sawmill men and the city, the appellant had a right to demand an instruction stating what the law was in case the jury found that the relation was not that of master and servant, but was merely that of buyer and seller. If they found that to be the relation, appellant had a right to an instruction that the negligent acts of the seller were not chargeable to the buyer. That, the refused instruction 7 would have done.

41 L. R. A. -

Another contention why the instruction was properly refused, is that the evidence was wholly insufficient to establish that there was any contractor in the case. But such contention assumes that it is the duty of the trial judge to determine that issue, as well as all other issues, in advance of the submission of the case to the jury, and, if he thinks the evidence insufficient, after carefully weighing it pro and con, he need not submit it to the jury. But that is very far from the legal duty of the trial judge. If there is any evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that a certain fact exists, pertinent to the issues, it is the duty of the trial judge, especially if requested to instruct the jury what the law arising from such fact is, even though he may be of opinion that such fact is not established by a preponderance of the whole evidence. Otherwise a trial of the facts by a jury could take place only in empty form, but not in truth and in reality. Under such a rule no question of fact could be submitted to the jury until the trial judge had decided that the preponderance of the evidence had established the fact.

We are constrained to hold that the trial court erred in refusing to give instruction 7, and therefore the petition for rehearing ought to be, and is, overruled.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Elizabeth BARNARD et al., Appls.,

v.

Sarah M. SHIRLEY.

(.....Ind.....)

The discharge of mineral water from an artesian well which has been used in a public bath house in bathing and cleansing persons afflicted with infectious, syphilitic, or other similar disorders, by causing it to flow through a tile drain or otherwise into a stream which constitutes the only available drainage therefor, unless a sewer is built to a river more than a mile distant, which would cost from $3,500 to $4,000 exclusive of the cost of the right of way, which the owners of the land refuse to grant, cannot be prevented by injunction at the suit of an owner of land through which such stream runs, even if he is damaged thereby.

(September 22, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Morgan County in NORM.—Correlative rights of upper and lower proprietors as to use and flow of water in stream.

- I. General statement of the right.
- II. Right to use.
- III. Right to flow.
- IV. Use for sewer.
- V. Right to relief.

I. General statement of the right.

The general principles which govern the rights of the upper and lower proprietors on a stream are well settled. The only difficulty which arises is in the application of the rules to the facts as they appear in each case.

It is sometimes stated that no proprietor can either diminish the quantity of water which will otherwise descend to the proprietor below, nor throw the water back upon the proprietor above. Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 190.

One cannot injure or annoy those above or below him. Hendricks v. Johnson, 6 Port. (Ala.) 472.

Each proprietor must so use his rights as not to injure other proprietors on the stream. Rudd v. Williams, 43 Ill. 385.

The riparian proprietors are entitled to the natural flow of the water of the stream without diminution or obstruction. Clark v. Rockland Water Power Co. 52 Me. 68. And in Mitchell v. Parks, 26 Ind. 354, it is said, by way of argument, that riparian owners are entitled to the natural flow of the stream without diminution or injury.

But those statements are rather broader than they should be to accurately represent the law. A better statement is one which includes the element of reasonable use by each of the proprietors, although it has been said that it is impossible to lay down a general rule in all cases. Baltimore v. Appold, 42 Md. 442.

The rule that the upper proprietor has no right to use the water to the prejudice of the proprietor below him, or that he cannot lawfully diminish the quantity, is too broad, for it would give the lower proprietor superior advantages over the upper, and in many cases give him in effect a monopoly of the stream. Dumont v. Kellogg, 20 Mich. 420, 18 Am. Rep. 102.

The common law does not deprive all persons of the right to use, but allows all to use, the water in any manner not incompatible with the rights of others. When it is said that a riparian proprietor has a right to have a stream continue through his land, it is not intended to be said that he has the right to all the water, for that would render the stream which belongs to all the proprietors of no use to any. Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 286.

A riparian proprietor has a right to make all the use he can of the stream, provided he does not abstract so much as prevents other people from having equal enjoyment with himself. Sandwich v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 707, 27 Week. Rep. 618.

The rights of riparian owners in a running stream above and below are equal; each has a right to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the water, and each has a right to the natural flow of the stream subject to such disturbance, and consequent inconvenience and annoyance, as might result to him from a reasonable use of the waters by others. Holden v. Winnipisogee Lake Cotton & Woollen Mfg. Co. 53 N. H. 552.

The right of a proprietor is not an absolute and exclusive right to all the water flowing in the stream, but a right to the flow and enjoyment of the water subject to similar rights of all the proprietors to a reasonable enjoyment of the stream. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 212, 15 Jur. 638.

The right of the riparian owner to the use of water is subject to be limited by the like rights of other owners on the stream. Red River Rolling Mills v. Wright, 30 Minn. 249, 44 Am. Rep. 194.

The upper owner has a right to such use as he can make of the water without materially diminishing it in quantity or corrupting it in quality. Wheatley v. Chrisman, 24 Pa. 298, 64 Am. Dec. 657.

The rule does not require that there shall be no diminution, obstruction, or detention whatever by the riparian proprietor. Lancey v. Clifford, 54 Me. 487, 92 Am. Dec. 561.

One riparian owner cannot impose upon the other the whole burden of the incidental injuries and inconvenience attendant upon the use of the stream. Hoxsle v. Hoxsle, 38 Mich. 80.

So, no man can be said to have a mill privilege which cannot be used without injury to others. Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 331.

No one has a right to diminish the quantity of water which will, according to the natural current, flow to the proprietor below, or to throw it back on the proprietor above. There may be a reasonable use. The true test of the principle and extent of the use is whether it is to the injury of the other proprietors or not. There may be a diminution in quantity or a retardation or acceleration of the natural flow, indispensable for the general and valuable use of the water, perfectly consistent with the existence of the common right. The diminution, retardation, or acceleration not positively and sensibly injurious by diminishing the value of the common right is an implied easement in the right of using the stream. Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 400.

The right to use necessarily implies a right favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin the discharge of polluted water into a stream which flowed through plaintiff's land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. R. Harrison, Willis Hickam, and Oscar Matthew for appellants.

Messrs. John C. Robinson, M. H. Parks, and W. S. Shirley for appellee.

to exercise a degree of control over the water, and to some extent to diminish its volume. The proprietor may apply it to domestic purposes or purposes of irrigation, but not to such extent as to unreasonably diminish its quantity; in applying it to manufacturing purposes, he must not corrupt it or injure its quality so as to render it unfit for use by the lower proprietor. He cannot unreasonably retard its natural flow, or injuriously accelerate its motion. In case of a small stream the water may be detained long enough to accumulate a head before it is let down to the next user. Davis v. Getchell, 50 Me. 602, 79 Am. Dec. 636.

The right of the riparian owner is subject to the reasonable use of the proprietor above him. Dickson v. Carnegie, 1 Ont. Rep. 110.

No proprietor on the banks of a river has a right to use the water to the prejudice of other proprietors above or below, unless he has acquired a prior right to divert it. No one can set up an exclusive right to the flow of all the water in its natural state. Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 426, 14 L. ed. 208.

If the owner of a lower pond refuses to open his gate upon being notified that the owner of the upper dam is about to remove it to clear the mud from the pond, so that the lower pond is filled up and throws the water back on the upper proprietor, the latter may recover for his injury, but the owner of the lower pond cannot recover for the filling up of his pond. Hardin v. Ledbetter, 103 N. C. 90.

The limit of the private right is imposed by the public right, and the private right exists up to the point beyond which it will be inconsistent with the public right. Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 26 Minn. 222, 37 Am. Rep. 399.

Unity of possession will not extinguish a watercourse so that in case of subsequent separation it may be stopped by the upper owner. Shury v. Piggett, 3 Bolst. 339, Popham, 160.

In the very earliest cases natural and artificial watercourses seem to be treated indiscriminately. The practice seems to have been in ancient times to divert water from a natural stream through an artificial channel to run the mill, and the artificial channel was known as a watercourse. Many of the cases dealing with the right to stop a watercourse refer to this kind of artificial channel.

But in Brown v. Best, 1 Wils. 174, a distinction is suggested between watercourses to mills and natural watercourses.

Reasonableness.

The right to the use has been made to depend upon its reasonableness.

If the principles of the common law are to be applied there must be allowed to all of that which is common a reasonable use. Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 73.

The riparian owner may make a reasonable use of the water of the stream. Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 176.

A person detaining water must act in a reasonable manner, and not let it off in unreason-

McCabe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee sued the appellants to recover damages for, and to restrain them from, causing certain mineral water coming from defendant's well to flow through a certain spring branch adjoining plaintiff's land, by which the waters of said branch are befouled, to the plaintiff's injury. The issues made were tried able quantities. Oregon Iron Co. v. Trullenger, 3 Or. 1.

Every proprietor through whose land a watercourse runs has a right to a reasonable use of the water, whether for power to turn a mill, for watering stock, or to irrigate lands, provided he does not by his use materially damage any other proprietor above or below him. Williamson v. Lock's Creek Canal Co. 78 N. C. 156.

Any usage which inflicts positive, repeated, and sensible injury upon a proprietor above or below is not to be considered a reasonable usage. Ellis v. Clemens, 21 Ont. Rep. 227, Affirmed in 22 Ont. Rep. 216.

In Tourtellot v. Phelps, 4 Gray, 376, it is said that in order that each may enjoy his right everyone is bound to use the stream reasonably as it passes through his own lands, so as not to injure the rights of all other proprietors. What is reasonable under all the circumstances must depend much upon the character of the stream, its relative position, the usage of the country, and the state of the arts.

The question of the reasonableness of the use of the stream is one of fact when it is not settled by custom, as in the case of irrigation, propelling machinery, and watering cattle, and when it is in its nature doubtful. Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 450, 67 Am. Dec. 723; Jacobs v. Alford, 42 Vt. 303, 1 Am. Rep. 331.

Whether detention of the water in the dam during the night, for the purpose of use in the daytime, is unreasonable, depends upon the custom of the place, what rule will secure the general stream for useful purposes, and whether the detention is necessarily an injury to lower mills. Keeney & W. Mfg. Co. v. Union Mfg. Co. 39 Conn. 577.

What constitutes a reasonable use is a question of fact having regard to the subject-matter and the use; the occasion and manner of its application; its object, extent, and necessity; the nature and size of the stream; the kind of business to which it is subservient; the importance and necessity of the use claimed by one party; and the extent of the injury caused by it to the other. Red River Roller Mills v. Wright, 30 Minn. 249, 44 Am. Rep. 104.

It is not unreasonable for the proprietor of a stream to take water therefrom through a conduit to his house and barn, and allow the water to run from the receptacle a little to prevent its freezing in winter and to keep it clear in summer, although the water is not returned to the stream, but is allowed to run upon the land and be wasted. Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 366, 39 Am. Dec. 301.

The upper proprietor cannot complain that his right of drainage is cut off, if such effect results from merely a reasonable use by the lower owner of his property. Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 43 N. H. 578, 82 Am. Dec. 179.

A riparian proprietor cannot be limited to the use of a specified amount of water, except as the same may be found to be reasonable. Van Bitter v. Hilton, 84 Cal. 555.

The true test as to the reasonable use of water by a riparian proprietor is whether the use works actual, material, and substantial damage to the common right; not to an exclusive by the court, resulting in a finding and judgment against the defendants according to the prayer of the complaint. That judgment was, on appeal to this court, reversed for error in sustaining a demurrer to the second paragraph of defendants' answer. 185 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568. On the return of the case to the circuit court the issues were again tried, resulting in a special finding of the facts, upon which the court stated its conclusions of law, upon which it rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, both for damages and enjoining the defendants as prayed for in the complaint. The substance of the special finding by the court is:

That the land described in the complaint, situate adjoining the city of Martinsville, was purchased by plaintiff from Lafayette Sims on May 10, 1836, and plaintiff has ever since held right to all the water in its natural state, but to the right which each proprietor has as limited and qualified by the precisely equal right of every other riparian proprietor. Union Mill & Mln. Co. v. Daugberg, 2 Sawy. 450.

The question is whether the use made by one of the water is reasonable and consistent with the corresponding use by the other. Dumont v. Kellogg, 29 Mich. 420, 18 Am. Rep. 102.

It has generally been held that the question of the reasonableness of the defendant's detention or use of the water is for the jury. Hetrich v. Deachler, 6 Pa. 32; Hazeltine v. Case, 46 Wis. 391, 32 Am. Rep. 715.

So, the question is for the jury as to how much water each proprietor on a stream shall be permitted to use for manufacturing purposes. Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106.

And what is a reasonable use by the proprietor of a mill upon the stream is a question for the jury. Pool v. Lewis, 41 Ga. 162, 5 Am. Rep. 526.

So, what is a reasonable use of the water for irrigation purposes is a question for the jury. Heilbron v. 76 Land & Water Co. 80 Cal. 189.

Also, the question whether or not it is proper and customary to throw the sawdust from a sawmill operated by steam into a stream, the effect of which is to fill up ponds lower down the stream. Prentice v. Geiger, 74 N. Y. 341.

And whether the use of a stream to carry off a manufacturer's waste is reasonable or not. Hayes v. Waldron, 44 N. H. 583, 84 Am. Dec. 105.

Whether it is reasonable for the upper proprietor to use the water a pondful at a time, and hold it back until that amount has been collected, is for the jury. Pollitt v. Long, 3 Thomp. & C. 232.

But in one case, it was held that the question whether the diversion of water for the supply of a municipal corporation is reasonable or not is a mixed question of law and fact to be determined by the trial court. Jones v. Proprietors of Portsmouth Aqueduct, 62 N. H. 488.

II. Right to use.

A riparian owner has a right to use the water passing through his land to supply his kitchen, and for watering his cattle, also to water and enrich his land, but he must so exercise this right as not to injure the owner below him. Perkins v. Dow, 1 Root, 535.

In Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 186, which was a contest between settlers on the public land, the court said the uses to which water may be appropriated are to supply natural wants, such as to quench thirst, water cattle, for household or culinary purposes, and in some countries for the purpose of irrigation. These must be first supplied before the water can be applied for artificial wants.

The riparian proprietor may artificially use the water of the stream provided he does not force it back on the proprietor above him, nor precipitate it unreasonably upon the proprietor below him, and returns it to the stream before it leaves his lands. Stein v. Burden, 29 Ala. 127, 65 Am. Dec. 394.

Each riparian owner has the right to use the water which flows through his lands for all ordinary purposes, and for the gratification of natural wants, even though in such use he consumes the entire stream. This right extends to the use of the water ad lavandum et potandum both by himself and all living things in his legitimate employment. Stein v. Burden, 29 Ala. 127, 65 Am. Dec. 394.

In Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Cline, 37 Fla. 586, 33 L. R. A. 376, it is stated, by way of argument, that the riparian rights to the ordinary use of water flowing past land extend to the supplying of natural wants, including the use of the water for domestic purposes of home or farm, such as drinking, washing, cooking, or for stock of the proprietor.

But a person cannot, for the purpose of having the water pure for growing watercresses, enjoin the drainage into the stream of water from gravel pits. Weeks v. Heward, 10 Week. Rep. 557.

A riparian owner has a right to pond the water for the purpose of gathering ice, provided he acts in a reasonable manner in view of the size and capacity of the stream and the reasonable rights of the riparian owners below; and this right cannot be affected by the appropriation to public use of a parallel stream which unites with his stream to form a larger one so that lower owners on the larger stream must in the future look to his stream for their whole supply. New London Water Comrs. v. Perry, 69 Conn. 461.

But the owner of ice upon the stream cannot recover damages from the owner of a dam who permits the water to escape through his dam to such an extent that the ice is injured, if such escape was necessary to give the owners of mills lower down the stream the natural flow of the water. Stevens v. Kelley (Mc.) 5 New Eng. Rep. 871.

Stream may be consumed for domestic use.

Either riparian proprietor has a right to the use of the water for domestic purposes and for his cattle, without regard to the effect which such use may have, in case of a deficiency, upon proprietors lower down the stream. He may also use the water for any other purposes provided he does not interfere with the rights of other proprietors above or below him. Miner v. Gilmour, 12 Moore, P. C. C. 131, 7 Week. Rep. 328, 3 L. T. N. S. 98.

If necessary for the use of his stock the upper proprietor may consume all the water flowing in the stream. Spence v. McDonough, 77 Iowa, 460.

A riparian owner may use the whole of the stream if it is necessary to satisfy his natural wants. He may consume all the water for his domestic purposes including water for his stock. If he desires to use it for irrigation or manufactures, and there be a lower proprietor to whom its use is essential to supply his natural wants, or for his stock, he must use the water so as to leave enough for such lower proprietor.

and possessed the same. That said Sims owned and occupied said lands for years before. That said defendant Elizabeth Barnard has owned the lots described in the complaint, Nos. 20 and 30, in the original plat of the town of Martinsville, Morgan county, Indiana, since the year 1868, and still owns the same. That, at the time of selling and delivering to plaintiff the lands above described, said Sims also sold and delivered to her 160 acres lying about one mile to the northeast of said first described land, and other lands adjacent to said lands first described, and lying west thereof. That said 160 acres is a hill tract, and from the foot of the hills near the southwest corner of the tract there puts forth a spring of pure water, suitable for any use, and which, flowing in a southwesterly course, unites its waters with

Where the stream is small, and does not furnish more than sufficient to answer the natural wants of the different proprietors living on it, none of the proprietors can use the water for either irrigation or manufactures. Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 402, 38 Am. Dec. 106.

A riparian proprietor may take the water from the stream by pipes, and consume the whole of it if necessary for domestic purposes. Slack v. Marsh, 11 Phila. 543.

In Willis v. Perry, 92 Iowa, 297, 26 L. R. A. 124, which was a case of subterranean water, the court says that in case of surface water the owner may consume all the water of the stream for his natural and ordinary wants regardless of the effect upon other owners on the stream.

But in one case it was held that the question whether the amount of water taken from a stream for use in a house is wrongful, depends upon its quantity in relation to that which remains in the stream, and is for the jury. Norbury v. Kitchin, 9 Jur. N. S. 182, 7 L. T. N. S. 685.

A farmer cannot be deprived of the right of letting his cows run in a lot through which a stream of water flows by the fact that a water company has been organized to take a water supply for a municipal corporation from the stream lower down its course. Helfrich v. Catonsville Water Co. 74 Md. 269, 13 L. R. A. 117.

On nonriparian lands.

Water cannot be diverted to nonriparian lands. Gould v. Eaton, 117 Cal. 539, 38 L. R. A. 181; Williams v. Wadsworth, 51 Conn. 304.

The riparian proprietor can confer no right on a nonriparian owner to use the stream. Ormerod v. Todmorden Joint Stock Mill Co. L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 155, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 445, 31 Week. Rep. 759, 47 J. P. 532.

A riparian proprietor cannot authorize the taking of water from the stream on his land to be carried to a distant point and there sold. Helbron v. Fowler Switch Canal Co. 75 Cal. 428.

Water cannot be taken from a stream to irrigate nonriparian lands. Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal. 66.

A riparian owner cannot give the right to a nonriparian owner to take water from the stream and return it again below the land of a lower proprietor. Shamleffer v. Council Grove Peerless Mill Co. 18 Kan. 24.

But, if the flow of the stream is not perceptibly diminished, and no injury is done to the lower proprietor, the upper proprietor will not be liable for selling water for use off from riparian land. Gillis v. Chase, 67 N. H.—, 31 Atl. 18.

So, the lower proprietor cannot maintain an action against the upper proprietor and his grantee on the ground that a grant has been made without right to use the water on nonriparian lands, if it is used and returned to the stream in such a manner as not to affect the water either in quantity or quality. Kensit v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 569, 52 L. J. Q. B. 608, 48 L. T. N. S. 784, 31 Week. Rep. 603, 47 J. P. 534, Affirmed L. R. 27 Ch. Div. 122, 41 L. R. A.

54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 19, 51 L. T. N. S. 862, 32 Week. Rep. 885.

A riparian owner upon a brook cannot dispose of all its water if at the place where it empties into a river there is a public landing which requires the flow of the water from the brook. Moulton v. Newburyport Water Co. 137 Mass. 163.

Municipal water supply.

A part of the rule as to diversion of stream to nonriparian lands is that in regard to municipal water supply.

Water cannot be diverted to furnish a water supply to a municipal corporation. Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Proprietors of Wilts & B. Canal Nav. Co. L. R. 7 H. L. 697, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 638, 33 L. T. N. S. 513, 24 Week. Rep. 284, Affirming Wilts & B. Canal Nav. Co. v. Swindon Waterworks Co. L. R. 9 Ch. 451; Saunders v. Bluefield Waterworks & I. Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 133; Higgins v. Flemington Water Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 538; Hough v. Doylestown, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 333; Howe v. Norman, 18 R. I. 488; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 423; Gallagher v. Kingston Water Co. 25 App. Div. 82; Lord v. Meadville Water Co. 135 Pa. 122, 8 L. R. A. 202.

Riparian owners cannot divert water in the stream for the purpose of supplying the wants of the individuals of a distant municipal corporation. Harding v. Stamford Water Co. 41 Conn. 87; Ulbricht v. Eufaula Water Co. 86 Ala. 587, 4 L. R. A. 572.

A water company cannot divert the water of a stream for supplying a municipal corporation with water without compensation to the riparian owners for the injury thereby caused to them. Standen v. New Rochelle Water Co. 91 Hun, 272.

A water company cannot divert the water of a stream to the injury of riparian owners, where it is to be used for the benefit of a municipal corporation which is 5 miles distant from the stream. Stein v. Burden, 24 Ala. 150, 60 Am. Dec. 453.

A municipal corporation will not be permitted to take water supply from a stream if the effect will be to interfere with the rights of riparian proprietors lower down the stream. Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526.

Water cannot be taken for a public water supply to the detriment of the owner of a bleachery lower down the stream. Acquackanonk Water Co. v. Watson, 29 N. J. Eq. 366.

The water of a spring which flows in a definite channel cannot be diverted for supplying a public poor house with water to the injury of the owner of a mill lower down the stream. Dudden v. Clutton Union Guardians of Poor, 38 Eng. L. & Eq. 526, 1 Hurlst. & N. 630, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 146.

A water company cannot take a water supply from the stream merely by its right as riparian owner, to the injury of a lower proprietor. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pottsville Water Co. 182 Pa. 418.

Or materially diminish the supply of water in the stream. Standard Plate Glass Co. v. Butler Water Co. 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 563.

those of several others of equally pure water, and one of which is of greater volume than plaintiff's spring; and the waters of these various springs combined would, if combined at their head, fill a 4-inch pipe with pure spring water, with continuous flow. That prior to 1870 the waters of this branch flowed as they now do,—south and west of south $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile or over; thence west to the east border of the original plat of the town of Martinsville; thence south on the border to and across Washington street, which passes the west side of the courthouse square, in the center of the city, where, in times of heavy rains and freshets, it broke the banks of the ditches dug for it, and the levees made from time to time to confine its waters, and flowed over and inundated a large part of said city, and the southeastern

In Bare v. Hoffman, 79 Pa. 71, 21 Am. Rep. 42, it is assumed that damages may be recovered in case water is diverted from a stream for use in a town near by to such an extent as to prevent the floating off of tanbark and refuse from a yard lower down the stream.

But a village which has taken a water supply from a stream cannot prevent a village higher up the stream from making the same use of the water. Barre Water Co. v. Carnes, 65 Vt. 626, 21 L. R. A. 769.

In Van Wycklen v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 427, it seems to be assumed that if on obtaining a water supply a city sinks wells so near to the stream that the water is drawn from the stream into the wells, the lower proprietor will have a right of action.

In Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Scranton Gas & Water Co. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 291, the court mooted, but refused to decide, the question whether flood water could be taken from a stream for the use of a nonriparian municipal corporation, and held that the right to do so could be acquired by eminent domain.

Statutory authority to take a water supply from a stream may provide for compensation to persons injured thereby. Leonard v. Rutland, 66 Vt. 105.

Cities in California which are successors of Mexican pueblos have a right to water for their necessary uses which is superior to that of other riparian owners on the stream, but they cannot take more than is necessary for their use, for the purpose of supplying persons outside the city limits. Vernon Irrigation Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237.

A water company cannot, to defend an action against it for exhausting the water supply of the stream, set up that plaintiff wishes to use the water for manufacturing purposes which are not shown to be unreasonable or wrongful. Standard Plate Glass Co. v. Butler Water Co. 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 563.

Use for engines.

A railroad company cannot use the water of a stream for its locomotives so as to sensibly diminish the water flowing in the stream. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 112 Pa. 34.

A railroad company cannot take water for its engines to the injury of lower proprietors. Clark v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 145 Pa. 438; Anderson v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 86 Ky. 44.

Nor can it, if the effect will be to interfere with the navigation of the stream. Atty. Gen. v. Great Eastern R. Co. 18 Week. Rep. 1187, 23 L. T. N. S. 344.

So, water cannot be sold to a railroad company for use in its engines. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pottsville Water Co. 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 501.

A railroad company cannot divert the water of the stream for use in its engines if the result is to materially reduce or diminish the grinding power of the mill of a proprietor located lower down the stream. Garwood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 83 N. Y. 400, 38 Am. Rep. 452.

For the purpose of showing injury by the 41 L. R. A.

taking of water from a stream by a railroad company for the use of its engines, the lower owner may prove that after such taking less water flows in the stream than formerly flowed there. Garwood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 649, Affirming 17 Hun, 356.

But in England it is held that a railroad company which owns land on the banks of a river may take a reasonable quantity of water for the supply of its engines from the river, and the quantity will not be held to be unreasonable if it does no injury in wet weather, and never shortens the working hours of mills lower down the stream more than a few minutes a day at any time. Sandwich v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 707, 27 Week. Rep. 616.

Use for irrigation.

Some right to divert for irrigation purposes is generally recognized.

It cannot be permitted that the owner of a tract of many thousand acres of porous soil abutting on one part of the stream can irrigate them continually by canals and drains, so as to cause a serious diminution of the quantity of the water, though there is no other loss to the natural stream than that arising from the necessary absorption and evaporation of the water employed for that purpose. On the other hand, one's common sense would be shocked by supposing that a riparian owner could not dip a watering pot into a stream in order to water his garden. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 212, 15 Jur. 633.

So, no action will lie for taking an inappreciable amount of water from a stream for the purpose of irrigation. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 212, 15 Jur. 633.

A riparian proprietor may lawfully divert the water of a stream for the purpose of irrigating his land to a reasonable extent. But in no case can he do this so as to destroy or render useless or materially affect the application of the water by other riparian proprietors. Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 176.

Every riparian owner has a right to use the water flowing through his land for the purpose of irrigating his land, but his use for that purpose must be such as not essentially to interfere with the natural flow of the stream. Farrell v. Richards, 30 N. J. Eq. 511.

Whether water can be diverted for irrigation is an abstract question which cannot be answered either in the affirmative or negative as a rule applicable to all cases. Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Cush. 131, 57 Am. Dec. 85.

Natural wants, such as for domestic purposes and furnishing drink for man and beast, must be supplied before any water can be used for irrigation. Smith v. Corbit, 116 Cal. 587.

Water cannot be used for irrigation in such a way as not to leave sufficient for the watering place of a lower proprietor. Gillett v. Johnson, 30 Conn. 130.

Pumps may be used to raise the water from the stream for the purpose of irrigation. Charnock v. Higuerra, 111 Cal. 473, 32 L. R. A. 190.

All the water in the stream cannot be taken part thereof, and formed large ponds of water, until they sunk or evaporated. That two tan-yards were operated near by, and obtained their water from said branch, up to 1870, and put their wastage into it. That in 1870 the town corporation of Martinsville changed the course and channel of said branch, from its intersection with Pike street, in said town, and turned it west to a point due west of the west boundary of the original plat thereof, and a distance of over $\frac{1}{2}$ mile; thence south and southwest, onto the said lands first above described, then owned and occupied by said Lafayette Sims, and now owned by plaintiff. That said Sims was consulted in relation thereto by the authorities, and consented to said change of the channel of said stream, and the flowing of the waters thereof upon his said lands, that for irrigation purposes; and the surplus not absorbed in irrigation must be returned to the stream. Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal. 66.

A person owning a field on an ancient brook may lawfully use the water for irrigating his field, and if the owner of the field below is injured thereby it is damnum absque injuria. Weston v. Alden, 8 Mass. 136.

The upper proprietor cannot retain the water for the purposes of irrigation if the effect is that when it is liberated the lower owner is deprived of some portion of the benefit of it. Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 590, 3 Jur. N. S. 243, 26 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148.

In Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106, it is said that in countries with a hot and arid climate water is doubtless indispensable to the cultivation of the soil, and with them water for irrigation will be a natural want.

A riparian owner has a right to spread the water of the stream upon his land to enrich it, provided he does it prudently, and does not deprive the lower proprietor of the surplus. Howard v. Mason, cited in 1 Root, 537.

By the law of California riparian owners are entitled to a reasonable use of the water for irrigation. Lux v. Haggin, 60 Cal. 255.

A riparian owner cannot throw a dam across the stream for the purpose of using the water for irrigating his land, to the detriment of the owner of an ancient mill lower down the stream. Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420, 7 Am. Dec. 160.

A riparian owner cannot use all the water of a stream for irrigation purposes, although it is necessary for his use, without any regard to the necessities of the owner lower down the stream. Learned v. Tangeman, 65 Cal. 334.

A stream of water cannot be used for irrigation if the result is to deprive the lower proprietor of the reasonable use of the water in its natural channel. Arnold v. Foot, 12 Wend. 330.

In Jones v. Adams, 19 Nev. 78, it is said that under the principles of the common law riparian proprietors had the right to a reasonable use of the waters of a stream running through their respective lands for the purposes of irrigation.

There is a right to divert water for purposes of irrigation, the extent depending on what is a reasonable use of the stream. Messinger's Appeal, 100 Pa. 285.

In Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Proprietors of Wilts & B. Canal Nav. Co. L. R. 7 H. L. 697, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 638, 33 L. T. N. S. 513, 24 Week. Rep. 284, the court says, under certain circumstances, and provided no injury is done, the water may be used, and may be diverted for a time by the upper owner for the purpose of irrigation.

Water for irrigation cannot be obtained by erecting a dam and spreading the water out so that a large quantity is lost by absorption and evaporation, the surplus of the water diverted not being returned to the stream. Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. 175.

In Brown v. Ashley, 16 Nev. 311, the court enforced a prior judgment enjoining the diversion of water for irrigation purposes on the 41 L. R. A. ground that the question was res judicata between the parties.

If, in order to be of any use for irrigation, it is necessary to use the full flow of the stream at one time, the court may apportion the flow of the stream between the riparian owners for periods of time. Harris v. Harrison, 93 Cal. 676.

In Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 309, 84 Am. Dec. 631, it is said that it may be admitted that the purpose of irrigation is one of the natural uses which must absolutely be supplied; the appropriation of the water for this purpose would therefore afford no ground for complaint by lower proprietors if it were entirely consumed.

And the Texas court substituted for the common-law maxim the one, Water irrigates, and let it irrigate. Tolle v. Correth, 31 Tex. 362, 98 Am. Dec. 540.

But it was subsequently held that the irrigation of land will not justify the owner of a head spring in exhausting the water which flows from it to the injury of proprietors lower down on the channel of the stream. Fleming v. Davis, 37 Tex. 173. In that case the doctrine of the Tolle Case is repudiated and a return made to the rule that water cannot be used for irrigation purposes if the effect will be to injure a lower proprietor.

The right to exhaust the stream for irrigation purposes, however, was restored in Mud Creek Irrig. Agri. & Mfg. Co. v. Vivian, 74 Tex. 170.

There seems to be some qualification to the right, however, for a subsequent case states that the upper proprietor has no right to use the water for irrigation if he thereby conflicts with the rights of the lower proprietor to use it for natural purposes, such as drinking and watering stock. Baker v. Brown, 55 Tex. 377.

And in Basrett v. Metcalfe, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 247, it was held that irrigation is an ordinary use of the water of the stream, and the proprietor may exhaust all the water of the stream for that purpose to the exclusion of the proprietors below, so long as he does not deprive them of water for drinking, washing, cooking, and for stock.

The upper riparian owner is liable for every material diminution of the flow of the water by diverting from the stream water for irrigation. Miller v. Miller, 9 Pa. 74, 49 Am. Dec. 545. The court says the owner above cannot take all the stream, and this drives us necessarily upon the rule that he shall not materially diminish it, for from the very nature of the subject there is none other of practical operation.

Ancient use.

Ancient use is not necessary to support a present right.

In Cox v. Matthews, 1 Vent. 239, which was a case of ancient lights, Hale said if a man has a watercourse running through his ground, and erects a mill upon it, he may bring his action for diverting the stream and not say ancient mill, and unless the upper proprietor has a prescriptive right to turn the water he cannot justify though the mill is newly erected.

To maintain an action for diverting the flow of water from a mill, it is not necessary that he might have the use of the same for stock water, for which it was suitable. That ever since said change was made the waters of said branch have continued to flow onto the lands so purchased by plaintiff from said Sims. That before said change was made, and before the channel of said branch was cut down on the south side of Pike street, in times of big rains and freshets the water of the branch would break out of its channel, and flow over Pike street, and form large pools of water in various places in the central parts of said city. That said branch, since the change down said Pike street, flows the distance of about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile through said city; near three fourths of its distance being through a part of the city of population and improvement about equal to any other part of said city. Until within 18 the mill shall be an ancient one. Rutland v. Bowler, Palm. 290.

Conversely, the mere fact that there is an ancient use of the stream will not control its whole course.

The owner of an ancient mill cannot enjoin the construction of a dam above him if the injury to him will be trifling and unimportant. Shreve v. Voorhees, 3 N. J. Eq. 25.

The owner of a mill cannot control the whole stream above so that no upper riparian owner can make use of the water. Platt v. Johnson, 15 Johns. 213, 8 Am. Dec. 233.

A millowner has the right to use the water belonging to the mill in a reasonable, ordinary, and proper manner for the regular and usual prosecution of his business, although it may impair in some degree the efficiency of the mill privilege of another owner on the same stream. Haskins v. Haskins, 9 Gray, 390.

A millowner cannot, by erecting his mill, control the whole course of the stream as against the proprietors above him, but any reasonable use of the stream subsequently made by them will, if it causes injury to him, and the water is not diverted nor wantonly wasted, be not actionable. Martin v. Bigelow, 2 Alk. (Vt.) 184, 16 Am. Dec. 686.

The question of prescriptive rights generally, and what is necessary to acquire them, is not considered in this note.

Appropriation.

The general question of the right to appropriate water is considered in a note to Isaacs v. Barber (Wash.) 30 L. R. A. 685.

Generally prior use of the water is not sufficient to give an exclusive use, except where the doctrine of prior appropriation has been adopted.

It is immaterial that the lower owner has his mill in operation first. The upper owner may recover damages if the water is thrown back so as to interfere with his wheel. Omelyan v. Jagers, 2 Hill, L. 634, 27 Am. Dec. 417.

Nothing short of twenty years' adverse enjoyment of water diverted from a stream or raised by a weir will give a riparian proprietor a right to water as against lower owners to whom the use is injurious. Prescott v. Phillips, cited in 6 East, 213.

But, under the Massachusetts doctrine of appropriation, the upper proprietor cannot, after a lower proprietor has made an appropriation of the water power in his land, lower a dam or change the bed of the channel of the stream so as to interfere with the rights of the lower owners. Gleason v. Assabét Mfg. Co. 101 Mass. 72.

So, in England there was at one time a tendency to recognize a right of appropriation. In a case where it was held that if the owner sells the lower portion of his property, and the purchaser uses the stream of water flowing from the upper to the lower land, the vendor will not be permitted to stop the watercourse, Bayley, B., says that if a man find water running through his land he may appropriate it, and thus acquire a title to the water. Canham v. Fisk, 2 Crompt. & J. 126, 2 Tyrw. 155.

41 L. R. A.

So, in Lincoln v. Chadbourne, 56 Me. 197, it is said that the dam erected first in time is first in right, but there are not enough of the facts of the controversy reported, to determine to what extent this rule would be carried.

Negligence.

The owner of a dam must use care in drawing the water from his pond not to injure mills lower down the stream. Lapham v. Curtis, 5 Vt. 371, 26 Am. Dec. 310.

An action will lie in case a dam is so carelessly built that it is carried away by high water, and the property of a lower proprietor injured by the flood. New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 433.

The owner of a dam which breaks by reason of an ordinary storm will be liable for the injury thereby inflicted on lower proprietors, but not in case of extraordinary storms. Myers v. Fritz (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 499.

III. Right to flow.

The right to the flow of water is a natural right. Stockoe v. Singers, 8 El. & Bl. 81.

The lower proprietor has a right to have the water flow to his land undiminished, except as the upper owner may use the water for domestic purposes, stock, and reasonable irrigation. Coffman v. Robbins, 3 Or. 278.

The riparian proprietor has a right to have the stream continue to flow through his property whether he has any use for it or not. Ulbricht v. Eufaula Water Co. 86 Ala. 587, 4 L. R. A. 572.

Water flowing from springs cannot be interrupted to the injury of a lower proprietor. Ennor v. Barwell, 2 Giff. 410, 6 Jur. N. S. 1233.

Change of course.

The channel of the stream cannot be changed to the injury of a lower proprietor. McLenn v. Crosson, 33 U. C. Q. B. 448.

So, if one has ancient ponds which are replenished by channels from a river he cannot change the channels if any prejudice accrue to another by such action. Duncombe v. Randall, Hetley, 34.

A railroad company has no right to divert a watercourse for the protection of its track. Union P. R. Co. v. Dyche, 31 Kan. 120.

If in constructing its road a railroad company attempts to change the natural channel of a stream, and causes it to flow over loose gravel which is washed out and deposited on land lower down, it will be liable for the injury. Van Orsdel v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 470.

The upper proprietor will be liable for throwing rocks and debris into the stream so as to cause it to change its course and cut a new channel on the land of the lower proprietor. Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Wilson, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 202.

The upper proprietor cannot cut a tail-race so as to turn the water into the foot instead of the head of the lower proprietor's pond, if the result will be to hasten the flow of the water months past a large tanyard was maintained and operated on Pike street, on the south side thereof, at the point of the turn of said branch west on Pike street, and obtained its water from said branch, and emptied into said branch the refuse from its vats, in large quantities, at weekly intervals, and which was of such offensive character, and produced such an offensive odor, as that persons residing in the vicinity were compelled to close their windows to keep out the stench; and, in connection with this mass of filth, the waters of the branch, usually accumulated by a temporary dam, would be turned, and the mass distributed throughout the channel of the branch below, the effects and stain of which would remain for a considerable time. That Martinsville, either as a town or city, has never had other than open and fill the pond with sand. Hulme v. Shreve, 4 N. J. Eq. 116.

Fitzherbert, N. B. 184, says that a man shall have a writ of assize in case another has levied or thrown down, or heightened or lowered a pool, or hath a watercourse to the nuisance of the complaining party.

A watercourse cannot be changed so that the water is thrown on the land of the lower proprietor in a new place. Niles' Works v. Cincinnati, 2 Disney (Ohio) 400.

But, if a farmer can improve his land by changing a watercourse thereon which passes from his land to and upon that of a lower proprietor without substantial injury to the latter, he may do so. Schultz v. Bailey, 48 N. J. Eq. 409.

If a pond is fed by a natural stream, the owner cannot cut an outlet for it which will throw the water on the land of another person at a point different from its natural course. Vernum v. Wheeler, 35 Hun, 53.

If a proprietor undertakes to place a structure over a watercourse he must take care that he does not prevent the accustomed flow of the water in the natural course from above. Niles' Works v. Cincinnati, 2 Disney (Ohio) 400.

In Wholey v. Caldwell, 108 Cal. 95, 30 L. R. A. 820, the court, in discussing the rights of the parties when the stream changes its course, states that the lower proprietor, as against the unwonted acts of the upper, is entitled, not only to have the water enter his land by its accustomed channel, but to have each channel carry its accustomed amount of water.

The owner of a spring is not liable for the increased flow of water from it caused by his cleaning it out and walling it up so as to keep the water in one channel, rather than to let it spread over the ground and make a wet and spongy place of the land. Waffle v. Porter, 61 Barb. 130.

See also infra, Acceleration of flow.

The diversion of the water from its natural channel on the land of the upper proprietor for the purpose of straightening the course of the stream will not authorize a lower proprietor to embank against the water after it has been returned to its natural channel. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Keys, 55 Kan. 205.

An upper proprietor will not be permitted to fill out in front of his property if the effect will be to change the current of the water and injure the banks of a lower proprietor. Dayton v. Robert, 8 Ohio C. C. 640.

Nor can the upper proprietor place obstructions in the channel to prevent its changing its course which cause it to destroy land of the lower proprietor. Armendatz v. Stillman, 67 Tex. 458.

In Rex v. Trafford, 1 Barn. & Ad. 874, the court applied to flood water the rule that as against the lower proprietor the upper proprietor will not be permitted to change the course of the stream so that in case the flood water of a stream had also taken a certain course to a river, the upper owner would not be permitted to erect banks to keep it in the stream.

But upon appeal a new trial was granted because sufficient facts had not been found by 41 L. R. A.

the jury; the court stating that it agreed with the principles laid down by the lower court. Trafford v. King, 8 Bing. 204, 1 Moore & S. 401, 2 Crompt. & J. 286, 2 Tyrw. 201.

Diversion of water.

The upper proprietor cannot divert the water. Mason v. Hill, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1, 2 Nev. & M. 747; Pope v. Kinman, 54 Cal. 8; Shook v. Colohan, 12 Or. 239; Hilliker v. Coleman, 73 Mich. 170; Rummell v. Lamb, 100 Mich. 424; Pyle v. Richards, 17 Neb. 180.

The digging of a well so near a stream that it draws water from it to the perceptible diminution of the stream will be actionable. Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 7 Exch. 282, 16 Jur. 200, 21 L. J. Exch. N. S. 241.

No prescription or custom is necessary to maintain an action for diversion of a watercourse. Sury v. Pigot, Popham, 169, 3 Bulst. 339.

The water cannot be diverted from the stream so as not to return until after it has passed the mill of the lower owner. Haymes v. Gault, 1 McCord, L. 548.

If the lower proprietor has made use of the water of the stream it cannot be diverted to his injury. Frankum v. Falmouth, 6 Car. & P. 529; Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208, 2 Smith, 321.

If the water is diverted from its channel it cannot be returned in such a manner as to fall across the natural course against the bank of the lower owner to the injury of his land. Valley R. Co. v. Franz, 43 Ohio St. 623.

The diversion of a watercourse from its ancient channel is a nuisance. Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 234.

A recovery may be had for inserting a small pipe into, and taking water from, a supply pipe which carries it to the plaintiff's house. Moore v. Browne, 3 Dyer, 319b.

The owner of a spring which forms a watercourse cannot wholly divert its flow. Leavenworth v. Prospect Rock Water Co. 8 Kulp, 310.

The upper proprietor cannot divert the water and return it below the land of the lower proprietor. Kimberly & C. Co. v. Hewitt, 79 Wis. 334; Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 / a. Dec. 739.

The water cannot be diverted from a surface stream by tapping an underground vein. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Shugar, L. R. 6 Ch. 488, 24 L. T. N. S. 402, 19 Week. Rep. 569.

The mere fact that the stream reaches the lower proprietor through a tunnel will not prevent his maintaining an action for its diversion. Holker v. Poritt, L. R. 8 Exch. 107, 42 L. J. Exch. 85, 21 Week. Rep. 414.

Water cannot be taken out of the stream and not returned again until it has passed the dam of a lower proprietor. Sackrider v. Beers, 10 Johns. 241.

The upper owner will not be permitted to sink a tank the effect of which is to absorb the whole flow of the stream and carry the water therefrom through pipes to his mill. Shively v. Hume, 10 Or. 76.

One riparian owner will not be permitted to turn the water from one stream into another so ditches, no underground sewers, and the said branch on the south side of Pike street is, and has been since it was opened, in 1870, the principal drainage for all that part of the town and city lying north of it, and east of the central part of the city, and in it have been found, and from it have been taken, from time to time, dead animals, such as hogs, dogs, cats, chickens, etc., in all stages of decay. Said branch is the only living stream passing, or that ever has passed, through said town or city. In times of heavy rains and freshets the surface washing and water from near one-third part of said city, and from pasture hills lying north of it, from across streets and alleys, flow into said branch on said Pike street, carrying into the same the washings from stables and other outbuildings. That some of the persons residas to deprive the owner of land farther down the stream of its use. Weiss v. Oregon Iron & S. Co. 13 Or. 493.

If water is diverted from a stream the one making the diversion is bound to care for it until it is returned to the stream. Tucker v. Salem Flouring Mills Co. 15 Or. 581.

If the upper riparian owner, in attempting to change the channel of the stream, causes it to flow in such a way that a material portion of it is lost before it is returned to the natural channel, he will be liable for the injury. Petibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579.

The owner of one half of a milldam cannot divert the water above the dam and carry it to a point below the dam, without being liable for the injuries thereby inflicted on his co-owner. Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co. 3 Sumn. 189.

An action may be maintained if, in digging a conduit for a water supply, the trench is so constructed that it draws the water from the stream to the injury of complainant's supply. Covert v. Cranford, 141 N. Y. 521, reversing, as to the allowance of permanent damages, Covert v. Valentine, 50 N. Y. S. R. 516.

An upper proprietor cannot divert the water from the stream for the purpose of making repairs to his dam and mill. Van Hoesen v. Coventry, 10 Barb. 518. The court seems to make a distinction between diversion and retention, holding that in case of a retention it must be unreasonable in order to hold the defendant liable.

If I have a mill by prescription on my land, and another erects a new mill on his land, and thus takes the stream from my mill, or stops it, or takes more water to run to his mill so that I receive damage to my mill, so that my mill no longer grinds as much as it used to do, I may have an action on the case against him. 1 Rolle, Abr. 107, citing 22 Hen. VI. 14.

The upper owner cannot, in making an aqueduct over the stream, construct its foundation in such a way that the water is lost from the stream by percolation. Covert v. Brooklyn, 6 App. Div. 73.

If a man diverts all the water from my watercourse to my mill an action on the case will lie at my election. Kirble's Case, 1 Rolle, Abr. 104.

In 32 Ass. 2, a writ of assize of nuisance was brought because defendant had turned a watercourse, and the nuisance assigned was that defendant had made a trench across the watercourse and diverted water from the plaintiff's mill; and the court awarded that the water should be removed to its right course at the cost of the defendant, and that the plaintiff recover his damages, and that defendant be imprisoned.

No terminus a quo need be alleged in an action for diverting a watercourse; any want of sufficient allegation of diversion is cured by verdict. Prickman v. Trip, Comb. 231.

A municipal corporation is not exempt from the rule which renders the one diverting a watercourse from its natural channel liable for the resulting injury. Ordway v. Canisteo, 66 Hun, 568.

41 L. R. A.

The state is liable to lower owners if it takes the water of a lake for supplying a canal. Lakeside Paper Co. v. State, 15 App. Div. 169.

Although the court had, in People, Loomis, v. Canal Appraisers, 33 N. Y. 461, held that a riparian proprietor was not entitled to compensation for the diversion of the waters of the Mohawk river for use in a canal. That case, however, was limited as governed by the civil law as derived from the Dutch settlers in Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 393.

The owner of a spring cannot divert its water in an unreasonable manner whereby the owner of a tannery situated below on the stream is deprived of its use. Colrick v. Swinburne, 105 N. Y. 503.

Water of a stream cannot be taken from its course and discharged upon the land of another person to his injury. Porter v. Durham, 74 N. C. 767.

One proprietor cannot divert all the water from a stream for manufacturing purposes. Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106.

A riparian owner will be liable in damages if he diverts the water from its course to the injury of a lower proprietor. Perkins v. Dow, 1 Root, 535.

A riparian proprietor cannot enlarge a natural channel taking water out of the main channel of the stream, if by so doing he deprives a lower proprietor of the use of the water. Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Me. 266, 23 Am. Dec. 504.

The water cannot be carried away in a race, and not returned to the stream until after it passes the land of a lower proprietor. Plumleigh v. Dawson, 6 Ill. 544, 41 Am. Dec. 199.

The erection of a dam which causes the water to spread out over a large tract of land and be lost by evaporation and percolation, is a wrongful diversion of the water. White v. East Lake Land Co. 96 Ga. 415.

Where the respective proprietors desire to convert the water into steam so that it cannot be returned to the stream, neither can use more than his due proportion of the amount flowing in the stream. Bliss v. Kennedy, 48 Ill. 67.

The question of the materiality of the diversion is for the jury. Hogg v. Connellsville Water Co. 168 Pa. 456.

The water may be diverted by the upper proprietor if he restores it before it leaves his land. Canfield v. Andrew, 54 Vt. 1, 41 Am. Rep. 828.

But the mere provision of means for the return of the diverted water is not sufficient to relieve the one making the diversion from liability if the water is not in fact returned to the stream. Stein v. Burden, 29 Ala. 127, 65 Am. Dec. 394.

The upper proprietor may divert the water for use on his own land, provided he restores it to the stream before the channel reaches the land of the lower proprietor. Webster v. Fleming, 2 Humph. 518.

There will be no right of action for diversion of water, provided it is done wholly on the upper proprietor's land and the water is returned to the channel before it leaves. Norton v. Volentine, 14 Vt. 239, 39 Am. Dec. 220.

ing along said branch throw their soap-suds from clothes washings, and kitchen slops, into the same, with other kitchen refuse, including the entrails of chickens. That at the present time there is one or more dead animals in said branch, and there is flowing into it, about 600 feet above where the tile drain from defendants' sanitarium flows into said branch, a tile drain from the Martinsville Sanitarium, which has been connected with said ditch since this suit was originally filed. That there is now, and long has been, a city ordinance of said city prohibiting anyone from throwing dead animals or any refuse or befouling substance in said branch, and from in any way befouling the same. The Martinsville Sanitarium has been in operation for three years, and bathes as many patients as are bathed at defendants'

Acceleration of flow.

In England it was held that a riparian owner may remove shoals from the stream without liability to a lower owner for overflow of the stream by the hastening of the flow. Rhodes v. Alredale Drainage Comrs. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 402, 45 L. J. C. P. N. S. 861, 35 L. T. N. S. 46, 24 Week. Rep. 1053.

But in Georgia the court has decided that the upper riparian proprietor cannot remove a ledge of rocks on his land if the effect will be to overflow the land of the lower proprietor with water and sand. Grant v. Kuglar, 81 Ga. 637, 8 L. R. A. 606.

In Quebec the upper proprietor cannot send down more water than is accustomed to flow in the stream. Frechette v. La Compagnie Manufacturiere, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 170, 53 L. J. C. P. N. S. 20, 50 L. T. N. S. 62.

An upper proprietor cannot cut a ditch and divert the water for the purpose of protecting his meadow from overflow if the effect will be to increase the flow of the water in the stream to such an extent as to injure the dam of a lower proprietor. Kay v. Kirk, 76 Md. 41.

A manufacturing company which has acquired by prescription the right to cast polluted water into the stream, which, by reason of sluggish current and numerous ponds, is largely precipitated before it reaches the lower owner, cannot clean out the channel in such a way as to hasten the flow and cast the polluted water onto the land of the lower owner. Mississippi Mills Co. v. Smith, 69 Miss. 290.

The owner of a mill cannot pass such unusual quantities of water through the dam as to injure the lands of lower proprietors. Boyington v. Squires, 71 Wis. 276.

Diminution of flow.

Water cannot be drawn from a stream so as to diminish the flow through the land of the lower proprietor, although he has no present use for it, for he may possibly thereafter find some use for it. Bannatyne v. Cranston, Mor. Dict. 12,769, Property, cited in L. R. 2 App. Cas. 855.

The upper owner cannot permit the water to escape from a dam in such small quantities in severe weather that the stream becomes a mass of ice, so that when the spring freshets come there is no channel for the water to escape in, which results in its spreading over the adjoining fields to the injury of other owners. Ellis v. Clemens, 21 Ont. Rep. 227, Affirmed in 22 Ont. Rep. 216.

But if the upper riparian owner in making use of the water leaves enough in the stream so that what he takes is an immaterial portion, he does not exceed his right. New York Rubber Co. v. Rothery, 32 N. Y. S. R. 905.

Pits for watering cattle cannot be enlarged to the injury of a lower proprietor. Brown v. Best, 1 Wils. 174.

The appropriation of the water of a non-navigable river by a riparian owner in such quantities as to unreasonably diminish the supply of other riparian owners is a private nuisance 41 L. R. A.

for which an injunction will lie. Saunders v. Bluefield Waterworks & I. Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 135.

The water cannot be obstructed and diverted to such an extent that the waste caused by frost, absorption, and evaporation causes material injury and damage. Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 Mich. 381.

It is not a reasonable use of water for a riparian proprietor who desires to use the water for cattle to build dams and spread the water out in such manner that it is lost by evaporation and absorption, so as to injure the proprietor below him on the stream. Ferre v. Knipe, 28 Cal. 341.

The upper owner cannot protect his land by means of a dam if the effect is to deprive the lower proprietor of the flow of the water. Bilas v. Johnson, 76 Cal. 597.

An action will lie for interrupting the flow of water. Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 534.

If the upper proprietor maliciously holds the water back during the day and lets it down during the night when the lower proprietor cannot use it, he will be liable in damages. Twiss v. Baldwin, 9 Conn. 291.

Right to increase quantity.

There can be no recovery by the lower owner for injuries caused by merely enhancing the flow of the surface water into the stream. Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Wilson, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 202.

The owner of swamps may drain them into their natural outlets, although the effect is to cause the stream to flow more rapidly and in greater volume down the natural course through the land of the lower proprietor. Misell v. McGowan, 120 N. C. 134.

The upper owner cannot turn water from another stream into the watercourse, to the injury of the lower proprietor. Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 94, 64 Am. Dec. 353.

Nor can water be taken from one stream and made to run in another so as to increase the volume of the latter flowing over the land of the lower riparian owner. Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. L. 460.

But surface and well water may be collected and discharged into a natural stream if the result is not to cause the stream to overflow its banks. Jackman v. Arlington Mills, 137 Mass. 277.

A city cannot turn surface water into a stream, and provide an insufficient culvert to carry the stream under a highway, so that the water is turned upon the land of a riparian owner. Stanchfield v. Newton, 142 Mass. 110.

A city may use a stream for receipt of surface drainage from its streets without being liable to a lower riparian owner, although the effect is to drive the fish from the stream. Bulnard v. Newton, 154 Mass. 255.

However, if the upper proprietor cuts drains into the stream by which the amount of water flowing therein is increased, the lower owner will not be permitted to dam it back so as to overflow the land of the upper proprietor. Williams v. Gale, 3 Harr. & J. 231.

and all the water from said baths enters through said tile into said branch on Pike street, and above where the drainage from defendants' sanitarium enters the ditch, and no distinction is made at said Martinsville Sanitarium as to baths given syphilitic patients and others, but the waters from all baths enter said branch together; the distance from the bath house to said branch being about 80 feet. The waters and soapsuds from a laundry erected since this suit was commenced, and conducted and operated about 100 feet from said branch, when of any considerable quantity, as they often are, flow into said branch through a covered ditch on Morgan street one square south of Pike street. That all the water from any source which enters the Pike street ditch flows to and beyond the west boundary of said original plat

The flow of the water into a stream may be hastened for drainage purposes, but the direction of the drainage cannot be changed for the purpose of having the water carried into the stream. Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 407, 67 Am. Dec. 437.

The flow of the surface water may be hastened by the upper owner into the stream. Sowers v. Shift, 15 La. Ann. 301.

But surface water cannot be collected and thrown into a stream in such quantities that the stream is caused to overflow its banks and flood the land of lower proprietors. Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540.

Surface water may be collected and discharged into a stream, although the effect is to increase the flow at certain times and diminish it at others. Waffle v. New York C. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 11, 13 Am. Rep. 467.

But the surface water must not be discharged into the stream beyond its natural capacity. McCormick v. Horan, 81 N. Y. 86, 37 Am. Rep. 479.

The upper proprietor may drain into the river the waters which will naturally flow into it without being liable for the injury caused thereby to the lower proprietor. Kankakee & S. R. Co. v. Horan, 131 Ill. 300, Affirming 30 Ill. App. 558.

A riparian owner will not be permitted to empty into the stream an additional amount of water to the extent of 10,000,000 gallons in every twenty-four hours. Baltimore v. Appold, 42 Md. 442.

Drainage water cannot be taken out of its natural course and thrown into a stream into which it would not naturally flow. Williams v. Union Improv. Co. 1 Pa. Dist. R. 288; Gettling v. Union Improv. Co. 7 Kulp, 493.

In Flynn v. Shenandoah, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 622, the court, in discussing the right of a borough to throw down a wall which had been erected so as to interfere with the flow of a stream into which sewage was emptied, said: A borough has a right to make a sewer empty its contents into a natural stream even though the flow of water therein is somewhat increased; but that it might be liable in case of an unreasonable increase in the flow.

In Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. 154, 86 Am. Dec. 521, the court, in considering the liability for turning surface water on a lower proprietor, says: No doubt the owner of land through which a stream flows may increase the volume of water by draining into it without any liability to damages by a lower owner.

Right to water turned into stream.

A lower owner cannot complain of the action of the upper owner who has turned an extra quantity of water into the stream in taking it out again before it reaches the lower proprietor if there is no diminution of the quantity reaching him. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 157, 21 Am. Dec. 41.

But a person who has turned water into a stream will not be permitted to divert water therefrom unless he shows that he takes no 41 L. R. A.

more water out than he put in. Wilcox v. Hausch, 64 Cal. 461.

And the fact that the upper proprietor has added a quantity of water to the river will not entitle him to take it out again after it has passed upon the property of a lower proprietor so that it has gone beyond his control. Druley v. Adam, 102 Ill. 177, Affirming Adams v. Slater, 8 Ill. App. 72.

Right to hold back

The mere erection of a dam and the use of the water in driving wheels must necessarily derange its steady, constant, and natural flow, and substitute a different manner as to the time and mode of holding it up and letting it down. Gould v. Boston Duck Co. 13 Gray, 451.

The water can be detained for the purpose of the upper mill if it is not diverted from the stream. Hartzell v. Sill, 12 Pa. 248.

Storing the water in a pond is not actionable if it is detained no longer than is reasonably necessary. Canfield v. Andrew, 54 Vt. 1, 41 Am. Rep. 828.

The upper proprietor may hold back the water a reasonable time to raise a pond, although the effect is to deprive the lower owner of the use of the water to a certain extent. Mumpower v. Bristol, 90 Va. 153.

The upper proprietor may hold the water back and let it down in such manner as is necessary for the use of his mill, if the mill is adapted to the character of the stream and the use is reasonable, and the lower proprietor will not be heard to complain if he does not construct his dam so as to utilize the water as it is let down by the upper proprietor. Coldwell v. Sander-son, 69 Wis. 52.

The detention for two days and a night, for the purpose of forming an ice pond, is not an unreasonable interference with the rights of a mill owner below, if he only obtains 25 per cent of the power for his mill from the stream. Gehlen v. Knorr, 101 Iowa, 700, 36 L. R. A. 697.

Damages cannot be recovered for the mere exposure of the lower milldam to the sunshine by the holding back of the water. Louisville & N. E. Co. v. Beauchamp, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 308.

The supply to the lower proprietor must not depend upon the convenience or caprice of the upper proprietor, or upon accident or mere chance, as upon the raising of a flood gate or overflow of the dam or leakage through it, but his supply must be substantially according to the natural flow, subject only to such interruption as is necessary and unavoidable by the reasonable and proper use of the water in the stream above. Ware v. Allen, 140 Mass. 513.

The owner of an ice pond may, in order to clean it, drain the water off and then hold the water back until it is refilled, although the effect is to stop mills lower down the stream. DeBaun v. Bean, 29 Hun, 236.

So far as the mode of holding up the water and letting it down is reasonably incidental to the use of the stream for mill purposes, it is the right of the proprietor, and constitutes in part the mill privileges which the law gives. Gould v. Boston Duck Co. 13 Gray, 451.

of the town of Martinsville with considerable current, and from that point south across the mill lot of Moran, one square, to Morgan street, in said city; thence across Morgan street, in the same direction, some 60 feet; thence, still south, through the residence lot and cow pasture of one Hastings, to a point on a line with the north line of Washington street, extended; thence, still south, under a culvert or small bridge on a passway of some 16 feet or more, leading to extensive bottoms to the west, and used by many persons.

That said branch from said culvert angled some to the west of south, through and across the said lands of plaintiff, and then entered the land of Harvey Satterwhite, and there flowed more westerly, and prior to the state ditch, hereinafter mentioned, caused several Keeping back the water long enough to fill the milldam is not an unreasonable use. Pitts v. Lancaster Mills, 13 Met. 156.

Under ordinary circumstances the upper proprietor may shut his gates and hold back the water when necessary to the reasonable and beneficial use of his mill. Mable v. Matteson, 17 Wis. 1.

A city cannot claim to have the water of a stream flow in its natural manner for the purpose of supplying with water for extinguishing fires and for sewage purposes, as against a riparian owner who has a mill farther up the stream, and whose dam is appropriate to the size and capacity of the stream, and who uses the water in the ordinary and usual manner. Springfield v. Harris, 4 Allen, 496, 81 Am. Dec. 715.

If the owner of the upper mill lets down his gate and detains the water for an unreasonable time, or if he lets the water down in unreasonable quantities so as to prevent the lower owner from using it, he will be liable for the injury resulting therefrom. Merritt v. Brinkerhoff, 17 Johns. 306, 8 Am. Dec. 404.

The upper proprietor cannot detain the water and then discharge it in such quantities that it overflows its banks and injures the property of lower riparian proprietors. McKee v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 125 N. Y. 353, affirming 52 Hun, 52.

If the upper proprietor detains the water no longer on his land than is necessary for its proper enjoyment consistent with the capacity of the stream, the lower proprietor will not be heard to complain. Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts, 327, 27 Am. Dec. 313; Whaler v. Ahl, 29 Pa. 98.

Long-continued use of the water of a stream for mill purposes will not prevent the owner of land further up the stream from building a dam and using the water for mill purposes, although the effect is to interrupt the natural and continuous flow of water to the lower mill. Thurber v. Martin, 2 Gray, 394, 61 Am. Dec. 468.

The mere fact that the upper owner is compelled to occasionally shut his gates to hold back the water for a time will not give a right of action to the owner of an ancient mill lower down the stream if the upper mill is adapted to the character of the stream and the use of the water is reasonable for the mill, although no attention is paid to the necessities of mills lower down the stream. Gould v. Boston Duck Co. 13 Gray, 442.

The upper proprietor has a right to detain the waters for mechanical purposes in a reasonable manner. Parker v. Hotchkiss, 25 Conn. 821.

But a millowner whose wheel requires 50 per cent more water than the stream will supply, will not be permitted to retain the water to raise a head for the wheel, to the detriment of lower proprietors. Timm v. Bear, 29 Wis. 265.

So, if the owner of a dam accumulates water during the wet season and lets it off in the summer so as to cause a greater flow than usual, by means of which the banks of the lower proprietor are washed away, his land drowned, and his grass depreciated, an action will lie for 41 L. R. A.

the damage. Gerrish v. Newmarket Mfg. Co. 30 N. H. 484.

So, the upper owner cannot detain the water in his reservoir during the autumn and spring when his mill is supplied from another source for the purpose of providing a supply for the summer months when there is a scarcity of water. Clinton v. Myers, 46 N. Y. 511, 7 Am. Rep. 373.

So, if there is regularly a dry season when the water in the stream is materially reduced so that the stream is not of sufficient capacity to run an upper mill, the owner will not be permitted to pond the water and hold it back until he has acquired enough to run his mill and then turn it all on for a few hours, with the result that it flows over the smaller dams below, and is lost to the mill proprietors. Mason v. Hoyle, 56 Conn. 255.

The lower proprietor cannot complain of the upper dam, if enough water comes down the stream to run the lower mills; and the mere fact that the difficulty of getting logs is increased, so that it requires an extra hand for each twenty-five logs, is not sufficient to give a right of action. Palmer v. Mulligan, 3 Calmes, 320, 2 Am. Dec. 270.

The owner of a mill may draw sufficient water from a natural reservoir in the stream to operate his mills in the daytime if their capacity is suited to the size and character of the stream, and shut his gate at night, although the effect is to interrupt the flow of the stream while the reservoir is refilling, and the owner of a paper mill below requires the continuous flow of the stream night and day to operate his mill successfully. Bullard v. Saratoga Victory Mfg. Co. 77 N. Y. 525.

An action for diverting a stream of water is supported by proof of holding back of the water so that it did not reach plaintiff's mill by its natural flow. Shears v. Wood, 7 J. B. Moore, 345.

A millowner cannot unnecessarily and unreasonably detain water from those who have a subsequent right to use it. Phillips v. Sherman, 64 Me. 171.

The use of the water by the upper millowner exclusively at night, holding it back for accumulation in the daytime, may be found to be unreasonable. Barrett v. Parsons, 10 Cush. 367.

A booming company cannot retain the water for the purpose of obtaining a sufficient quantity to float logs down the stream, and then let it all down at once, if the effect is to deprive the lower riparian owner of the power to run his mill. Thunder Bay River Boom Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 236, 18 Am. Rep. 184; Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 Mich. 278.

A log owner cannot place his logs in a stream at a time when it is not navigable, so as to obstruct the flow of the water to the injury of a millowner lower down the stream. Wooden v. Mount Pleasant Lumber & Mfg. Co. 106 Mich. 412.

The upper proprietor cannot unreasonably interfere with the natural flow of the stream, and send the water down in such unusual quantities that a large portion of it is wasted, and considerable ponds on the lands of Satterwhite and plaintiff, lying west of the tract crossed by the branch, and which ponds continued and were stagnant, having no outlet, during a large part of each year, until drained off by said state ditch. That other ponds between Morgan and Washington streets, and near the line dividing the lands of plaintiff and Satterwhite, existed, of considerable size, at the time said branch was cut and the waters turned down Pike street, but the same were filled by washings and deposits from said branch. That the said state ditch, so recently cut as aforesaid, follows the line, in the main, of the said branch from its intersection with the Pike street ditch south to the Satterwhite line. That before the state ditch was cut there was at times a considerable flowage and accumulanone is left to maintain the stream in its usual condition. Whitney v. Wheeler Cotton Mills, 151 Mass. 396, 7 L. R. A. 613.

The upper proprietor has no right to obstruct the flow of the stream to the injury of a lower proprietor, and if he does so the latter may remove the obstruction, doing no unnecessary injury to the upper proprietor. Miner v. Gilmour, 12 Moore, P. C. C. 131, 7 Week. Rep. 328.

Right to throw back.

There is no right to throw water back on the upper proprietor. Jones v. Fisher, 17 Can. S. C. 515; Gibson v. Fischer, 68 Iowa, 29; Baldwin v. Calkins, 10 Wend. 167; Brown v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 519, 86 Am. Dec. 406; Omelvany v. Jaggers, 2 Hill, L. 634, 27 Am. Dec. 417; Hahn v. Thornberry, 7 Bush, 406; Good v. Dodge, 3 Pittsb. 557; Brown v. Bush, 45 Pa. 64; Warring v. Martin, Wright (Ohio) 380; McCalmont v. Whitaker, 3 Rawle, 84, 23 Am. Dec. 102; Haas v. Choussard, 17 Tex. 558; Johns v. Stevens, 3 Vt. 308; Robertson v. Miller, 40 Conn. 40; Stout v. McAdams, 3 Ill. 67, 33 Am. Dec. 441; Summy v. Mulford, 5 Blackf. 202; Scheible v. Law, 65 Ind. 332; Sumner v. Tleiston, 7 Pick. 198; Hodges v. Hodges, 5 Met. 205; Luther v. Winnissimmet Co. 9 Cush. 171; Fox v. Fostoria, 14 Ohio C. C. 471; Booker v. McBride (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 1081.

An action will lie for stopping the natural flow of the stream. Thompson v. Moore, 2 Allen, 350.

A person throwing back water on the upper owner by means of a dam is a wrongdoer against whom one in possession merely may maintain an action. Yeargalu v. Johnston, 2 N. C. (1 Taylor & Conf. Rep.) 80, 1 Am. Dec. 581.

In Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 90, in discussing the acquisition of a right by prescription, it is said that there is a right to pen the water back until a neighbor is prejudiced.

2 Rolle, Abr. 140, pl. 0, says if a man stops a stream of water which runs through his land by which my land is surrounded it is a nuisance to me; citing 9 Edw. IV. 35. But the question there was as to the right to enter the land and throw down the obstruction, and the question of nuisance was only incidentally passed on.

If a man stops a watercourse by which land of which I am seised in fee is surrounded, though I may have an assize, yet, I may have an action on the case at my election. Stye v. Mordant, 1 Rolle, Abr. 104.

Sand, gravel, and worn marble from marble works cannot be permitted to accumulate in the stream in such a way as to cause the water to overflow the land of an upper proprietor. Ames v. Dorset Marble Co. 64 Vt. 10.

There can be no obstruction to the flow of the stream. Hall v. Swift, 4 Bing. N. C. 381, 1 Arn. 157, 6 Scott, 167.

If the accumulation of sand in a stream is caused by a dam erected lower down the stream, the owner of the dam is not relieved from responsibility, even if this accumulation results in part from hillside clearings of the upper owners. Hines v. Jarrett, 28 S. C. 480, 41 L. R. A.

So, if the dam of the upper owner is raised to such an extent that the pressure of the water causes percolation which renders the land of the lower owner damp and unproductive, there will be a cause of action. Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 525, 91 Am. Dec. 72.

Although leave is granted to build a dam so as to flow the upper proprietor's land in a certain way there will be liability in case it is flowed in another way. Hutchinson v. Granger, 13 Vt. 386.

Legislative authority to erect the lower mill will not authorize the throwing back of water upon the upper one. Lee v. Pembroke Iron Co. 57 Me. 481, 2 Am. Rep. 59.

An action will lie for penning back water as soon as it interferes with a use to which the upper proprietor attempts to put his land, although he was not making such use of the land when the dam was built. McLaren v. Cook, 3 U. C. Q. B. 299.

A dam which sets back the water so as to interfere with the drainage of the land of the upper owner is a violation of his rights. Treat v. Bates, 27 Mich. 300.

If a dam is so used as wrongfully to throw the water upon the lands or mills of another it may be called a nuisance. Snow v. Cowles, 22 N. H. 302.

One who builds a dam on a stream will be liable for injuries done by the holding back of ice which comes down in ordinary quantities borne by an ordinary freshet which can be expected at the time of year. Bell v. McClintonck, 9 Watts, 119, 34 Am. Dec. 507.

If a dam is so erected as to cause the stream to become obstructed with ice, and the water of the stream to be turned back on the land of the upper proprietor to his injury, the owner will be liable for the resulting injury. Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287.

A lower proprietor has no right to construct his dam so as to throw the water back on the upper proprietor in times of ordinary freshets. But he is not responsible for damages caused by extraordinary floods. Bristol Hydraulic Co. v. Boyer, 67 Ind. 236.

Throwing the water back in any degree, even at times of freshets which ought to be anticipated, or of ordinary stage of the water, is illegal. Humphrey v. Irvin, 18 W. N. C. 449.

The one building a dam will be liable for freshets enhanced by the dam. Casebeer v. Mowry, 55 Pa. 419, 93 Am. Dec. 768.

If the dam causes the stream to overflow the land above only when the stream is swollen, the upper proprietor will be entitled to the proportionate amount of damages. Pugh v. Wheeler, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 50.

A riparian owner will be liable for all damages caused to the upper proprietor by water thrown back on his dam in times of high water which are usual, ordinary, and reasonably anticipated. Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451; Ames v. Cannon River Mfg. Co. 27 Minn. 245.

But the mere fact that water is backed up in times of freshets upon the wheels of an upper mill because of the maintenance of a dam by the lower proprietor and his storing logs in the tion of water upon plaintiff's said land from the surface ditches on the streets of said city, and, there being no well-defined channel for said waters across plaintiff's said land, plaintiff caused a ditch of small dimensions to be cut for said branch and street flowage across said land, on or near the line of said branch, at a cost of $20, $10 of which plaintiff demanded said city should pay, and said city did pay the same, because of the benefit thereof to the city. That the waters of White river during considerable freshets flow through a natural depression in the ground, the surface on either side rising gradually to a height of from 2 to 5 feet within a distance of from 500 to 600 feet of the channel of said branch before the cutting of said state ditch or other ditches from its start west on Pike street. Prior to the com-pond will not give the upper owner a right of action. Richards v. Peter, 70 Mich. 286.

In Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 6 Pa. 383, 47 Am. Dec. 474, the court, in discussing the right of a navigation company, says that a riparian owner may use the water power to the full extent of the stream, by ponding the water back to his line, although the effect will be that in times of high water the obstruction will cause an overflow upon the land of an upper riparian owner.

But in McCoy v. Danley, 20 Pa. 88, 57 Am. Dec. 680, the court held that the lower proprietor will be liable for injury caused by the ordinary high water of the stream which is thrown back on his dam, and states that the rule of the Coon Case can only be applied to floods which are extraordinary in their character.

Although the water from a dam has been set back over the land for several years, less than the period of limitation, the upper proprietor may maintain an action, if upon attempting to make a new use of his property he finds that the use is interfered with by the water. King v. Tiffany, 9 Conn. 162.

The water cannot be set back one foot by the lower proprietor upon the land of the upper proprietor. Hill v. Ward, 7 Ill. 285.

If a lower proprietor undertakes to obstruct or change the natural stream, and thereby backs the water on the upper owner, the latter, although he cannot show any injury, is entitled to nominal damages. Whipple v. Cumberland Mfg. Co. 2 Story, 661.

The upper proprietor may recover damages if his right of drainage through a watercourse is cut off by obstructions placed in the stream by the lower proprietor. Hastings v. Livermore, 7 Gray, 194.

If one tenant in common erects a dam on his separate estate so as to flow the water back on the common property, the cotenant may recover for the injury. Odiorne v. Lyford, 9 N. H. 502, 32 Am. Dec. 387.

The lower owner cannot obstruct the watercourse so that it will not carry off the water which is accustomed to flow in it. Ferris v. Wellborn, 64 Miss. 29.

The owner of the lower dam is not liable for the flowage of a wheel above him if it is caused by the filling of the stream with sediment above the dam, which was not anticipated when the dam was constructed. Proctor v. Jennings, 6 Nev. 83, 3 Am. Rep. 240.

The mere facts that by reason of the dam the ice in the stream when it breaks up in the spring holds the water back so that it floods the wheels of an upper mill, and that the water is held back for a longer time than usual, do not give a right of action. Smith v. Agawam Canal Co. 2 Allen, 355.

If the dam of the lower owner does not throw the water back to a bridge of the upper owner the former will not be liable in case, by reason of a great storm of wind and rain, the water backs up and destroys the bridge. China v. Southwick, 12 Me. 238.

The fact that the upper owner uses the water out of the regular channel of the stream does not change his right to be free of the back 41 L. R. A.

water of a lower dam, if he returns the water to the stream before it leaves his land. Webster v. Fleming, 2 Humph. 513.

A landowner who maintains a culvert on his own land in such a manner as to safely carry the ordinary flow of water in times of ordinary freshets will not be liable for the increased flow of water on an upper owner's land by the obstruction of the channel by an owner farther down the stream. Blerer v. Hurst, 155 Pa. 523.

Damages must be paid in case land is flooded by the raising of a dam. Gorman v. Trice, 79 Ga. 731.

The upper proprietor may erect a dam across the stream on his own property for the purpose of constructing a fish pond, although the effect is to prevent the flowing back on his land of water by a milldam below. Wood v. Edes, 2 Allen, 578.

Restoration to ancient channel.

If a prescriptive right has been acquired to change the use of the water of the stream, it cannot be restored to its natural state to the injury of the lower proprietor. Belknap v. Trimble, 3 Paige, 577.

So, after a right to divert the water has been acquired by prescription the flow cannot be restored to its natural channel to the injury of lower proprietors. Mathewson v. Hoffman, 77 Mich. 420, 6 L. R. A. 349.

But equity will not interfere after the defendant has gone upon the plaintiff's land and restored the water to its ancient channel, on the ground that the plaintiff had acquired a right by prescription to have the water flow in the new channel. Coalter v. Hunter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 58, 15 Am. Dec. 728.

If by a sudden flood the stream changes its course so that it does not run into the land of the lower proprietor as it formerly did, the upper proprietor cannot, after permitting it to retain its new course for ten years, restore it to its ancient channel to the injury of the lower proprietor. Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 388, 44 Am. Dec. 344.

If the channel of a stream is changed, and it is permitted to flow in the new channel until the upper proprietor has expended money and made improvements upon the faith of its continuing in its changed position, the owner will not be permitted to restore it to its former channel. Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265.

If the channel of the stream has been gradually filled so that the natural flow has been altered, a riparian owner cannot, by removing the accretion, restore the same to its ancient course and velocity to the injury of an upper proprietor. Withers v. Purchase, 60 L. T. N. S. 819.

But if water is diverted from a brook for a canal, and afterwards returned to it upon the abandonment of the canal, a riparian proprietor will have no right of action for injuries done to his land by the overflow of the brook at a time of high water, which results from the fact that the bed has become partially filled up during the time of the diversion. Mason v. Shrewsbury & H. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 578, 40 commencement of the alleged wrongful acts of the defendants, the water flowing in said branch and through plaintiff's land, while not pure, was reasonably fit and valuable for farm and stock purposes, and the only stream of water accessible for stock kept and pastured on plaintiff's land, and was used for that purpose by the plaintiff during the part of the season that it reached her land. The land of plaintiff south of Washington street is pasture land, and valuable for grazing purposes, and, by reason of its location, valuable for cow pasture. Prior to the acts of defendants complained of the waters of said branch deposited no offensive matter on the lands of plaintiff, except such as would naturally find its way into an open public ditch or branch running through a thickly populated district,—no offensive or

L. J. Q. B. N. S. 293, 25 L. T. N. S. 239, 20 Week. Rep. 14.

The accustomed course of a stream which riparian owners are entitled to say must not be disturbed, is not to be found in historical research, but is that which is its natural and apparently permanent course at the time when the right is called in question. Withers v. Purchase, 60 L. T. N. S. 819.

IV. Use for sewer.

The question how far the stream may be used for sewer purposes is one of the most difficult which the subject presents. On the one hand, the use of the stream to float off a small amount of refuse seems reasonable, and is generally upheld. On the other hand, when the quantity of refuse becomes so great that it renders the water unfit for the uses of lower proprietors, it is unreasonable, and will generally not be permitted. Between these two extremes is a broad field in which cases must be ruled by their facts.

Right to throw refuse into stream.

A riparian owner cannot cast waste from a sawmill into the stream, to the injury of a lower proprietor, in unreasonable quantities, if it is possible to operate the mill without doing so. Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 77 Me. 297, 52 Am. Rep. 763.

In Dwinnel v. Veazie, 50 Me. 479, it is said that if a person obstructs a stream which is by law a public highway by casting therein waste material, filth, or trash of any description, he does so at his peril; it is a public nuisance for which he will be liable to an action at law by any individual who shall be specially damaged thereby.

So, the mere fact that a sawmill as constructed cannot be operated without permitting the sawdust to fall into the stream, is not sufficient to justify such conduct, unless it is further shown that the mill was properly constructed. Red River Roller Mills v. Wright, 30 Minn. 249, 44 Am. Rep. 191.

Whether it is actionable to cast sawdust into a stream is a question for the jury. Dallmar v. Wilcox, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 231.

The upper proprietor cannot foul the water of the stream by refuse from a cheese factory, and filth from hog pens. Davis v. Lambertson, 56 Barb. 480.

A lower proprietor may enjoin the placing in the stream of blood and refuse from a slaughterhouse, the effect of which is to render the water impure and contaminate the air near where the stream flows. Woodyear v. Schaefer, 57 Md. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 419.

The upper proprietor cannot unreasonably make use of the stream to float off the bark from his tan-yard to the injury of the lower proprietor. Thomas v. Brackney, 17 Barb. 654; Honsee v. Hammond, 39 Barb. 89.

The owner of a mine who deposits culm where it will be carried down by a stream will be liable in case it is carried down and deposited on the land of a lower proprietor. Ellder v. Lykens Valley Coal Co. 157 Pa. 490. 41 L. R. A.

But there is no liability in case the culm is carried into the stream by means of extraordinary floods. Hindson v. Markle, 171 Pa. 138.

Only the amount of sawdust can be deposited in the stream which is absolutely and indispensably necessary to the beneficial use of the water, if it injures the lower proprietor. Caulfield v. Andrew, 54 Vt. 1, 41 Am. Rep. 828.

The owner of a sawmill is not bound to keep the refuse from the mill wholly out of the stream for the benefit of the owner of a starch mill below. Nor can he wantonly and needlessly throw refuse into the stream to the injury of the starch mill. Jacobs v. Allard, 42 Vt. 303, 1 Am. Rep. 331.

The owner of a distillery with which are connected cattle stables and hog yard, cannot throw the refuse from such places into the stream to the detriment of a lower proprietor. Greene v. Nunneisacher, 36 Wis. 50.

Permitting the shives from a flax mill to fall into the stream is not a reasonable use of it, and the person doing so will be liable for the injury to the owner of a dam lower down the stream caused by their accumulation in and filling up of his pond. O'Riley v. McChesney, 3 Lans. 278.

A gas manufacturer cannot permit refuse from his works to flow into the stream to the injury of proprietors lower down. Carhart v. Auburn Gaslight Co. 22 Barb. 297.

The upper proprietor cannot use the stream for washing ore in such a way that the pond of the lower owner is filled with dirt and rubbish, and also his vats in which hides are tanned. Crittenton v. Alger, 11 Met. 281.

Tailings from a placer mine cannot be deposited in the stream to such an extent that they overflow lands of a lower proprietor. Fitzpatrick v. Montgomery, 20 Mont. 181.

As to the right to pollute for mining purposes generally, see note to Drake v. Lady Enaley Coal, Iron & R. Co. (Ala.) 24 L. R. A. 64.

Pollution generally.

The upper proprietor cannot pollute the stream so as to render it unfit for use by the lower proprietor. Gladfeiter v. Walker, 40 Md. 1; McCallum v. Germantown Water Co. 54 Pa. 40, 93 Am. Dec. 656.

Under a statute providing that running water while on land belongs to the owner of it, but that he cannot adulterate it so as to interfere with the enjoyment of it by the next owner, the owner of a mine cannot use the water for washing ore if the effect is to render the water unfit for use by a lower riparian owner. Satterfield v. Rowan, 83 Ga. 187.

A municipal corporation which owns land on the border of a stream from which it obtains its water supply may maintain an action against an upper proprietor who pollutes the water so as to render it unfit for the use of the municipality. Baltimore v. Warren Mfg. Co. 59 Md. 96.

Any use that materially fouls and adulterates the water, or the deposit or discharge therein of any filth or noxious substance that so affects the water as to impair its value for the ordiunhealthful odors, or anything unsightly or damaging to plaintiff's lands, except such as would naturally arise from decaying vegetation, refuse, and decaying matter thrown and finding its way into an open ditch situated as this ditch was. A large part of plaintiff's said lands are within the corporate limits of said city, and are valuable for building purposes, suitable to be platted into town lots, and, if not injured or damaged by any nuisance, they would find reasonably ready sale and demand for such purposes. The flow of waters from said springs in said ditch or branch through plaintiff's land is irregular in quantity and intermittent in continuity. They almost entirely disappear before reaching the point where the tile drain intercepts them. In midsummer and dry seasons of the year the waters do not ordinarily reach the plaintiff's land lying below the mouth of the tile drain. During the winter and spring months, and parts of the year other than dry seasons, the waters flow into the lands south of Washington street, and part of the time through the land of plaintiff. For the larger part of the time when said waters reach the lands of plaintiff below the mouth of the tile drain, their flow does not continue during the whole day, but during portions of each day. In dry weather they sink and disappear before reaching said tile ditch. That defendants' said lots at the surface are dry, and, up to the time of digging of the artesian well hereinafter set forth, had no water thereon save surface water from rains nary purposes of life, will be deemed a violation of the rights of the lower proprietor. Baltimore v. Warren Mfg. Co. 59 Md. 96.

Water from a cemetery cannot be drained into a stream the water of which is used for domestic purposes. Barrett v. Mount Greenwood Cemetery Asso. 159 Ill. 385, 31 L. R. A. 109.

If a prescriptive right has been acquired to pollute the water to some extent the one having the right will not be permitted to increase the pollution of the stream without being liable to an action. McIntyre v. McGavin [1893] A. C. 268.

Mine water cannot be turned into a stream in such a way as to pollute it, although the pollution is nothing more than to render the water which was before soft and suitable for distilling purposes, hard and unfit for such purposes. Young v. Bankier Distillery Co. [1893] A. C. 691. In that case it is said that a riparian proprietor is not entitled to use water for secondary purposes except upon condition that he shall return it to the stream practically undiminished in volume and with its natural qualities unimpaired.

In Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter, 7 Hurlst. & N. 160, 31 L. J. Exch. N. S. 9, 7 Jur. N. S. 880, it appeared that arsenic used in calico printing was cast into the stream from which the water supply of a municipal corporation was taken lower down, and the upper proprietor argued that he carried on his business in a proper manner; but Martin, B., asked, What answer is that to an action by persons whose water for drinking is affected by arsenic poured into it by persons carrying on such a trade?

An upper proprietor cannot throw poisonous and corrosive substances into the stream so as to corrupt the water to the extent that machinery of other proprietors on the stream is corroded and destroyed, and the use of the water for reasonable and proper purposes impaired and perverted. Merrifield v. Lombard, 13 Allen, 16, 90 Am. Dec. 172.

The lower proprietor may maintain a bill in equity to restrain the upper owner from polluting the stream. Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228.

The owner of a bleachery will not be permitted to turn the chemicals used in his business into the stream if, because of its small capacity, the water is so polluted that it is rendered unfit for domestic use by the lower proprietor. Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 335.

A prescriptive right to foul the water is limited to the use which has been made of it, and in case a new use is attempted which renders the stream much more foul, the lower proprietor may recover for the injury done him. Moore v. Webb, 1 C. B. N. S. 673.

41 L. R. A.

A dyeing establishment cannot pollute the waters of a stream by the refuse from the works to the injury of a similar institution lower down. Richmond Mfg. Co. v. Atlantic De Laine Co. 10 R. I. 106, 14 Am. Rep. 658; Silver Spring Bleaching & D. Co. v. Wanskuck Co. 13 R. I. 611.

The right of drainage into rivers, given by the English act of 1847, is subject to the condition that no nuisance shall be created. Atty. Gen., Conservators of River Thames, v. Kingston-on-Thames, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 485, 11 Jur. N. S. 596, 12 L. T. N. S. 665, 13 Week. Rep. 888.

The stream cannot be polluted for mining purposes. Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 65.

Water cannot be polluted by washing iron ore to such an extent as to render it unfit for the domestic use of the lower proprietor. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hamilton, 100 Ala. 252.

The owner of a mine will be liable for draining into a stream water from the mine which is so impregnated with copperas as to be poisonous for domestic use, and to kill vegetation. Hunter v. Taylor Coal Co. 16 Ky. L. Rep. 190.

The upper proprietor will not be permitted to pollute the stream with foul water from his lead mines. Hodgkinson v. Ennor, 4 Best & S. 229, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 231, 9 Jur. N. S. 1152, 8 L. T. N. S. 451, 11 Week. Rep. 775.

Pollution of the stream by washing coal preparatory to making coke will render the person doing so liable for the injuries thereby inflicted on lower proprietors. Lents v. Carnegie, 145 Pa. 612.

There is no difference in the rules governing natural and artificial watercourses. So, if the right to an artificial course has been acquired, mine water cannot be turned into it in such a way as to pollute it. Magor v. Chadwick, 11 Ad. & El. 571, 8 Perry & D. 367, 4 Jur. 482.

An upper proprietor cannot pollute the water so as to make it unfit for drinking purposes. Dwight Printing Co. v. Boston, 122 Mass. 583.

A prior brought trespass on the case for that he and his predecessors had time out of mind a ditch running to his buildings and grounds, and defendant built a lime pit for tanning purposes so near the river that he corrupted the water, and all plaintiff's tenants left his buildings; and it was ruled that the action would lie. 13 Hen. VII. 26 B.

And this was cited as law in Aldred's Case, 9 Coke, 58.

A slaughterhouse cannot be operated upon the banks of a stream in such a way as to pollute the waters of the stream. Atty. Gen. v. Steward, 20 N. J. Eq. 415.

A person establishing works on a stream may by long usage of the water acquire a right to and melting snows, and other surface water that flowed over the same from adjacent lots and streets, and on rare occasions, such as the floods of 1847 and 1875, the waters of White river passed over and flooded the same, and that prior to the sinking of the well on defendants' land, and bringing the water to the surface, such mineral water had not, by percolation or otherwise, flowed into said branch, or upon or over plaintiff's land in question. That in the summer of 1888 a company of citizens of Martinsville bored for gas, coal, or other minerals on said lots of defendants, which constitute a single inclosure and plat of ground, with the permission of the defendants (the bore was 1,700 feet deep and over), without finding gas in paying quantities, coal, or other mineral, but at a depth of near 700 feet struck a strong vein or flow of mineral artesian water, and which, when confined to a 6-inch pipe, rose to a height of 80 feet above the ground surface, and flowed therefrom with great force. That said bore and well were practically abandoned by said company after the failure to find gas or mineral, the water flowing therefrom in large quantities and wasting for the space of one year. That water was analyzed, and found to possess medicinal and curative properties and ingredients, and thereupon the defendants concluded to utilize the same for the general benefit, as well as the benefit of the defendants; and, to that end, defendants purchased a large part and controlling interest in the stock of said company, and proceeded at have the water come to him in an unpolluted state. Wood v. Sutcliffe, 16 Jur. 75, 2 Sim. N. S. 163, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 253.

The upper proprietor cannot erect a tau-yard on the stream if the effect is to poison and corrupt the water to the injury of the proprietor below. Howell v. McCoy, 3 Rawle, 236.

If there is a prescriptive right to foul a stream, it cannot be enlarged materially without liability to damages. Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 2 Ch. 478, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 584, 15 Week. Rep. 801, Affirming L. R. 3 Eq. 296.

The rivers pollution prevention act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. chap. 75) provided an elaborate system for the prevention of water pollution, but the powers given by the act did not affect any rights existing by statute, law, or custom. Higgins, Pollution of Watercourses, 66.

There is a somewhat peculiar rule in Indiana. It seems that, although the use of one's own property will necessarily result in injury to the lower proprietor, there is a right to make such use if care is used to do no more than the necessary injury.

Thus, an upper proprietor may turn into the stream water which has been taken from an artesian well and used to bathe sick persons if the work is conducted in a proper manner so as to do no injury to any person which proper care would avoid. Barnard v. Shirley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568.

In that case the sickness was of the most infectious kind, so that its spread might, perhaps, not be prevented by the utmost care after the germs had gotten into the stream.

A second trial of that case, however, developed a state of facts which made the case much less startling than it was on the first trial. It seems that the stream was so badly polluted before receiving defendant's contribution as to be unfit for general use. BARNARD V. SHIRLEY. This fact will not, as a rule, defeat the action; but it would seem to furnish more reason for denying relief against a single defendant than though he alone rendered the water unfit for use.

Sewage pollution.

The general rule is that sewage cannot be cast into the stream to such an extent as to pollute it.

Sewage cannot be thrown into the stream in such a way as to render the water foul and unfit for use. Goldamid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. 12 Jur. N. S. 308, L. R. 1 Ch. 349, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 382, 14 L. T. N. S. 154, 14 Week. Rep. 562; Bidder v. Croydon Local Bd. of Health, 6 L. T. N. S. 778; Peterson v. Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 587.

A city will be liable for polluting a stream with sewage in such a way as to spoil the water supply of a proprietor lower down the stream. Good v. Altoona, 162 Pa. 493.

41 L. R. A.

A municipal corporation cannot collect sewage and cast it into a stream of water so as to destroy its purity. Butler v. Edgewater, 25 N. Y. S. R. 815.

A city may be liable for injury done by the pollution of a watercourse by the emptying of its sewage therein. Valparaiso v. Moffitt, 12 Ind. App. 256.

There can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream by the discharge of sewage in such manner as to be injurious to public health. Blackburne v. Somers, Jr. L. R. 5 Eq. 1.

If the statute does not permit the opening of new sewers into a river the town will not be permitted to do so. Holt v. Rochdale, L. R. 10 Eq. 354, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 761, 23 L. T. N. S. 43, 18 Week. Rep. 885.

Where a town seeks to turn its sewage into a stream the court will protect private rights if affected in any material degree, but will have regard to the nature and extent of the injury and to the balance of inconvenience. Lillywhite v. Trimmer, 38 L. J. Ch. N. S. 530, 16 L. T. N. S. 318, 15 Week. Rep. 763.

Unless authorized by the legislature a municipal corporation cannot turn sewage into a stream to such an extent as to drive the fish out of it, and to prevent cattle of the lower riparian proprietor from drinking it. Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528.

The English statute provides that boards of health shall not interfere with any watercourse unless the persons interested shall give consent, and without such consent the board cannot turn the sewage from a town into a private stream. Atty. Gen. v. Luton Local Bd. of Health, 3 Jur. N. S. 190.

In Oldaker v. Hunt, 19 Beav. 485, it was held that the statute did not permit sewage to be cast into the river.

And that case was affirmed in 6 De G. M. & G. 388, 1 Jur. N. S. 578.

No person is entitled on the ground of ancient custom or privilege to collect a mass of sewage matter and pour it at one point into a stream in such a quantity that the river cannot dilute it on its passage down to the lower riparian proprietors, as the effect of such an act is to create an evil which must be illegal, being such as no custom can authorize. Atty. Gen. v. Richmond, L. R. 2 Eq. 806, 12 Jur. N. S. 544, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 507, 14 Week. Rep. 686, 14 L. T. N. S. 398.

A municipal corporation cannot cast its sewage into a stream in such a manner as to pollute the pond of a lower riparian proprietor which he uses for domestic purposes, the propagation of fish, and the supply of ice. Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L. R. A. 296.

But there will be no nuisance in turning sewage into a stream if at the place where the com-once to erect and operate a bath house, with the necessary bath tubs, engines, boilers, and plumbing. That such was the effect of drinking the waters of said well, hot or cold, and bathing in the same, in restoring and giving relief to the afflicted, during its first year of operation, that during the ensuing season the bath house was enlarged, larger boiler and engine procured, number of tubs increased, and facilities for baths to suit all maladies added, so that 500 baths each day can be taken, and at times that number and more have been given. That these improvements, under the strictest economy consistent with the procurement of good work and material, have cost in excess of $10,000. That the great relief and permanent cures of many hundreds of persons and patients from all parts of Indiana, and adjoining and more distant states, of rheumatic affections, neuralgia, kidney affections, all manner of eruptions and other skin diseases, indigestion and other stomach troubles, ulcerous affections, spinal diseases, and everything resulting from impurity of blood, dropsy, malarial and syphilitic affections, attest the medicinal value of said waters when properly used. That the number of persons affected by the above-named diseases that have been and are bathed at said sanitarium average from 50 to 500 per day during the spring, summer, and fall seasons. That there is required and used about one barrel of water for each of said baths. That the net receipts of defendants from operating said sanitarium, or from rent-plaining town takes its water supply from the stream the pollution is imperceptible. Atty. Gen. v. Cockermouth Local Board, L. R. 18 Eq. 172.

A city may be enjoined from emptying sewage into a stream. Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, affirming Hayes v. Dwight, 49 Ill. App. 530; Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21.

In Spokes v. Banbury Local Bd. of Health, L. R. 1 Eq. 42, the court, in speaking of the discharge of sewage into a river, asks, What difference can it possibly make as to the commission of an illegal act, whether a man acts on behalf of thousands or on behalf of himself alone?

A city cannot, without direct legislative authority, pollute a stream with its sewage to the injury of lower proprietors. And it cannot be done by legislative authority without making compensation to the injured riparian owners. Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668.

A stream cannot be used to carry off the sewage of a public institution unless the right is acquired by condemnation under the right of eminent domain. Atty. Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, L. R. 4 Ch. 146, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 265, 17 Week. Rep. 240, 19 L. T. N. S. 708.

The court says in Bainard v. Newton, 154 Mass. 255, that the use of lands for streets will not exceed the rights of the upper proprietor, so that surface drainage into the stream will not be unlawful.

The Massachusetts decisions are affected by the peculiar doctrine of that state in reference to municipal corporations.

In Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 889, the court, in discussing the liability of a city for creating a nuisance by throwing its sewage into a stream, states that it cannot be supposed that the legislature in giving the right to use the stream intended to authorize the commission of the nuisance unless it was absolutely necessary, and that it would be liable if it was negligent in the manner of constructing the works, or in failing to purify the sewage before it entered the stream. And the same general principle is found in Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592, and in Washburn & Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458.

In the Merrifield Case it was decided that a municipal corporation is not liable for casting sewage into the stream by a properly constructed system of sewerage unless it is made so by statute. 110 Mass. 221. The court says that for loss occasioned to individuals by the quasi judicial action of the proper authorities of the city in laying out sewers; or for the construction of the work in a proper and successful manner; or for their maintenance and use in a proper manner, no action of tort can be maintained against the city.

Indiana seems to have a rule of its own.

In Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, the court followed the doctrine of Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, and held that a municipal corporation was not liable for the injuries caused by casting its sewage into a stream, saying that, such action being lawful in itself, not capable of being carried on elsewhere than it was, the lower proprietor must bear the loss which results, his interest giving way to the public good, if the sewers were properly built and due care exercised to give as little annoyance as possible.

V. Right to relief.

The forms of relief are quite varied. Removal of the obstruction may in some cases be permitted.

The upper proprietor may enter upon the land of the lower proprietor and remove the nuisance. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Goodale, 46 N. H. 53.

The upper proprietor may enter upon the land of the lower proprietor and remove enough of the latter's dam to let the water run off from his property. Heath v. Williams, 25 Me. 209, 43 Am. Dec. 265.

If a riparian owner has been deprived of water which ought to flow in the stream, by the construction of a ditch by a highway commissioner, he may dam up the ditch and restore the water to the stream. McCord v. High, 24 Iowa, 342.

The lower owner has a right to remove an embankment which cuts off the flow of the water from his land. Overton v. Sawyer, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 308, 62 Am. Dec. 170.

The owner of an ancient mill may lawfully enter the close of another and remove a dam erected therein by which the water of the stream below the mill is made to flow back and interfere with the mill wheel. Hodges v. Raymond, 9 Mass. 316.

The flowage of land may be remedied by entering upon the lower land and removing the dam. Winchell v. Clark, 68 Mich. 64.

If a milldam is erected so as to flow the water back on the upper proprietor under circumstances which might justify the upper proprietor in abating it, he must confine his acts to the dam itself and remove only such portions as cause the injury. Moffett v. Brewer, 1 G. Greene, 348.

An upper proprietor will not be liable for cutting a ditch on his own land to drain a pond raised by a dam on the land of the lower proprietor if the ditch would not have interfered with the flow of the water had the stream remained ing the same, are of the value of $150 per month. A public fountain is kept flowing and in order for the use and benefit of the public, and this is used continuously, day and night, by all the citizens of Martinsville, or nearly so, at their pleasure, and by hundreds of passers-by on trains or in private conveyances, free of cost. That, in constructing said bath house and providing the necessary drainage therefrom, defendants laid a tile ditch of 4-inch tile from said bath house, in a southwesterly direction, across the said lots and pasture of said Hastings, to said branch, from 2 to 4 feet under the surface. That all syphilitic patients who are treated at said sanitarium who have any eruptions are now, and have been since the former trial and judgment, confined to the use of a special room and tub, and the waters from said tub are, and have been since said date, so piped as that they cannot enter said tile, or flow to said branch, but enter the privy sink, which is cleansed as often as each three months. That said tile is of the usual clay and porous character, and is laid part of the way through sandy and gravelly soil. That said water and the ingredients of it contain well-known germicides, to which properties its curative qualities are attributable, mainly. That said waters are healthful, and in the natural state good for live stock of all kinds, and such stock will use no other after using it, if they get to it.

That said water, when exposed to the air, both before and after being used in baths, yields in its natural state. Bearse v. Perry, 117 Mass. 211.

But upper riparian owners upon whose land water is backed by a dam of the lower proprietor have no right to divert the water from the stream by means of a ditch, and carry it upon the land of the lower proprietor for the purpose of removing the injury. Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 731.

The upper owner cannot tap the pond which has been thrown back upon his land by the lower owner for the purpose of securing water to assist in running his machinery. Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. L. 400.

The lower proprietor will not be permitted to construct a dam across a stream for the purpose of holding back surface water which the upper proprietor has thrown into the stream. McCormick v. Horan, 81 N. Y. 86, 37 Am. Rep. 479.

The lower owner cannot construct dams for the purpose of stopping the flow of water in a stream merely because the upper owner has cut ditches for the purpose of draining the water on his land into the stream. Hooper v. Wilkinson, 15 La. Ann. 497, 77 Am. Dec. 194.

The right of a riparian proprietor to enter upon the land of another to abate the nuisance of diversion exists only against the wrongdoer, and he has no right to enter upon or flow the land of an innocent person for the purpose of regaining the use of the diverted stream. Agawam Canal Co. v. Edwards, 36 Conn. 476.

If the statute in giving a municipal corporation power to impair a stream provides a method of assessing damages, that method is exclusive and an action at law cannot be maintained for the injury. Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 149 Mass. 44.

What will give right of action.

There has been considerable disagreement as to what was necessary to give a right of action. Some of the earlier cases held that interference with an actual use was necessary, but subsequent cases have held that interference with the right was sufficient whether any use was made of it or not.

In Williams v. Morland, 2 Barn. & C. 910, 4 Dowl. & R. 583, the court said that the lower proprietor cannot recover damages for the diversion of water unless he has appropriated it to his use so that his use is injured by the act of the upper proprietor. But it was decided that there could be no recovery for merely changing the flow of the stream so that it was not as clear, smooth, and moderate as before.

In Palmer v. Kebblethwaite, 1 Show. 64, Holt said: Suppose a watercourse runs to my ground and I have no use for it and one upon another ground diverts it before it comes to mine, will an action lie? And he intimates that it will not, although he states there will be further argument on the subject.

And in Palms v. Heblethwait, Skin. 65, it is stated that if the one from whom the stream was diverted owns the stream he need not show that his mills were ancient in order to be entitled to maintain the action.

An action cannot be sustained unless some injury has been inflicted. Omelvany v. Jaggers, 2 Hill, L. 634, 27 Am. Dec. 417.

In Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 190, the vice chancellor says that it appeared to him that no action would lie for diverting or turning back water except by a person who sustains an actual injury.

There must be proof of special damage to enjoin the throwing back of water by a dam. Garrett v. McKie, 1 Rich. L. 445, 44 Am. Dec. 263.

In order to maintain an action for raising the water by a dam to some small degree between the banks on the upper riparian proprietor's land there must be actual damage. The mere invasion of his right is not sufficient. Cooper v. Hall, 5 Ohio, 323; M'Elroy v. Goble, 6 Ohio St. 187.

If the lower proprietor is unable to show any actual damage he cannot maintain his action except for unreasonable and unauthorized diversion of the stream. Gillis v. Chase, 67 N. H. —, 31 Atl. 18.

So long as a reasonable use by the upper proprietor does no actual and perceptible damage to the lower proprietor no action will lie. Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Cush. 191, 57 Am. Dec. 85.

In Williams v. Morland, 4 Dowl. & R. 583, 2 Barn. & C. 910, it is said that if the lower proprietor has enough water flowing through his land to supply his land he cannot complain that the upper proprietor holds back a part of the flow of the stream.

However, a majority of the cases are the other way. In Glynne v. Nichols, 2 Show. 507, an action on the case was brought for diverting a watercourse, which was defended on the ground that the use to which it was applied was not stated. But Glynne v. Nicholas, Comb. 43, states that judgment was given for the plaintiff.

The lower owner is entitled to redress if, in case it is not given, the use by the upper proprietor will develop into an adverse right by prescription. Ware v. Allen, 140 Mass. 513. The court says that in the Elliot case no question was raised of encroachment upon the rights of plaintiff by which in time he might be entirely deprived of them.

If the sflowage will ripen into an adverse a considerable quantity of white and sometimes jellied white, sulphur, and magnesia, or other substance, which gathers about grass, weeds, or trash, and which gives the channel of the ditch an unclean, slimy, and repulsive appearance near and about the point where said tile drain enters the ditch, and extending not exceeding 80 or 40 feet from the mouth of said tile drain, but in no way poisonous or injurious to live stock or human beings; and said water, after being used in ordinary baths as used in defendants' bath house, and flowed through said tile drain to said branch, is not poisonous, or necessarily injurious to live stock. That said waters of said well are strongly impregnated with sulphureted hydrogen gas, which gives a strong sulphurous odor at said well at the public fountain, in the baths, and at the end of said tile where the same enters the branch, which odor is not unhealthful, but is strong and offensive to the senses, and sometimes becomes very offensive to persons living in the vicinity of said tile drain where it enters the said ditch. That said waters, after passing through said tile and parting with the white sulphur, magnesia, etc., as above described, if mixed with the sand and clay of the soil for some time, form a black mud, greasy and filthy in appearance, strongly impregnated with sulphur,—sometimes, in cases of acute pains, used in mud baths with much success,—which mud, when stirred up, gives out a strong, sulphurous odor, very unpleasant to the senses, but has nothing necessarily unhealthy about it. Such black

The mere fact that the injury suffered by the plaintiff is small will not prevent his recovery. Thompson v. Crocker, 9 Pick. 59.

One who constructs a grating across a water-course in such a way that it will be likely to accumulate rubbish and back the water upon an upper proprietor will be liable for the injuries in case it does so. Babbitt v. Safety Fund Nat. Bank, 169 Mass. 361.

The upper proprietor is entitled to nominal damages in case of the throwing back of water upon his land, although no actual injury is proved. Pastorius v. Fisher, 1 Rawle, 27.

The fact that the obstruction of the water does not become injurious to the upper proprietor until he changes his works is immaterial. Johnson v. Lewis, 18 Conn. 303, 33 Am. Dec. 405.

The mere throwing the water back in the channel upon the land of the upper proprietor although it does not overflow its bank, is actionable. Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 32 Am. Dec. 731.

Nominal damages may be recovered in case the water is diverted so as to materially diminish its flow, although there is no proof of actual damage. Stowell v. Lincoln, 11 Gray, 434.

If a person stops the current of a stream that has immemorially flowed in a given direction, and thereby prejudices another, he subjects himself to an action, although the use to which the injured person puts the stream is not immemorial. Saunders v. Newman, 1 Barn. & Ald. 258.

If the right of the lower owner is invaded he may maintain an action without proof of specific injury. Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 94, 64 Am. Dec. 355.

One entitled to use a stream of water may maintain an action for the partial diversion of it, although he is not at the time particularly injured. Harrop v. Hirst, L. R. 4 Exch. 43, 38 L. J. Exch. N. S. 1, 19 L. T. N. S. 426, 17 Week. Rep. 164.

A riparian owner has a right, irrespective of any actual damage sustained by him, to complain of an obstruction to the stream. Norbury v. Kitchin, 15 L. T. N. S. 501, 9 Jur. N. S. 132.

It is not necessary to show actual damage to the property of the plaintiff, but it is sufficient to show obstruction of his right. Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 590, 3 Jur. N. S. 243, 26 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148.

That the injury from the setting back of water by a dam is small will not prevent the maintenance of the action. Alexander v. Kerr, 2 Rawle, 83, 19 Am. Dec. 616; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 426.

If a considerable portion of the water is ob-right if not interrupted an action will lie, although the injury is small. Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 28 N. H. 455.

An invasion of the rights of the lower owner causing actual damage or calculated to found a claim which may ripen into an adverse right will entitle the person injured to relief. Young v. Bankier Distillery Co. [1893] A. C. 691.

Some injury must be caused to the lower owner to give him a right of action. But it is sufficient that in case the action is not brought a prescriptive right will be acquired by the other party. Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 Am. Dec. 789.

Nominal damages may be recovered in case of the wrongful diversion of water from a mill, although no actual injury is sustained. Munroe v. Stickney, 48 Me. 462.

Special damages need not be proved to support the action. Piumleigh v. Dawson, 6 Ill. 544, 41 Am. Dec. 199.

If the lower owner throws the water back upon a mill wheel of the upper proprietor the latter may maintain an action to protect his right, although the water is not thrown out of the banks and no perceptible damage is done. Hendrick v. Cook, 4 Ga. 241.

For an unreasonable use of the stream by an upper proprietor an action will lie in favor of a lower proprietor notwithstanding the latter has suffered no actual damage. New London Water Comrs. v. Perry, 69 Conn. 461.

If the water is diverted from the stream the lower owner may recover nominal damages, although he is not actually injured by the diversion. Butman v. Hussey, 12 Me. 407.

If the use which the upper owner makes of the stream is not a reasonable use, or if it causes a substantial and actual damage to the proprietor below by diminishing the value of his land, though at the time he has no mill or other work to sustain present damage the action may be maintained. Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Cush. 191, 57 Am. Dec. 85.

An interference with the right of the riparian owner to the flow of the water along his land to his injury is a wrong for which he is entitled to an appropriate remedy. Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. 26 Minn. 222, 37 Am. Rep. 399.

An injunction may issue to restrain the unlawful diversion of a stream, although the injury to the complaining party is incapable of ascertainment. Helbron v. Fowler Switch Canal Co. 75 Cal. 426.

A diversion of a large portion of the water renders the one making it liable, although the lower proprietor sustains no present actual damage. Newhall v. Ireson, 8 Cush. 595, 54 Am. Dec. 790.

41 L. R. A.

appearance only extends for a short distance below the mouth of the tile. That in the year 1893, in pursuance of a petition by defendants and others, and particularly at the instance of the city authorities of said city, such proceedings were had in the circuit court of Morgan county that a public ditch, under the drainage laws of Indiana, was established, beginning north of where the Pike street ditch intersects said branch, and following the course of said branch to the line between plaintiff and Satterwhite, and thence to the White river, to the depth of 2 feet and more; the plaintiff being made a party thereto, and assessed to aid in constructing the same. That defendants were assessed and paid benefits arising to their said lots by said ditch to the amount of $182.50, verted from the stream without any reasonable use for it the lower owner will be entitled to nominal damages. Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337.

In Adams v. Barney, 25 Vt. 225, which was a case of opposite proprietors, the court says it is not needful for one to appropriate the water of a stream to some special use before he can complain of its diversion by another.

Special damages for injuries to an unoccupied mill site cannot be recovered for diversion of water therefrom, although there may be a general recovery for interference with the flow of the stream. Clark v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 145 Pa. 438.

In Crown v. Wellsville Water Co. 3 N. Y. Supp. 177, where a water company had appropriated the water of a stream for its uses, it was held that so far as the water of the stream was required for the convenience and uses of the lower owner, he was entitled to be protected. But as to the surplus water over and above what is required for his convenience and use he has no cause of complaint, for in the appropriation of the excess he is not injured. There must not only be an appropriation of the water to entitle the party through whose premises the stream passes to make it the subject of complaint, but in addition to that he must be damaged or injured by the appropriation.

But in New York Rubber Co. v. Bothery, 132 N. Y. 293, which was a case of opposite proprietors, one of them drew the water from a dam higher up the stream, and discharged it below the complainant's land. The court held that there was a right to recover nominal damages if there was a material interference with the flow of the water, although the complaining party had not begun to make any use of the water.

The owner of land on the banks of a river may maintain an action to restrain the fouling of the stream without showing that the fouling is actually injurious to him. Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 2 Ch. 478, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 584, 15 Week. Rep. 801, Affirming L. R. 3 Eq. 296.

If there is an injury to a right an action will lie although actual perceptible damage is not shown. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 212, 15 Jur. 633.

Injury is shown by an averment that the hydraulic power of the water is destroyed or impaired to such a degree as to render it utterly insufficient and worthless for the use of the complainant. Cornling v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 30 Barb. 311.

If a dam causes the filling up of a stream with sand, and the raising of the water so as to leave the land on each side wet and unfit presumably because of their drainage thereto from their sanitarium aforesaid; and when said ditch was completed they were apportioned 500 feet of said ditch, to be by them kept in repair. That said city was assessed and paid for benefits arising from the drainage of a half dozen of her streets by said ditch the sum of $500, and was apportioned 1,000 feet thereof to be kept in repair by said city. That defendants, because of plaintiff's objection, attempted to run said waters into a sink dug on their said lot down through the soil, 12 feet square, to the gravel underbed, but the same failed to carry off or sink said water. That defendants' said lots do not at any place reach said branch and ditch, and are not nearer thereto than 800 feet. That for cultivation, the owner may recover for the injury. Athens Mfg. Co. v. Rucker, 80 Ga. 291.

But the lower proprietor has no ground for complaint for the diversion of water from the stream if he has not been deprived of any water accustomed to flow naturally to his land. Potter v. Burden, 38 Ala. 651.

The lower owner cannot interfere with the building by the upper owner of a structure in the bed of the stream if it does not sensibly and injuriously affect his rights. Norway Plains Co. v. Bradley, 52 N. H. 109.

It is not every injury to the lower proprietor that will confer a right of action; it is necessary to take into consideration the capacity of the stream, the adaptation of machinery to it, and all the attendant circumstances, and if, in view of all these, the lower proprietor is materially injured, he is entitled to redress. Dilling v. Murray, 6 Ind. 324.

In case of the diversion of a stream the law presumes that the lower owner has been injured. Hart v. Evans, 8 Pa. 22.

The law implies damages from flooding the ground of another though it be in the least possible degree and without actual prejudice. Alexander v. Kerr, cited in 1 Rawle, 28.

If a dam flows water back on the upper owner the law presumes damage, and no special damage need be shown in order to sustain an action. Woodman v. Tufts, 9 N. H. 88; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Goodale, 46 N. H. 53.

An interference with the right of the riparian owner to have the water flow through his land imports at least nominal damages. Creighton v. Evans, 53 Cal. 55.

If the lower proprietor can make use of the water only by means of dams which will flood the land of the proprietor above him, he cannot recover damages for a diversion of the water from the stream. Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337.

So, a lower proprietor has no right of action for diversion of the water of a stream if an intervening right of a proprietor above him deprives him of the use of water for the loss of which he brings suit. Olney v. Fenner, 2 R. I. 211, 57 Am. Dec. 711.

If the title to the bed of the river is in the public, the lower proprietor who has obtained no right from the public to build a dam cannot maintain an action for the diversion of the stream from his dam, but he may maintain an action for the diversion of the stream so as to cut off the right of access to the water. Fulmer v. Williams, 122 Pa. 191, 1 L. R. A. 603; Williams v. Fulmer, 151 Pa. 405.

The upper proprietor cannot interfere with the erection of a bridge by the lower proprietor on the ground that it may obstruct navigation within the last year plaintiff has sold to one Shireman 9 lots, 66 by 132 feet, at $100 to $125 per lot, bordering on said branch, and said Shireman has erected two, and is engaged in erecting and building a third dwelling house thereon, one of which is within 10 feet and over the mouth of defendants' tiledrain where it enters said branch, and also sold two lots near the same place, at $150 each, to a Mr. Reed, who has also erected thereon a commodious dwelling. All of said houses are, and have been for some time, occupied by families. Also, sold one Hubbard other lots in the same vicinity at $150 each. That similar lots at other points about the city can be bought, with the same or lower prices, equally as well situated, and surrounded with facilities for residences, and no complaint is made of any inconvenience on account of said waters by any of the purchasers of said lots. That the only other available drainage for said sanitarium waters would be a sewer to White river, 1 mile distant, and which could not, with any hope of success, be constructed and put in operation for less than $3,500 to $4,000, to which would have to be added the cost of the right of way, which right of way the owners of said land refuse to grant. That the water flowing from said sanitarium when baths were being taken to the usual extent and amount were found to be purer, and to be possessed of less organic and injurious matter, than the waters of said branch taken from above, and unaffected by said bath-house flowage. The flow-if it does not interfere with the navigation as it has been exercised in the stream. Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 839.

Mere nonuse does not forfeit right.

In one case it was held that the one who first erects a mill has a right to maintain it as against the proprietors above and below, although the effect is to prevent the full use of the stream by such proprietors for mill purposes. Cary v. Daniels, 8 Met. 468, 41 Am. Dec. 532.

But this right seems to be under the Massachusetts mill acts. Gould v. Boston Duck Co. 13 Gray, 442.

So, there is no right to use water for irrigation as against the right of the lower owner to use the water for a mill which has stood for forty years. Cook v. Hull, 3 Pick. 269, 15 Am. Dec. 208.

Although prescriptive right is not necessary to sustain an action for stopping a stream flowing to a mill. Sands v. Trefuses, Cro. Car. 575.

The mode in which the lower owner has been making use of the stream will be immaterial in case he wishes to make a new use of it with which the use by the upper proprietor will conflict. Buddington v. Bradley, 10 Conn. 213, 26 Am. Dec. 386.

The mere fact that the upper mill has gone to decay will not give the lower owner a right to throw the water back on its wheels. Hatch v. Dwight, 17 Mass. 289, 9 Am. Dec. 145.

The mere fact that expense has been incurred in procuring machinery to be used in connection with the milldam will not prevent the upper proprietor from objecting to the dam in case it floods his land. DeVaughn v. Minor, 77 Ga. 809.

Other wrongdoers.

The fact that others contributed to the fouling of the stream will be no defense to the one against whom suit is brought, if he was guilty of the offense. Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 2 Ch. 478, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 584, 15 Week. Rep. 801, Affirming L. R. 3 Eq. 296.

The fact that other proprietors beside defendant have polluted the stream, so that pollution by defendant is immaterial, will not prevent an action against him. Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748, 18 L. J. Exch. N. S. 305, 13 Jur. 472.

One person cannot justify the fouling of a stream by proving that it is fouled by other persons also. Blackburne v. Somers, Ir. L. R. 5 Eq. 1.

It will be no defense to a person unlawfully diverting water from a stream that others are doing likewise. Heilbron v. Kings River & F. Canal Co. 76 Cal. 11; Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal. 66.

41 L. R. A.

The mere fact that the water was polluted before it reached the upper proprietor will not justify him in adding to the pollution as against a lower proprietor. Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co. 77 Iowa, 576.

But in case several different parties discharge sewage into the stream at different places, acting separately and independently of each other, one is not liable for the damage done by all. Chipman v. Palmer, 77 N. Y. 51, 83 Am. Rep. 566.

Who may maintain action.

A person who owns only to the center of the stream, and has acquired no right to extend his dam to the opposite shore, which belongs to a lower millowner, cannot maintain an action against the latter for flowing back the water in the stream so as to interfere with his dam. Jewell v. Gardiner, 12 Mass. 311.

A reversloner may maintain an action for the throwing back of water upon his freehold by a dam, although there is no immediate and visible injury. Ripka v. Sergeant, 7 Watts & S. 11, 42 Am. Dec. 214.

A lower proprietor who adds to the pollution of the water before it reaches a point where he wishes to use it for domestic purposes will not be heard to complain of an upper proprietor who causes the pollution of the stream. Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co. 77 Iowa, 576.

It has been held that a riparian proprietor cannot grant any rights to a nonriparian proprietor to use the water of the stream, which will entitle the latter to maintain an action against an upper proprietor for pollution of the water. Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter, 3 Hurlst. & C. 300, 10 Jur. N. S. 1005, 10 L. T. N. S. 748.

Also that a person who is not a riparian proprietor, but who has acquired the right to use the water for propelling a mill, may maintain an action in case a lower proprietor backs the water upon his tail-race. Bristol Hydraulic Co. v. Boyer, 67 Ind. 236.

But the mere fact that a riparian owner has obtained the right from the owner above him to take the water from the stream on his land and conduct it by a race to his mill, will not prevent him from maintaining an action as a riparian owner against a proprietor higher up the stream for the wrongful diversion of the water. Nuttall v. Bracewell, L. R. 2 Exch. 1, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 1, 12 Jur. N. S. 989, 15 L. T. N. S. 313, 4 Hurlst. & C. 714.

Refusal of relief.

Relief is sometimes refused because not sought in proper form.

Equity will not interfere to prevent the backing of water by a milldam upon a mill right until the right has been established at age of said waters in said branch as aforesaid rendered the lands of plaintiff in the immediate vicinity somewhat less desirable for residence, and somewhat injuriously affected the value of their use and occupation. The plaintiff, believing said water impure and unfit for stock to drink, erected a fence upon her land to shut her stock off from said waters, at a small cost, and was in consequence deprived of the use of the portion of said tract lying south of the ditch for pasturage purposes, to her damage in the sum of $50.

The conclusions of law stated on these facts are that the law is with the plaintiff; that she is entitled to an order and judgment restraining and enjoining the defendants from causing or permitting the water from their bath house which shall have been used in bathing and cleansing persons afflicted with infectious, syphilitic, or other similar disorders to flow, by means of a tile drain or otherwise, into the branch or stream in question, or upon or over the lands of the plaintiff, and that she be entitled to recover the sum of $50 as her damages.

The principles laid down, exemplified, and elucidated in the opinion when this case was in this court before more than warrant us in adjudging that the court erred in its conclusions of law. We need not repeat what was then said, but refer to it as the law of this case. The finding seems somewhat contradictory as to whether appellee has suffered any injury whatever, and therefore it is self-destructive common law. Porter v. Witham, 17 Me. 292.

Although it has been held that the fact that the complainant has not established his right at law is no ground for demurrer to the bill. Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 77 Me. 297, 52 Am. Rep. 763.

Relief has also been refused where it would have been inequitable.

Injunction will not be issued for trivial injury. Shreve v. Voorhees, 3 N. J. Eq. 25.

An injunction will not issue to enable the lower proprietor to establish his right to nominal damages. Myers & E. Co. v. Philadelphia, J. & C. Pass. R. Co. 12 Mont. Co. L. Rep. 46.

The lower proprietor is not entitled to an injunction unless the flow to his land has been appreciably, or at least perceptibly, diminished by the diversion above. Moore v. Clear Lake Waterworks, 68 Cal. 146.

In Walton v. Mills, 86 N. C. 290, continuance of an injunction until settlement of the rights at law was refused to prevent the upper proprietor from abstracting water from the stream for use in washing ore at the suit of one who desired to make a similar use of the water lower down the stream, where it appeared that plaintiff was not making any present use of the water, and might be compensated in damages in case the right of the upper owner was sustained, while the upper owner's loss would be irreparable in case he was compelled to fill up his trenches and cease using the water.

Although an upper riparian owner has no right to divert water and not return it before it reaches the land of the lower owner in case it is necessary to do so to run his mill, and it can be used by the lower owner for his mill with equal advantage when taken from the tail-race as when taken from the channel of the river itself, a court of equity may refuse to enjoin the diversion of the water, and leave the parties to their remedy at law. Mason v. Cotton, 4 Fed. Rep. 792, 2 McCrary, 82.

An injunction will not be granted, although the plaintiff has established his right at law, if the injunction, because of the changed surroundings, will not restore the stream to a condition in which the plaintiff can use it, while it will destroy the business of defendant. Wood v. Sutcliffe, 2 Sln. N. S. 166, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 253, 16 Jur. 75.

An injunction will not be issued where it appears that the effect to defendant will be to stop his works while the plaintiff is not seriously injured by the pollution of the stream. Elmhirst v. Spencer, 2 Macn. & G. 45.

A water company cannot enjoin the reasonable use of the stream by the owner of a saw-mill further up the stream for the mere purpose of making the water of the stream more fit for its use. People, Ricks Water Co. v. Elk River Mill & Lumber Co. 107 Cal. 221.

A lower riparian proprietor is not entitled to an injunction against the diversion by an upper riparian owner of the water from the stream if it does not appear that his right to have the water flow through his land is injured by any material diminution of the flow of the stream through his lands. Loud Gold Min. Co. v. Blake, 24 Fed. Rep. 240.

Although in a New York case it was held that the mere fact that the restoration of the stream will be of great damage to the defendant and of but slight advantage to the plaintiff will not prevent the court from compelling it. Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191.

The court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the casting of sewage into a river if the injury to the plaintiff is slight, and that to the defendant will be great from the injunction. Lillywhite v. Trimmer, 16 L. T. N. S. 318, 15 Week. Rep. 763, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 525.

The casting of sewage into the stream will not be enjoined if it occasions no, or only slight, injury to the complaining party. Atty. Gen. v. Gee, L. R. 10 Eq. 131, 23 L. T. N. S. 290.

A water company cannot be enjoined from taking water from a stream in favor of a railroad company asserting its right to take water for its engines under its right as a riparian owner. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pottsville Water Co. 132 Pa. 418.

The upper proprietor will not be required to tear down a manufactory built over the water-course if he has provided a drain to carry the water, but the lower proprietor will be left to his action at law for the temporary stoppage of the flow. Edleston v. Crossley, 18 L. T. N. S. 15.

Extent of recovery.

Where a millowner has only the right of using a reservoir and dam he can recover in case a lower riparian owner erects a dam which interferes with his, only for the injury to his easement. Robertson v. Woodworth, 42 Conn. 163.

Right against continuer of wrong.

The one who continues the dam is as much liable as the one who erects it. Cobb v. Smith, 35 Wis. 21.

But a request must be made upon one who merely continues the obstruction for its removal before an action will lie. Johnson v. Lewis, 13 Conn. 303, 33 Am. Dec. 405.

One who acquires title from the builder of the dam will be liable for the injury done by its continuance after notice and request to abate it. Pillsbury v. Moore, 44 Me. 154, 69 Am. Dec. 91.

H. P. F.

as to that matter. At all events, the statement of the harmlessness of the waters, and the price that appellee has been able to sell her lands for as compared with other land similar in character in said city, neutralizes the statement that she is damaged; but if she was damaged, as held in the former opinion, it is damnum absque injuria, because the rightful use of one's own land may cause damage to another without any legal wrong.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to restate the conclusions of law in favor of the defendants, and render judgment for the defendants thereon.

Jordan, J., was absent, and took no part in this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

Charles COX, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Alabama.

(.....Ala.....)

Cohabitation with a bigamous wife in violation of Crim. Code 1896, § 4406, continues while the parties live together ostensibly as husband and wife, presenting to the community the appearance of the open and demoralizing example of living in an illicit relation, although in fact such relations have ceased because of the wife's physical incapacity.

(June 16, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County convicting him of cohabiting with a second wife while his first wife was still living. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Tally & Proctor, for appellant: Sexual intercourse is an essential element of the offense charged, and is implied by the use of the word "cohabit."

It is adulterous cohabitation to which the statute refers.

Beggs v. State, 55 Ala. 108; Ashley v. State, 109 Ala. 48; Sullivan v. State, 82 Ark. 187; State v. Gartrell, 14 Ind. 280; Taylor v. State, 86 Ark. 84; 19 Cent. L. J. 142; Burns v. Burns, 60 Ind. 259; Com. v. Munson, 127 Mass. 459, 34 Am. Rep. 411; Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. ed. 561; Dunn v. Dunn, 4 Paige, 425.

Mr. William C. Fitts, Attorney General, for the State.

Brickell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictment is founded on the last clause of § 4406 of the Criminal Code of 1896, which in its entirety reads: "If any person having a former husband or wife living marries another, or continues to cohabit with such second husband or wife in this state, he or she must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than two, nor more than five, years." The statute was originally enacted as part of the Penal Code of 1841 (Clay's Dig. p. 432, §§ 4, 5), and, with changes of verbiage and structure not affecting its construction, has been incorporated in all subsequent revisions or codifications of the statute (Code 1853; §§ 8233, 8238; Rev. Code 1867, §§ 3599, 3600, Code 1876, §§ 4185, 4186; Crim. Code 1896, §§ 4016, 4017). In Beggs v. State, 55 Ala. 108-110, the first case in which it became necessary to construe the statute, it was said: "When this statute is read in connection with the common law existing at the time of its enactment, it is apparent two offenses are thereby created; or, rather, the common-law offense of bigamy is declared, and the punishment which must follow conviction defined, and a statutory offense, the continuance of cohabitation under the vicious marriage, making bigamy, punishable as the latter offense, is created. The offense of bigamy remains, indictable and punishable at the place of its commission. If the second marriage was in this state, the county of its commission is the only place in which an indictment for the offense will lie. As to this offense, the common law is not changed. Necessity for a change is obviated by the creation of the new offense,—the cohabitation under the second marriage. If the marriage was in another state, and the cohabitation in this state, the wrong done here is the evil example of persons living together as husband and wife, who do not in fact and in law sustain that relation,—the open continuance of an adulterous connection."

The evidence without conflict shows that the defendant, having a wife living, he and she being residents of the county of Jackson, in this state, married Martha Hughes, in the state of Tennessee, subsequently living with her as his wife in the county of Jackson, then removing to the state of Tennessee, and there living with her as his wife. About five weeks before the finding of the indictment, they returned to the county of Jackson, lived together as man and wife under the same roof, occupied the same bed, acknowledging each other as husband and wife, and in all respects so conducted themselves in the presence of the community. The defendant introduced evidence tending to show that, six or seven years prior to the trial, said Martha, by reason of a serious surgical operation to which she had been compelled to submit, was incapacitated from sexual intercourse, and since the operation he had not had sexual intercourse with her, and for more than three years had not had such intercourse with her in the county of Jackson. Upon this phase of the evidence, the defendant requested several instructions, basing the right to an acquittal upon the proposition that continuous sexual intercourse is an indicapenable element of the statutory offense. We do not doubt that sexual intercourse is a necessary ingredient of the statutory offense. From its original enactment, through all subsequent revisions or codifications of the statute, the statute has been associated with other statutes creating or declaratory of offenses of which such intercourse is the essential, criminalizing element. Originally, it was associated with the statute denouncing the offense of a man and woman living together in adultery or fornication, and the statute defining incest, and fixing its punishment. Clay's Dig. pp. 429, 430, §§ 2-6. Without now tracing the statute through subsequent revisions or codifications, it will be found in the Criminal Code of 1886 (§§ 4012-4019), associated with the statutes in relation to incest, living in adultery or fornication, seduction, and miscegenation. Apart from the association of the statute with other statutes, the terms of the statute, "continues to cohabit with such second husband or wife," imply or involve sexual intercourse. The word "cohabit," and its derivative, "cohabitation," are words of large signification. "Cohabit," in its general sense, is defined in the Century Dictionary: "To dwell together; inhabit or reside in company, or in the same place or country." And a specific definition is: "To dwell or live together as husband and wife; often with reference to persons not legally married, and usually, but not always, implying sexual intercourse." There is a corresponding definition of "cohabitation." In Bouvier, Law Dict. (Rawle's ed.), "cohabit" is defined, "To live together in the same house, claiming to be married;" and, when used without reference to the relation of the parties as husband and wife, the definition is, "To live together in the same house." Mr. Bishop's definition of "cohabitation" is: "To cohabit is to dwell together." Matrimonial cohabitation is the living together of a man and woman ostensibly as husband and wife." 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 777. And from such cohabitation, he adds, "the carnal act is presumed." 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 628.

NOTE.—For presumptions in cases analogous to the above, see also Goss v. Froman (Ky.) 8 L. R. A. 102; Woodward v. Blue (N. C.) 10 L. R. A. 662, 41 L. R. A.

It is one proposition to assert that sexual intercourse is a necessary element of the statutory offense, and quite another to assert that it must be continuous,—that it must attend the whole period of time during which the parties live together ostensibly as husband and wife. The question was very fully discussed and considered in Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. ed. 561. The 3d section of the act of Congress for the suppression of polygamy reads: "That if any male person, in a territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. 22 Stat. at L. 31, chap. 47, § 3. Cannon was indicted for a violation of this act, and sought to defend upon the ground that he did not have sexual intercourse with the woman with whom he was dwelling, after the enactment of the act. The court said: "The principal question argued at the bar was the proper construction of § 3 of the act of 1882. That question depends on the meaning of the word 'cohabit,' in the section. The meaning contended for by the defendant is indicated by his offer to show by Clara C. Cannon nonaccess, and facts to rebut the presumption of sexual intercourse with her, and the actual absence of such intercourse; and by requests for instructions to the jury, which are based on the view that the word 'cohabit' necessarily implies the idea of having sexual intercourse. But we are of opinion that this is not the proper interpretation of the statute, and that the court properly charged the jury that the defendant was to be found guilty if he lived in the same house with the two women and ate at their respective tables one third of his time or thereabouts; and held them out to the world, by his language or conduct, or both, as his wives; and that it was not necessary it should be shown that he and the two women, or either of them, occupied the same bed or slept in the same room, or that he had sexual intercourse with either of them. . . . It is the practice of unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman that is aimed at,—a cohabitation classed with polygamy, and having its outward semblance. It is not, on the one hand, meretricious, unmarried intercourse with more than one woman. General legislation as to lewd practices is left to the territorial government. Nor, on the other hand, does the statute pry into the intimacies of the marriage relation. But it seeks, not only to punish bigamy and polygamy when direct proof of the existence of these relations can be made, but to prevent a man from flaunting in the face of the world the ostentation and opportunities of a bigamous household, with all the outward appearances of the continuance of the same relations which existed before the act was passed, and without reference to what may occur in the privacy of those relations. Compacts for sexual nonintercourse, easily made and as easily broken, when the prior marriage relations continue to exist, with the occupation of the same house and table and the keeping of the same family unity, is not a lawful substitute for the monogamous family, which alone the statute tolerates."

By the bigamous marriage in Tennessee, sexual intercourse was contemplated and followed in this state, and in the county of Jackson originally. It is true that, prior to the finding of the indictment, the statute of limitations had operated as a bar to a prosecution for the original vicious cohabitation. But the parties returned to this state, living under the same roof, acknowledging each other as husband and wife, and presenting to the community every indicia of that relation. The carnal act may not have been committed. That was prevented by the incapacity of the woman, not by the desire or intent of the parties to abstain from it. If capacity had been restored, it would have been resumed. The incapacity, so far as may be inferred from the evidence, was a fact known only to the parties. It was not known in the community in which they were dwelling together. Cases may possibly occur in which parties may abandon cohabitation,—a living together ostensibly as husband and wife; as parties may abandon living together in adultery or fornication, and they may continue under the same roof. But in such cases, to relieve from criminality there must be such external evidence of the abandonment as will neutralize the appearance to the community of the open and demoralizing example of living in an illicit relation. The law intends to preserve and promote the institution of marriage, to prohibit pretenses or false assumptions of its existence, and to prevent the public scandal and disgrace following the living in that ostensible relation.

There was no error in the refusal of the instructions requested by the defendant, and the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Albert MEYER, Respt.,

v.

City of SAN DIEGO et al., Respts.

R. NICCOLLS et al., Interveners, Appts.,

Consolidated with

SAN DIEGO WATER COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

City of SAN DIEGO et al., Respts.

(.....Cal.....)

A judge who owns real estate in a city, that is taxable for the city's bonded indebtedness, is disqualified to sit in a suit to contest the validity of a contract which will involve the creation of a bonded debt of the city to a large amount, necessitating a special tax for forty years that will directly affect the value of all real property subject to it.

(Van Fleet and Harrison, JJ., dissent.)

(May 31, 1898.)

APPEAL by interveners from an order of the Superior Court for San Diego County denying a motion for change of venue because of the disqualification of the judge before whom the action was pending. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. L. Boone, for appellants:

This action is prosecuted by taxpayers of the city, on their own behalf and on behalf of all the taxpayers thereof. Though not named, all of said judges are in reality parties to the suit.

Code Civ. Proc. § 883.

Each one of said judges could have brought the action, and each of them had the same right to intervene as had the present interveners.

1 Freeman, Judgm. § 178; 2 Black, Judgm. § 584; Gibson v. Trinity County Supers. 80 Cal. 366.

Under a statute permitting any "interested" party to appear before a board of equalization and have redress against an unjust valuation, it was held that any taxpayer was "interested" in the proceedings.

Dundas Mort. Trust Invest. Co. v. Charlton, 32 Fed. Rep. 193; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353.

The interest of Judge Torrance is not merely in the questions of law involved in the controversy, nor is it uncertain or remote, but is a direct and immediate interest in the result of the action.

It is such an interest which disqualifies.

Code Civ. Proc. § 170; North Bloomfield

NORM.—As to disqualification of a judge for interest or relationship, see Ex parte Harris (Fla.) 6 L. R. A. 718; Ex parte Alabama State Bar Assn. 41 L. R. A.

Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 323; Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520.

The most minute interest is sufficient to disqualify unless the objection be removed by some positive provision of law to that effect.

Clark v. Lamb, 2 Allen, 396; Internal Improvement Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 280; Baldwin v. McArthur, 17 Barb. 414.

At common law citizens of a municipality who were taxpayers were incompetent to sit as judges in cases where their municipality was a party.

London v. Wood, 12 Mod. 669; Hesketh v. Braddock, 8 Burr. 1847; Peck v. Essex County Freeholders, 21 N. J. L. 656; Tolland v. Berkshire County Comrs. 13 Gray, 18; Clark v. Lamb, 2 Allen, 396; Wood v. Stoddard, 2 Johns. 194.

Two cases decided by the Texas court hold that the interest of a judge as a taxpayer disqualifies him, under a law substantially the same as ours, from sitting in a case involving the validity of the bonds of a municipality.

Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520; Wetzel v. State, Holland, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 17. See also Pearce v. Atwood, 18 Mass. 324; State v. Cisco (Tex. Civ. App.) 83 S. W. 244; Heilbron v. Campbell (Cal.) 23 Pac. 122; North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315.

Messrs. Works & Works and Trippet & Neale for H. I. Capron and San Diego Water Co.

Messrs. Gibson & Titus for Southern California Mountain Water Co.

Mr. William H. Fuller for plaintiff.

Messrs. H. E. Doolittle and T. L. Lewis for city of San Diego.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff instituted an action against the city of San Diego, and against the Southern California Mountain Water Company, for the twofold purpose, (1) of setting aside as illegal and void a contract between the city and the water company defendant, involving an expenditure of $1,500,000 of the moneys of the city to be obtained by the sale of its bonds; and (2) to enjoin the issuance and sale of the bonds to carry out the contract.

The bond issued had been voted at a special election called under an ordinance submitting to the electors the proposition of incurring a bonded debt of $1,500,000 "for the acquisition by said city, for the use of said city and of its inhabitants, of and from the Southern California Mountain Water Company, of a water right, reservoir sites, a meter-house site, and rights of way, and for the construction by said city of waterworks for the use of said city and its inhabitants." The controlling acts under which the election was held and the bonds voted are the statutes relating to the issuance of municipal bonds for public improvements. Stat. 1889, p. 399, Stat. 1891, p. 132; and Stat. 1893, p. 61. These acts prescribe, not only the mode by which such indebtedness may be incurred, but ordain as well the limit of indebtedness, the character of the bonds, the rate of interest, and the place of payment. They also enjoin upon the municipal authorities the duty of levying and collecting a special annual tax sufficient to pay interest, and provide a sinking fund for the ultimate redemption of the bonds.

(Ala.) 12 L. R. A. 134; and State, Colcord v. Young (Fla.) 19 L. R. A. 696.

Plaintiff is a taxpayer of the city. Other taxpayers were allowed to intervene in the cause. The San Diego Water Company had instituted a similar suit against these defendants, and the actions were consolidated.

Before the trial there was presented a motion for a change of venue, upon the ground of the disqualification of Judge Torrance in whose department the action was pending. Grounds identical with those urged as disqualifying Judge Torrance were asserted to exist in the case of the other judges of the superior court of the county. The affidavits used at the hearing show that the judge was the owner of real property situated and taxed in the city of San Diego for municipal purposes, and taxable for the payment of a bonded indebtedness such as that the validity of which is a question in the case. It also was made to appear that the issuance of the bonds in controversy and the carrying out of the contract between the city and the defendant water company would necessitate a special tax for forty years, and directly affect the value of all real property subject to it. Upon the other hand, a determination that the contract and proceedings were illegal would result in a decree enjoining the issuance of the bonds, and relieve all property within the municipality from the burden of the bond-redemption tax. The trial judge concluded that he was not disqualified, refused to grant the motion, and retained the action. From this ruling and order the San Diego Water Company and certain interveners prosecute their appeals.

By § 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that no justice, judge, or justice of the peace shall sit or act in any action or proceeding to which he is a party or in which he is interested. This is but an expression of the ancient maxim that no man ought to be a judge in his own cause,—a maxim which appeals so strongly to the sense of justice that it is said by Lord Coke to be a natural right, so inflexible that an act of Parliament seeking to subvert it would be declared void. Co. Litt. § 212. It is a principle which finds expression in the Constitutions of many of our states; which declare the right of a citizen to be tried by judges as free and impartial as the lot of humanity will permit. It is a principle whose strict observance is dictated both by natural justice and an enlightened public policy; for it is not enough that a judicial decision be sound. It is of next importance that the tribunal rendering it be free from the charge of interest or the taint of partiality, else public confidence will be destroyed and judicial usefulness gravely impaired.

But what is the "interest" which will disqualify? for it is manifest that just bounds must be set to the meaning of the word, since, if a judge be not disqualified, it is as much his duty to retain the action as it is to remove it when the recusal is well founded. Heinlen v. Heilbron, 97 Cal. 101.

In the oft quoted case of Hesketh v. Brad-dock, 8 Burr. 1856, the interest imputed to the jurors, and to the officer who returned them, rested upon the fact that they were members of the municipal corporation which was seeking to recover a penalty due. The whole penalty was but £5, yet the proceeding was quashed by the court of King's bench, Lord Mansfield saying: "The law has so watchful an eye to the pure and unbiased administration of justice that it will never trust the passions of mankind in the decision of any matter of right. . . . There is no principle in the law more settled than this,—that any degree, even the smallest degree of interest in the question depending, is a decisive objection to a witness, and much more to a juror, or to the officer by whom the jury is returned. . . . If, therefore, the sheriff, a juror, or a witness be in any sort interested in the matter to be tried, the law considers him as under an influence which may warp his integrity, or pervert his judgment, and therefore will not trust him. The minuteness of the interest won't relax the objection, for the degrees . . . cannot be measured. No line can be drawn but that of a total exclusion of all degrees whatsoever." But this, it should be noted, is rather a declaration of the principle than a definition of the disqualifying interest; and while in terms this case does not include the judge as coming within the principle of disqualification, it is not to be doubted that it applies with equal strength, and with more reason, to such an officer. Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 63. The disability of a witness to testify because of interest induced great hardship, and led to many absurdities. Thus, one was not debarred from being a witness if it was determined that his interest was equally balanced, nor was the heir apparent to an estate incompetent to testify in support of the claim of his ancestor, though his expectation of inheriting might be immediate and well-nigh certain. Again, the interest of a parent in a child, or of the child in the parent, was not a disqualifying interest, but only such as to affect the credibility of the witness. The injustice and hardship of the rule as to witnesses soon became so apparent that by statute it was entirely abrogated, and now no interest disqualifies a witness, its sole effect being to impair his credit.

In the case of jurors, however, who are judges of the fact, and of the magistrates, judges, and justices, who are judges of the law, and frequently both of the law and facts, there has been far less relaxation of the principle; and this, if for no other reason, because the courts themselves, in their desire to preserve the administration of justice free from the taint of unfairness, have inclined to a strict enforcement of the principle, and also because there are well-defined limits to the power of the legislature, should it ever seek to overthrow so salutary a rule. Thus, in North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315, this court, citing § 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declares that the provision should not receive a technical or strict construction, but rather one that is broad and liberal; and quotes with approval the language of the supreme court of Michigan in Stockwell v. White Lake Twp. Board, 23 Mich. 350, to the following effect: "The court ought not to be astute to discover refined and subtle distinctions to save a case from the operation of the maxim when the principle it embodies bespeaks the propriety of its application. The immediate rights of the litigants are not the only objects of the rule. A sound public policy which is interested in preserving every tribunal appointed by law from discredit, imperiously demands its observance." And in Heilbron v. Campbell (Cal.) 23 Pac. 123, it is said again by this court: "It should be the duty and desire of every judge to avoid the very appearance of bias, prejudice, and partiality; and to this end he should decline to sit . . . in any case in which his interest in the subject-matter of the action is such as would naturally influence him either one way or the other."

Upon the latter proposition, that of the power of the legislature to modify or abrogate the rule, statutes have been passed and upheld by the courts which remove the disqualification of jurors and of judges who are merely corporators of a municipal corporation and taxpayers therein, which corporation is a party interested. These statutes have been countenanced by the courts upon the ground that the interest of the juror or judge is so remote, trifling, and insignificant that it may fairly be supposed to be incapable of affecting the judgment or of influencing the conduct of the individual. These statutes, it is to be remembered, however, are in derogation of the common-law rule, and it will always be a judicial question, as to any particular statute, whether or not, by its terms, or in its effect, it violates this fundamental principle of judicial decision. Thus, Judge Cooley: "But, except in cases resting upon such reasons, we do not see how the legislature can have any power to abolish a maxim which is among the fundamentals of judicial authority. The people of the state when framing their Constitution may possibly establish so great an anomaly if they see fit; but, if the legislature is intrusted with apportioning and providing for the exercise of the judicial power, we cannot understand it to be authorized in the execution of this trust, to do that which has never been recognized as being within the province of the judicial authority." Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 508. The only other exception to the operation of the maxim is that which arises in the nature of the government of the state, and has its existence in absolute necessity. Thus, to illustrate, where the legality of a bonded indebtedness of the state comes before its tribunals, they must act, or the right remain forever without the possibility of its remedy. In such cases, however, the judges are as fair and impartial as the lot of humanity doth permit, and trial before such is all that the Constitution, or Lord Coke's jus natura, can preserve to any man.

It has been pointed out that in most of the states the common-law rule disqualifying a juror for interest by reason of the fact that he is a corporator of the city or town which is a party to the suit has been changed by statute, and that these statutes have been upheld by the courts upon the ground of the remoteness and contingency of the interest. In our own state, § 602 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares the grounds upon which challenges for cause may be taken; and subdivision 5 provides, as a ground of challenge, "interest on the part of the juror in the event of the action, or in the main question involved in the action, except his interest as a member or citizen of a municipal corporation." Nothing herein expressly removes the disqualification of the judge, which, alike with that of the juror, existed at common law. But, if the interest of a juror so situated, is too remote to disqualify him as a trier of fact, equally, it may be argued, would a like interest be insufficient to disqualify a judge; and thus, without express statutory enactment upon the question, the conduct of judges in trying actions, where the sole ground of their disqualification is the fact that they are corporators and taxpayers of the municipal corporation which is a party thereto, has always been countenanced and upheld. Yet here it may be remarked that the state is not without some statutory enactments upon the question. Many may be found conferring upon municipal courts and the judges therein jurisdiction of petty offenses for the violation of ordinances and for the collection of revenues under such ordinances. It has never been, and at this day may not be, seriously questioned that a judge of such municipal court is not disqualified by reason of interest merely because of the fact that he is a member and taxpayer of the municipal corporation, either in civil cases where its ordinances are under consideration, or in criminal cases where the penalties, fines, and forfeitures for the violation of such ordinances accrue to the municipal treasury.

In a very great number of the cases which have come under review in the consideration of this question, nearly all have to do with the interest of the judge or juror as a member of such public corporation, and in these, where the ancient rule has not been modified by statute, that rule is for the most part observed in all its strictness. Of these cases there may be cited as instructive upon the question: State v. Stuart, 23 Me. 112; State v. Woodward, 84 Me. 293; Com. v. Ryan, 5 Mass. 90; Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 324; Internal Improvement Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 213; Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114; Northampton v. Smith, 11 Met. 390; Foreman v. Marianna, 43 Ark. 324; Peck v. Baxter County Freeholders, 21 N. J. L. 656; Saule v. Freeman, 24 Fla. 209; Com. v. Reed, 1 Gray, 472; Ellis v. Smith, 42 Ala. 849; Fine v. St. Louis Public Schools, 80 Mo. 166; Stockwell v. White Lake Twp. Board, 22 Mich. 341; Fiske v. Paine, 18 R. I. 632; Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 63; Oakley v. Aspinwall, N. Y. 547.

In Northampton v. Smith, 11 Met. 390, Chief Justice Shaw, with his usual clearness, has defined this disqualifying interest. He says: "(1) We think it is not to be a mere possible, contingent interest; not an interest in the question or general subject to which the matter requiring adjudication relates; but one that is viable, demonstrable, and capable of precise proof. . . . It must therefore depend upon facts capable of being precisely averred and proved, and thus put in issue and tried. . . . (2) It must be a pecuniary or proprietary interest,—a relation by which, as a debtor, or creditor, an heir or legatee, or otherwise, he will gain or lose something by the result of the proceedings,—in contradistinction to an interest of feeling or sympathy or bias, which would disqualify a juror. [It may be here remarked, to prevent misunderstanding, that by an amendment to § 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, bias or prejudice upon the part of a judge is now made a ground of disqualification, and a reason for the removal of a cause.] (3) It must be certain and not merely possible or contingent. . . . It must be direct and personal, though such a personal interest may result from a relation which the judge holds, as the member of a town, parish, or other corporation, where it is not otherwise provided by law, if such corporation has a pecuniary or proprietary interest in the proceedings."

Thus, the interest which one has in a public question, merely because he is a member of the civic body to be affected by the question, is not the interest which the law has in mind. In the case from which we have just quoted, the judge in probate was not held to be disqualified because in a will before him there was a bequest of money to trustees to be devoted to the use and benefit of indigent persons in certain towns, of one of which the judge was an inhabitant. So, in Foreman v. Marianna, 48 Ark. 524, the judge, who was an inhabitant of the town, was not for that reason held to be disqualified to sit in and determine upon proceedings for the annexation of territory to the town, although an election had been called to pass upon the question of annexation, and the judge had voted thereat. And so, in Sauls v. Freeman, 24 Fla. 209, the fact that the circuit judge, with other registered voters of the county, had signed a petition addressed to the county commissioners, asking for a change of the county site, did not disqualify him for interest from sitting in a mandamus proceeding to compel the commissioners to call an election upon the question. In these and like cases the so-called "interest" of the judge is found to be remote, doubtful, and speculative, in no way certain in fact, nor susceptible of precise measurement.

But, upon the other hand, where, in any litigation, there is any certain, definable, pecuniary, or proprietary interest or relation which will be directly affected by the judgment that may be rendered, in every such case, without exception, so far as an exhaustive examination of the authorities goes, the disqualification of the judge is held to exist. Has the judge any pecuniary or personal right or privilege directly affected by or immediately dependent upon the result of the case? As that question is answered, so is answered the question of his disqualification for the interest which we have been considering. In Heilbron v. Campbell, (Cal.) 23 Pac. 122, the action was between divers claimants to a tract of land to which the judge himself asserted title. The judge was not a party to the suit, nor would the judgment rendered be binding between him and the other litigants. Yet this court in bank held the interest to be disqualifying, and properly so; for though generally speaking, an interest in the legal question, as distinguished from a pecuniary interest in the result of the case, is no valid ground of disqualification, there is to this the well settled exception that where the judge has a law suit pending or impending with another person, which rests upon a like state of facts, or upon the same point of law as that pending before him, this is a valid ground of recuscation. Davis v. Allen, 11 Pick. 466, 22 Am. Dec. 386; Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114.

41 L. R. A.

In North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315, the action was by the city of Marysville to restrain the mining company from prosecuting its hydraulic work, because the effect of its mining operations was to injure the lands of the corporation. The judge owned land, not within the municipality, but similarly situated, and equally affected by the mining operations complained of. In an action for an injunction by the city against the mining company it was held that the judge had such a direct and immediate interest in the result of the action as to disqualify him.

Even more immediate and direct is the interest of the judge in the case at bar than that which appeared in the North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. Case. The disqualification does not spring from the fact that the judge is a citizen, inhabitant, and taxpayer of the city of San Diego, nor yet from the fact that the municipality is a party litigant in the action. It arises from the circumstance that he owns property within the city which may or may not be liable for the burden of a special tax for the period of forty years, as he shall decide. The validity of this tax is directly called in question. The judge himself under the circumstances shown, could have instituted as plaintiff this identical action. "The rule is well settled that where the parties interested are numerous, and the suit is for an object common to them all, some of the body may maintain a bill on behalf of themselves and of the others." Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 97, 98; 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 178; Brown v. Trousdale, 188 U. S. 389, 84 L. ed. 987; Gamble v. San Diego, 79 Fed. Rep. 487. He would have been entitled to intervene as well as those who in fact have intervened. The judgment which he renders in the case will be binding upon his rights and his property. His interest is in the outcome of the litigation, and it is a direct measurable, pecuniary interest.

The distinction between this case and that of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co. 118 Cal. 249, is readily to be observed. Here, as has been said and shown, the judge is to decide directly whether or not property which he owns shall be made subject to the burden of a special tax. In the Oakland Water-Front Case, the city sought to recover lands which had been granted to it by the state under certain trusts. Even if the city succeeded, it was at least doubtful whether the control of these lands would result in profit or loss to its finances. It was still more doubtful whether their management would affect the tax rate of the city in the slightest degree. The judge had no other interest in the litigation than that which he possessed in common with other taxpayers, and which arose from the fact that he was an inhabitant and taxpayer of the city. It was not a direct, measurable, or pecuniary interest in the litigation or its outcome. The interest was remote, contingent, and speculative. It might thus be fairly stated: If the city recovered the property, and if it successfully managed or sold it, the result might be to lessen the rate of taxation, and thus, under all these contingencies, to reduce in some slight, indeterminate, and undeterminable extent the tax rate upon the judge's property. Clearly, such a remote and contingent interest is readily to be distinguished from that in the case at bar, where the judge, in a cause directly involving the legality of a tax imposed and to be imposed upon his land, does by his ipse dixit declare whether the burden shall remain or be removed.

In Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, the question of the interest of the judge under circumstances identical with those of the case at bar was presented, and the court reached the conclusion here declared. The same principle was invoked and the same ruling made in Wetzel v. State, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 17, and again in State v. Cisco (Tex. Civ. App.) 88 S. W. 244.

It is urged that the case of Wade v. Travis County, 72 Fed. Rep. 985, is authority against this position. This is in a measure true. It was an action in the circuit court of the western division of Texas, and the question of the disqualification of a Federal judge by reason of his pecuniary interest, under facts similar to those here presented, was considered by the court. Its decision upon the proposition is in the following language: "Authorities examined by the court leave the question in some doubt, and, for the purpose of having it definitely determined by an appellate tribunal, we have concluded to hold that that disqualification on the part of the district judge does not exist. . . . And we suggest to counsel the propriety of preserving proper exceptions in order that the point may be conclusively settled by the court of appeals." It may be conceded that so far as it goes this case is against the conclusion which we have reached; but it should be said in this connection that it is the only case of its kind, and, as appears from the language of the learned judge, he decided as he did only in order that the question might be definitely laid at rest by the appellate tribunal.

41 L. R. A.

As it is uncontradicted in this record that the same disqualification which existed in the case of Judge Torrance existed as to the other judges of the superior court of the county, it follows from what has been said that the motion for change of venue should have been granted.

The order is therefore reversed.

We concur: Beatty, Ch. J.; Garoutte, J.; Temple, J.

McFarland, J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment of reversal. I also concur generally in the opinion of Mr. Justice Henshaw, except that I desire to a little more pointedly emphasize the distinction between the case at bar and a case where a city in which the judge is a taxpayer is a party, and where there is merely a possibility that a judgment against the city might result in an increased levy of taxes, and a judgment in favor of the city might bring about a reduction of taxation. In the latter case—and in others that could be mentioned, where a similar principle applies—the interest is too shadowy, indirect, remote and contingent to be within the rule that a man cannot be a judge in his own case. See Dallas v. Peacock, 89 Tex. 58; Oakland v. Oakland Water-Front Co. 118 Cal. 249, and cases there cited. But in the case at bar the interest of the judge was not indirect, remote, or contingent; it directly involved the immediate imposition of a special annual tax upon his property to continue for forty years.

Van Fleet, J., dissenting:

I dissent. The case is not, to my mind, distinguishable in principle from that decided in Oakland v. Oakland Water-Front Co. 118 Cal. 249, where it was held that the trial judge was not disqualified. The interest of Judge Torrance in the subject of litigation is not different in kind, however much it may differ in degree, from that possessed by the trial judge in that case. In my judgment the principle announced in the opinion of the court is one susceptible of indefinite extension, to the great detriment of the practical administration of justice, and the application of which to the facts of this case is, I think, opposed by the weight of modern authority.

I dissent: Harrison, J.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

William MAY, Trustee, etc., of John Frederick May, Deceased, et al., Appts.,
v.

Sarah Maria MAY et al.

(5 App. D. C. 552.)

1. A will will not be construed by the courts before necessity of action under it arises.
2. A provision in a will creating a trust giving the beneficiaries power to remove the trustee and appoint another without aid of the courts, for what they may deem good and sufficient cause, is valid, and will be given effect by the courts.
3. Power of removal of a trustee, given the beneficiaries by the will creating the trust, must not be exercised wantonly, capriciously, or arbitrarily, and its exercise may be reviewed by a court of equity.
4. Deep-seated and irreconcilable dissension between the beneficiaries of a trust and the trustee, not superinduced for the mere purpose of getting rid of the latter, is sufficient to justify his removal under a power given the beneficiaries by will, even if his conduct is otherwise unobjectionable.
5. Failure of one of the beneficiaries of a trust to participate in the removal of the trustee under a power contained in a will creating it, required to be exercised by all the beneficiaries, will not render the removal invalid, where such beneficiary was represented by another under a power of attorney, and subsequently ratifies it and all action in the premises.
6. A trustee under a will who files a bill for the construction of certain clauses in the will will not be allowed his costs out of the trust fund, if the prayer of a cross bill by the beneficiaries that their action in removing him, which, under the will, they had the power to do, and he had no power to resist, was ratified, is granted, and no construction of the will made.

(March 5, 1896.)*

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia removing petitioner from his trust upon cross bill of defendants in a proceeding by him to obtain construction of a will. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert Gilmore and W. D. Davidge for appellants.

Messrs. Enoch Totten and William H. Dennis, for appellees:

The requirements of "concurrence" of the wife, and "unanimous resolution" of the other heirs, show that their action was to be effective in itself. The words "good and sufficient cause," occurring earlier in the sentence, are to be reconciled with what comes later by regarding them as precatory, cautionary, or directory only.

*This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States May 10, 1897 [107 U. S. 810, 42 L. ed. 179].

NOTE.—The question of the effect of a provision in an instrument creating a trust giving the beneficiaries the power to remove a trustee seems to be a new one.

41 L. R. A.

Cummer v. Butts, 40 Mich. 322, 29 Am. Rep. 530; Hoge v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 93 U. S. 1, 23 L. ed. 781; Walker v. Brungard, 18 Smedes & M. 758.

Appointment of a trustee under a power, while a suit is pending, is not contempt of court, nor is it void.

1 Perry, Tr. § 293.

The mere filing of a bill, before any decree is made, does not, of itself, affect such a power of removal.

3 Perry, Tr. § 474; Cafe v. Bent, 8 Hare, 249; Neves v. Burrage, 14 Q. B. 504.

If there were no other reasons, the discordant relations between Wm. May and the cestuis que trust, and, more especially, with the other trustee, would be sufficient for a change of cotrustee.

Uvedale v. Kittrick, Cas. in Ch. pt. 2, p. 130; Swale v. Swale, 22 Beav. 584; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 L. ed. 746; Cavender v. Cavender, 114 U. S. 464, 29 L. ed. 312; Irvine v. Dunham, 111 U. S. 327, 28 L. ed. 444; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1288; Deraimes v. Dunham, 22 Hun. 86; Re Morgan, 66 N. Y. 618, 63 Barb. 631; Re McGillivray, 188 N. Y. 308; Re Simon, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 194. Affirmed 155 Pa. 215; Marsden's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 281; Gartside v. Gartside, 118 Mo. 348; Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490; Letterstedt v. Broers, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 371.

Good faith and honesty did not excuse actual misconduct in the execution of the trust; carelessness in collecting assets and charging herself therewith warranted removal; concealment of rents collected warranted removal, and making restitution did not excuse.

Re Smith, 26 N. Y. S. R. 235; Re Mayer, 66 How. Pr. 106; Savage v. Gould, 60 How. Pr. 284; Clemens v. Caldwell, 7 B. Mon. 171; Deen v. Cozens, 7 Robt. 178; Cavender v. Cavender, 114 U. S. 464, 29 L. ed. 312; Dickerson v. Smith, 17 S. C. 289; 2 Perry, Tr. § 821; Middleton v. Dodwell, 13 Ves. Jr. 266.

A trustee should be removed when he shows a disposition to violate the duties of his trust, so as to endanger the trust property.

Harper v. Straus, 14 B. Mon. 48; Coventry v. Atty. Gen. 7 Bro. P. C. 235.

Although, by the first codicil, Wm. May is appointed "cotrustee," he is only to "exercise the powers" given in the will, jointly with the widow, and is not given any estate.

Sidebotham v. Watson, 11 Hare, 170.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Dr. John Frederick May, of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, died in this city on May 1, 1891, leaving a will duly executed and bearing the date of February 4, 1890, and also two codicils thereto, one executed on March 27, 1891, and the other on April 23, 1891. He left a large estate, most of it being realty situated in the city of Washington, and a house in the city of New York.

As to the effect of a provision giving the beneficiary the right to appoint a trustee in case of vacancy, see Stearns v. Fraleigh (Fla.) 39 L. R. A. 705.

He also left surviving him his wife, the appellee Sarah Maria May, and six children, all of age, namely, the appellant William May, who was the oldest, and the appellees Alice Beaver Webb (married), Edith Sibyl Randolph (widow), Caroline Kane Wright (divorced), Julia May and Frederick May (both unmarried). By the will he devised and bequeathed all his estate, both real and personal, to his wife Sarah Maria May, her heirs and assigns, in trust for the purposes thereafter named; which were so far as recited: 1. That his wife should receive at least the same provision to which she would be entitled by law under her right of dower, and therefore that she should receive one third of the net annual income of his estate during her life, one third of the personal property absolutely, and the use of the house in Washington in which they had resided during her life. 2. That the estate should be kept intact and no division made of it while any of his children lived, and that the rents and profits, except the thirds left to his wife, should be applied to the payment of his debts and the cancellation of any mortgage or encumbrance that there might be on the estate, and after the full payment of such debts and encumbrances, should be divided equally between all his children, subject to the disposition made in favor of his wife. 3. That, in the event of a sale by the trustee of any portion of the property, which sale the trustee was not to be precluded from making whenever it was manifestly for the benefit of the estate, the proceeds of sale should be reinvested in safe first mortgage on real estate. There was also a power given to the trustee to remortgage any portion of the estate that should be subject to mortgage at the time of the testator's death, in the event of inability to discharge the mortgage. And it was provided that, upon the death of any of his children, the share of such child should go to his or her issue, if there were any. There were some specific bequests of personal property not important to be here enumerated; and a special provision was made of a legacy to his daughter Julia in the event of her marriage. His wife was made executrix of the will, as well as trustee; and she was exempted from giving bond in either capacity, and empowered to appoint a trustee to succeed her, if she should deem it best at any time to do. This was the substance of the original will.

By the first of the two codicils which he added to his will shortly before his death, he associated his oldest son, the appellant William May, in the trusteeship with his wife. This codicil was as follows:

"I hereby appoint my son William May co trustee with my wife Sarah Maria May, my said son and my wife to have and exercise the powers and authority in my said will mentioned and created, except as hereinafter otherwise directed. It is my further wish, and I hereby will and direct, that my said son William May shall take charge of my real estate (except my present dwelling house, which shall be and remain in the exclusive charge of my wife during her life), and care for and manage the same for the best interests of my said estate and in accordance with the terms of my said will, and he shall collect the rents and income of my said real estate, and pay the lawful taxes and assessments, and other expenses thereon, and shall keep the same in good repair. It is my will, and I so direct, that the taxes, insurance, and repairs on my said dwelling house shall be paid out of the general income of my other real estate. For the said service of my son William May in caring for and managing said estate and for collecting the rents and paying the taxes and assessments, and other services, as hereinbefore directed, he shall and may retain from money so collected, as his compensation, a commission equal to 5 per centum of the amount of money by him collected from said estate, and the said William May shall render to my said wife full and true accounts of the rents by him collected, and of the disbursements by him made, in the execution of this trust, such accounts to be rendered each and every month, and shall be accompanied by the vouchers for such disbursements. After the death of my wife said accounts shall be rendered to my other heirs. It is my will that no commissions shall be paid to my wife as trustee.

"I hereby further will and direct that for good and sufficient cause my other heirs, with the concurrence of my wife, if she be living, shall have and they are hereby given the power, by their unanimous resolution, to remove my said son William May from his office as such trustee and to appoint another person in his stead. It is my wish that neither of my said trustees shall be required to give a bond or other security, in reference to the execution of the trusts created by my said will or this codicil."

The second codicil merely provided specifically for the payment of some debts arising from trust funds that had been placed in his hands; and is unimportant in the present controversy.

The will and codicils were duly admitted to probate by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, holding a special term for orphans' court business, on June 19, 1891, and administration of the personality was committed to the widow, Sarah Maria May, as the executrix named in the will. That administration, it seems, had not been concluded when the present proceedings were begun, on May 2, 1892. The trustees forthwith entered upon the performance of their duties as such with regard to the real estate; and the appellant, William May, took immediate charge and control of the collection of the rents of the property and of its management.

Dissension, however, very soon arose between William May on the one side, and his mother, brother, and sisters, on the other; and as usual in such cases, the dissension became intense and bitter. There is in the record a painful disclosure of domestic discord which should have been avoided, and into the details of which we do not deem it necessary for the purposes of this case to enter. Even the filing of the bill of complaint in the cause, apparently and on its face a proper proceeding, was regarded by the other parties as, under the circumstances, an unnecessary and wanton act of hostility dictated by ulterior motives on the part of the appellant.

This bill was filed on May 2, 1892. The principal purpose of it, in respect of the construction sought to be had from the court, was to determine whether the testator had not died intestate with regard to the bulk of his estate after the termination of the life estate devised to the widow. There was an intimation in it of the dissension that had arisen, and an allegation of embarrassment therefrom to the complainant, William May, in the execution of his duties as trustee. And the prayer of the bill was, in a general way, for the construction of the will, and for the further administration of the estate under the direction of the court.

The defendants answered the bill; and the burden of their several answers was that the complainant had misbehaved in his trusteeship by his intolerant and overbearing conduct, and by false and erroneous charges in his accounts, which necessitated the employment of an expert accountant to restate them.

After replication filed and before any testimony was taken, the hostility between the parties had become such that on November 25, 1892, all the children and heirs at law of the testator John F. May, other than the complainant and appellant William May, with the concurrence and co-operation of the widow Sarah Maria May, joined in the execution of an instrument of writing, purporting to be their unanimous resolution, in pursuance of the power given to them by the testator in the first codicil to his will, for the removal of William May from the trusteeship for good and sufficient cause. Seven causes, among others, were specified in the document; and these were, in substance, that the accounts rendered by the complainant were erroneous and untrue; that he had sought to have credit for items to which he was not entitled; that he had altered and falsified vouchers; that by his intolerant conduct he had made communication with him by his cotrustee impossible; and that he had been absent an unreasonable time from the District of Columbia. William H. Dennis, esquire, a member of the bar of the District of Columbia, was designated in the resolution as the successor of the appellant in the trusteeship; and to him the appellant was directed to turn over the possession of the property, and all the books, papers, and documents appertaining thereto.

The resolution was signed in person by all those who purported to concur in it, except Frederick May, who was then absent in South America, and whose signature was appended to it by his mother Sarah Maria May, under a power of attorney given her by him to act for him in all matters appertaining to his father's estate. On May 8, 1893, after his return from South America, Frederick May executed another paper, which is found in the record, purporting to be a full ratification of his mother's action, and of the proceedings that had been had in his name during his absence.

When the resolution was communicated to William May, on December 28, 1892, he declined to comply with it, or to recognize its validity. And on January 8, 1893, he filed a petition in this cause, setting forth the attempt thus made to remove him, and praying for a restraining order against the defendants and against Mr. Dennis to prevent their interference with him in the execution of the trusteeship. The restraining order was issued, and remained in force until the final hearing of the cause.

Thereupon the defendants on March 8, 1893, filed a cross bill against the appellant William May to procure the ratification of their action in removing him from the trusteeship, for an injunction against his further management, for the settlement of his accounts, and for the appointment of a receiver during the pendency of the suit. The application for a receiver under this cross bill was refused; but the appellant was required to give bond, which he accordingly gave, and the parties proceeded to take testimony. The burden of this testimony was the manifestation of family difficulties and family discords, past and present, and the question of the conduct or misconduct of William May as trustee of the estate.

Upon the hearing of the cause, a decree was rendered ratifying the action of the defendants in their removal of the appellant, William May, from the trusteeship. The appellant was directed to deliver the estate and all that appertained to it to the substituted trustee, and to settle his accounts before the auditor; and he was enjoined and restrained from further interference with the trusteeship. There was no attempt in the decree to construe the will, except in one comparatively unimportant particular, with reference to the settlement of the appellant's accounts; and this was to the effect that the one third of the net income of the estate provided by the will to be paid to the widow should not be subject to be diminished by deductions for the fund which was directed to be accumulated for the payment of the testator's debts and encumbrances on his real estate. From the opinion, which we find in the record, of the learned justice who signed the decree in the court below, we are advised that it was deemed premature at this time to enter into any further construction of the will.

William May, the complainant in the original bill, and defendant in the cross bill, appealed from that decree to this court.

There are three assignments of error: (1) The refusal or failure of the court below to construe the will; (2) the removal of the appellant from the trusteeship; (3) the direction of the court below that the widow was to be paid one third of the net income of the estate, without deduction on account of interest on the mortgages.

1. With reference to the first assignment of error, it does not appear that the court below has refused to construe the will, but has regarded it as premature so to do, before any exigency has arisen for such construction. And in this view we concur. It does not seem to us that the construction of the will is of any present practical importance, or that it is required until it becomes necessary to take some action under the will, and the action to be taken is rendered doubtful by the obscurity of the will.

2. It is conceded by counsel on both sides that the question of paramount importance in the case is that of the removal of the appellant from the trusteeship. To the determination of that question the testimony taken by the parties was mainly, if not exclusively, directed; and that is the question which is principally treated in the excellent and exhaustive opinion rendered in the case by the learned justice who heard it in the court below. The original purpose of the suit, a construction of the will, if such was in fact the original purpose, has become for the present a secondary consideration; and the personality of the trustee, who is to administer the trusts of the will, has become the principal, and almost the sole, subject of controversy.

We fully concur in the sentiment expressed by the learned justice below, that such differences between relatives as are manifested in this record are most regrettable, and that courts should refrain as far as possible from magnifying the points of personal difference. It is satisfactory to feel, in the view which we take of this case, that it is wholly unnecessary for us to weigh the conflicting statements of the parties, or to determine any question of misconduct or moral delinquency on either side, if such there be, and that we may determine the controversy so far as it is incumbent on us to determine it without reference to the mutual recrimination of the parties.

By the codicil to his will the testator gave to his widow and his heirs at law, other than the appellant William May, the power to remove the latter from the trust which was vested in him by the will and codicil, whenever they found good and sufficient cause so to do, and their resolution to that effect was unanimous. The right to have the trustee removed is one which the heirs, or any one or more of them, would have had through the instrumentality of a court of equity without any such provision in the will. For good and sufficient cause, any one beneficiary, even against the unanimous wish of all the others, might procure the removal of a trustee and the substitution of another in his place by a court of equity. We must assume, therefore, that the testator in this instance intended to vest in the designated heirs a power or a right which they did not have by law; and that power or that right was to determine for themselves, at least in the first instance, without the need of recourse to a court of equity, what should constitute a good and sufficient cause for the removal of their trustee, and to effect such removal by their own united action. That this power must not be exercised wantonly, capriciously, or arbitrarily, must, of course, be conceded. That its exercise is subject to review by a court of equity must also be conceded. But the law which gives a man the right to dispose of his property by will, and which seeks to give effect to every provision of the will that does not contravene some fixed rule or principle of jurisprudence, can find nothing contrary to public policy in the grant of a power that enables beneficiaries to deal summarily with their trustees without being compelled to seek the aid of a court of equity for the purpose. Extraordinary and unusual powers of this kind will, of course, be strictly scrutinized, and their exercise closely supervised in proper cases by the courts. But, as there is no law to prevent or prohibit their creation, we must hold that, with reference to them, a testator's will is entitled to be carried into effect as much as in any other particular.

41 L. R. A.

The power to remove their trustee was vested in the defendants to this cause. The power to determine when there was good and sufficient cause for such removal was necessarily in them also, subject to the restraining power of a court of equity against the abuse of it. They exercised their right to determine that good and sufficient cause existed; they found that there was such cause; and they removed the trustee accordingly. Upon the face of their proceeding, it is beyond question that they acted within the scope of their authority.

But was their action in fact an abuse of their power, instead of a legitimate exercise of it? Was there good and sufficient cause for the removal of the trustee? Or was the finding by the defendants of such cause a mere pretense for the exercise of arbitrary and unreasonable authority? As we have stated, we will not enter into any investigation of the causes of dissension between the parties, or of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of their respective positions. That there is a dissension, bitter and uncompromising, is beyond question. That such dissension precludes intercourse between the parties, is their mutual declaration. If there can be no intercourse between them, no communication of views, their joint execution of their joint trust is an impossibility. The due execution of the trust requires concurrence of action, and consultation preliminary to action. The trusts are all active trusts, in which the judgment and discretion of both trustees are necessary for their proper execution; and we must suppose that it was to secure this concurrence of action, and to prevent the dissension that would militate against it, that the testator created the power of removal which he called into existence in his codicil. It is not necessary that there should be actual misconduct or moral delinquency on the part of a trustee to justify his removal; any failure, disability, or inability to perform the trust would be sufficient. Hill, Trustees; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1287, 1288; 1 Perry, Tr. § 275. And it is also true that mere disagreements do not constitute sufficient cause for the removal of a trustee; for otherwise, the purposes of an appointment might sometimes be frustrated. 1 Perry, Trusts, § 276; Forster v. Davies, 4 De G. F. & J. 133.

But unquestionably, the existence of dissension, deep seated and irreconcilable, not superinduced for the mere purpose of getting rid of a trustee who is in the faithful performance of his duty, but dissension such as imperils the due and proper execution of the trust, is sufficient to justify the removal of a trustee, even if otherwise the conduct of the trustee is unobjectionable. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1288; Lettersstedt v. Broers, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 371, 386; Irvine v. Dunham, 111 U. S. 327. 28 L. ed. 444; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 L. ed. 746.

In the case last cited of McPherson v. Cox, in which the Supreme Court of the United States declined to sanction the removal of a trustee, where there was ill will between him and the beneficiary of the trust, that court said: "Where a trustee is charged with an active trust, which gives him some discretionary power over the rights of the cestui que trust, and which brings him into constant personal intercourse with the latter, it may be conceded that the mere existence of a strong mutual ill feeling between the parties will, under some circumstances, justify a change by the court." And the court in that case refused to discharge the trustee on the ground that there was no active trust requiring personal intercourse between the parties, and because there was another trustee without whose concurrence and co-operation the objectionable trustee could effect nothing. But the circumstances here are those of an active trust, requiring for their due execution a constant intercourse and constant co-operation between the parties, with the existence of ill will between the appellant and his cotrustee, who is also the present principal beneficiary, as to make co-operation impossible. It is unnecessary to inquire into the causes of the dissension. It is plain that the case has arisen in which the supreme court has said that a change of trustee by the court would be justifiable.

In another case that court has said: "Where there is a failure of suitable trustees to perform a trust, either from accident or from the refusal of the old trustee to act, . . . or from any other cause, courts of equity will appoint new trustees." Irvine v. Dunham, 111 U. S. 834, 28 L. ed. 447.

It should not be forgotten that this is not a case of original application to a court of equity to remove a trustee in which a just and sufficient cause for removal must be stated and proved, and in which a court of equity is not quick to seek cause for such removal, but rather an application to the court by the parties in interest to ratify a removal already made by themselves, and which they had the express right to make under the testator's will. Ordinarily, the removal of a trustee is to that extent a contravention of the wishes of the creator of the trust, and is justified only because the trust itself is the main thing to be regarded, and the trustee to carry into effect is of secondary consideration; and the effort of the court is to do that which the person creating the trust must be assumed to have desired to do if he had anticipated the contingency that demanded a change of instrumentality. Here we have a removal made apparently in accordance with the express wishes of a testator, and the court is merely asked to sanction it, because the trustee resists the removal. It is difficult to imagine a case in which the wishes of beneficiaries would be better entitled to respect and recognition by the court than the present, without any reflection on the honor or integrity of the trustee.

It is objected, however, that it was not competent for the donees of the power in this instance to exercise it, after the institution of this suit, without the permission of the court previously had and obtained; and the cases of Webb v. Shaftesbury, 7 Ves. Jr. 487, and Jones v. Stockett, 2 Bland, Ch. 409, 435, are cited in support of this position. It is probably sufficient answer to this objection to say that the sanction of the court has, in fact, been given to the action of the parties, and that the action of the court in giving that sanction is not in itself a proper subject for review by us.

It is also objected that the action of the parties in the matter of removal of the trustee was irregular, for the reason that Frederick May did not participate in it except by power of attorney given to his mother, and that the case was one of discretion in which there could be no delegation by power of attorney. This we deem it entirely unnecessary to determine, inasmuch as Frederick May subsequently ratified the removal, and the filing of the cross bill, and all that had been done in the premises; and there is no reason to suppose that the unanimous resolution required for the removal of the trustee might not be the result of correspondence, or might not have been reached in some other way than by the corporeal presence of all the parties meeting in conclave to deliberate upon the subject.

We find no reason to dissent from the action of the court below in directing the appellant to surrender the estate to the substituted trustee, and to settle his accounts, and restraining him from further interference with the trust.

3. Error is assigned, also, upon the direction given by the court below for the settlement of the trustee's account, to the effect that the widow was entitled to be paid the one-third interest which she took under the will without deduction of interest upon the mortgages upon the trust property. But this assignment of error is not greatly insisted upon by the appellant; and the direction given by the court is so plainly in accordance both with the letter and the spirit of the will that we deem it unnecessary to discuss the question at any length.

On the whole, we are of opinion that the decree of the court below is right, and should be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

A motion to amend the decree as to costs having been made, Morris, J., on March 20, 1895, delivered the following opinion:

A motion has been filed in this cause on behalf of the appellant for an amendment of the decree of this court, so that he should be allowed his costs incurred in this cause, including such reasonable counsel fees as the supreme court of the District of Columbia might deem it just and proper to allow.

On behalf of the motion it is urged that the bill of complaint in the cause was filed for a construction of the will under which the appellant was executing his trust; that the trust was a most important one; and that the ground of the decision of this court, as well as of the decision of the court below, was upon matter that did not arise until after the filing of the bill, answer, and replication, namely, the removal of the appellant from his trust by the appellees under the power confided to them by the will.

While it is true, as a general rule, that a trustee should be allowed his costs, even in many cases including counsel fees, incurred in proceedings instituted by him to aid him in the execution of his trust, the present does not seem to us to be such a case. The proceeding was apparently premature. No exigency had arisen for the institution of the suit. The good faith of the appellant in filing the bill has been seriously questioned. Even if we should assume that he was justified in filing the bill, the costs incurred in the matter of the bill, answer, and replication are but a small part of the costs of the case. The bulk of those costs were incurred in the way of taking testimony upon the question upon which the parties actually went to issue. And to allow the appellant his costs now would be substantially to charge the appellees with the cost of doing what we have held they were fully justified in doing, and which the appellant was not justified in resisting.

The costs which we have allowed in our decree are the costs of the appeal to this court.

Having affirmed the decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, we have not sought to interfere with the allowance of costs by that court. Certainly it does not seem proper that we should do so at this time. Least of all does it seem proper that we should direct, as we are asked to do, that the supreme court of the District of Columbia should allow counsel fees in the case to the appellant.

We are compelled to overrule the motion of the appellant.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. E. PAULK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Mayor, etc., of SYCAMORE.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. Courts of equity will not by injunction prevent the institution of prosecutions for criminal offenses, whether the same be violations of state statutes or municipal ordinances; nor will they, upon a petition for an injunction of this nature, inquire into the constitutionality of a legislative act, or the validity or reasonableness of an ordinance making penal the act or acts for the doing of which prosecutions are threatened.

2. There was no error in denying the injunction.

(April 11, 1898.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Irwin County to review a judgment denying an injunction to restrain the prosecution of criminal proceedings against plaintiff and his employees under provisions of defendant's charter making penal the sale of intoxicating liquors within the corporate limits. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. A. Hawkins and Thomson & Whipple, for plaintiff in error:

The local prohibition law of Irwin county is unconstitutional and void.

Papworth v. State, 103 Ga. 86.

Section 10 of the charter of Sycamore, found in Acts 1890-1, p. 818, is almost identical in language with Irwin's local prohibition act, and is equally as sweeping and prohibitive in its terms.

A municipality can have no more power to override a general state law by local legislation than the state itself has, the municipality being the creature of the state.

Where there is a general law making a county dry, no municipal corporation in the county can allow or regulate the sale of liquors though their charters may purport to so authorize.

Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 688; Tatum v. State, 79 Ga. 176.

In Hill v. Dalton, 72 Ga. 814, the supreme court held that Dalton could by ordinance prohibit sale of liquors.

This decision, however, does not affect our case, as it was prior to the general local option act of 1884-5, Dalton's charter having been granted in 1874.

The town of Sycamore has no charter power whatever to regulate the sale of liquor or control it in any way, outside of § 10.

A municipal corporation can pass or enact no ordinance not authorized by its charter.

Robinson v. Franklin, 1 Humph. 156, 34 Am. Dec. 625, and notes; State v. Ferguson, 33 N. H. 426.

Equity will interfere where one's civil rights and private property are interfered with.

Atlanta v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 71 Ga. 107.

Not only will injunction lie, but is the proper remedy, less expensive, cheaper, or more conducive to the best interest of all concerned.

Gould v. Atlanta, 55 Ga. 688.

Injunction will lie to restrain operation of illegal ordinance when municipal authorities threaten to continually harass one.

Schoen Bros. v. Atlanta, 97 Ga. 697, 83 L. R. A. 804.

Mr. J. H. Martin, for defendant in error:

The plaintiff in error had a complete and adequate common-law remedy; and in fact the court granted the certiorari applied for by the plaintiff in error and his brother on the same day and at the same time that he denied the injunction.

See Montezuma v. Minor, 70 Ga. 191; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 688; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 926 et seq.; Taylor v. Americus, 39 Ga. 59; Macon v. Shaw, 16 Ga. 172; 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 587.

The action of the council in imposing the fine was a quasi criminal action, and as such a court of equity will not restrain or obstruct the mayor and council of Sycamore.

Ga. Code, 4914.

If certiorari was not adequate, then the writ of prohibition was the remedy, and not injunction.

See Code, § 4885; Montezuma v. Minor, 70 Ga. 191; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 684; Hart v. Taylor, 61 Ga. 156.

Fish, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintiff in error brought his petition to enjoin criminal proceedings against him and his employees, under the provisions of the charter of Sycamore prohibiting and making penal the sale of intoxicating liquors within its incorporate limits, and to enjoin similar proceedings under a municipal ordinance prohibiting, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, the keeping of such liquors in the city for the purpose of sale or barter. He alleged that the municipal ordinance in question is void, and has been repealed, and that, if the corporate authorities are allowed to institute and carry on the threatened prosecutions, "it will not only harass and jeopardize his personal liberty, without any lawful authority, but it will also interfere with him in the enjoyment of his civil rights, break up his business, and cause him to sacrifice and lose his . . . property and stock of goods, and damage him in a large amount, and all without authority and without adequate redress," and that his damages will be irreparable.

*Headnotes by FISH, J.

NOTE.—For injunction against criminal proceedings, see Crighto v. Dahmer (Miss.) 21 L. R. A. 84, and note; also Neaf v. Palmer (Ky.) 41 L. R. A. 219, 41 L. R. A.

In Gault v. Wallis, 53 Ga. 675, it was held that "courts of equity have no jurisdiction to interfere with the administration of the criminal laws of the state by injunction or otherwise." And in Phillips v. Stone Mountain, 61 Ga. 386, it was held: "No injunction, or order in the nature of injunction, will be granted to restrain proceedings in a criminal matter." In Garrison v. Atlanta, 68 Ga. 64, where these decisions were followed, the principle is reaffirmed in the following language: "Injunction will not be granted to restrain a criminal proceeding." These decisions seem to be decisive of the questions raised in the present case, and but for a later decision of this court, which is invoked in behalf of the plaintiff in error, and which we shall presently consider, we should not deem it necessary or profitable, in this opinion, to do more than cite and follow these adjudications. The case in 61 Ga. 386, is especially in point, owing to its similarity to the case now under consideration. In that case certain retail liquor dealers sought to enjoin prosecutions under a municipal ordinance, which was passed after they had obtained their license to sell, on the ground that the ordinance was void, and materially restricted their business. This court, speaking through Bleckley, J., who delivered the opinion, said: "Whatever may be the infirmities of the penal ordinances of Stone Mountain, an injunction in the present case was properly denied. If unlawful convictions take place before a municipal court, reversal can be had in the superior court, as a court of law, by certiorari. This is a plain and adequate remedy, and a court of equity need not and cannot interfere. Chancery takes no part in the administration of criminal law. It neither aids the criminal courts in the exercise of jurisdiction, nor restrains or obstructs them." The principle upon which these decisions are founded has long been well settled by a great current of authority, both in this country and in England. In Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, it was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the most emphatic terms. The first headnote in that case is: "A court of equity has no jurisdiction of a bill to stay criminal proceedings." And in the opinion of the court it is said: "The office and jurisdiction of a court of equity, unless enlarged by express statute, are limited to the protection of the rights of property. It has no jurisdiction over the prosecution, the punishment, or the pardon of crimes or misdemeanors, or over the appointment and removal of public officers. To assume such a jurisdiction, or to sustain a bill in equity to restrain or relieve against proceedings for the punishment of offenses, or for the removal of public officers, is to invade the domain of courts of common law, or of the executive and administrative department of the government." Further on, in the same opinion, after stating that "the modern decisions in England, by eminent equity judges, concur in holding that a court of chancery has no power to restrain criminal proceedings, unless they are instituted by a party to a suit already pending before it, and to try the same right that is in issue there," and that "Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence, affirms the same doctrine," it is said: "And in the American courts, so far as we are informed, it has been strictly and uniformly upheld, and has been applied alike whether the prosecutions or arrests sought to be restrained arose under statutes of the state or under municipal ordinances,"—citing West v. New York, 10 Paige, 539; Davis v. American Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 75 N. Y. 362; Tyler v. Hamersley, 44 Conn. 419, 422, 26 Am. Rep. 479; Stuart v. La Salle County Supers. 83 Ill. 341; Decron v. First Municipality, 4 La. Ann. 11; Levy v. Shreveport, 27 La. Ann. 620; Moses v. Mobile, 52 Ala. 193; Gault v. Wallis, 53 Ga. 675; Phillips v. Stone Mountain, 61 Ga. 386; Cohen v. Goldsboro Comrs. 77 N. C. 2; Waters Peires Oil Co. v. Little Rock, 39 Ark. 412; Spink v. Francis, 19 Fed. Rep. 670, 20 Fed. Rep. 567; Suess v. Noble, 81 Fed. Rep. 555.

To this formidable and strong array of authorities we might ourselves add a number of more recent decisions to the same effect by our American courts, but we do not deem it necessary to do so. Counsel representing the plaintiff in error, recognizing the fact that the three Georgia decisions that we have cited, particularly the one rendered in 61 Ga. 386, in the Stone Mountain Case, are against their contentions, rely upon the ruling of this court in Atlanta v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 71 Ga. 106, and considering the principle announced in the fifth headnote to that case simply as an abstract proposition, applicable to all cases in which some sort of a property right may be injuriously affected by a criminal prosecution, we can understand the confidence with which they invoke that decision in behalf of their client. But the principle there announced is to be considered and applied in the light of the extraordinary facts disclosed by the record and discussed in the opinion of the court in that case. There are wide differences between that case and the one at bar. In that case, the city of Atlanta, to use the language of the court, had "stood by and seen this company make an outlay of $140,000 in the exercise of their rights under this charter, without intimating to them that objection would be made to their use of the streets for the purposes authorized, and without the use of which their enterprise would not have been undertaken and could not be prosecuted, and without which they would lose their entire outlay and be involved in irretrievable ruin." And then, when the gaslight company was ready to begin the work of laying its mains, the municipal authorities sought to prevent it from exercising its valuable, vested, corporate franchises, by first refusing to allow it permission to excavate or obstruct the streets of the city for the purpose of laying its pipes, and then threatening, under certain city ordinances, to prosecute and punish any of its agents or employees who, without such permission, should undertake to do so. The court, after demonstrating that "the permission of the city of Atlanta was not required to enable the complainant to exercise its franchises," says: "Upon every principle of equity, this failure to notify the complainant of their intention until this heavy expenditure had been made, would estop them. Such conduct is fraudulent in the eye of the law, and where practised upon an innocent party, who is seeking bona fide to carry out the provisions of its charter, by availing itself of the powers and privileges thereby granted would, if anything could, debar them from now being heard." The court seems also to have been of the opinion that the municipal ordinances making penal the excavation or obstruction of the streets of the city, without permission of the municipal authorities, were void in so far as they affected the vested rights of the gaslight company under its legislative charter. And the court, on page 126, strikes what it appears to us is the real keynote of the case, when it says: "Where it is manifest, as in this case, that a prosecution and arrest is threatened for an alleged violation of city ordinances for the sole purpose of preventing the exercise of civil rights conferred directly by law, injunction is a proper remedy to prevent injury to the party thus menaced." It will be seen that the distinguishing feature of that case, and the one which was successfully employed in invoking the interposition of equity, was the patent fact that the threatened prosecutions under the municipal ordinances were being used, not for the legitimate purpose of preventing the streets of the city from being unlawfully injured or obstructed, but for the purpose of destroying the valuable, vested franchises of the Gate City Gaslight Company. And equity, seeing the palpable fraud which was being perpetrated, under color of what purported to be a simple police regulation, stretched forth its strong arm to prevent the irreparable damages which would ensue if it did not afford its protection to the rights which were thus imperiled. It was long ago decided that "an injunction will be granted to prevent the franchise of a corporation from being destroyed, as well as to restrain a party from violating it, by attempting to participate in its exclusive privileges." Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 788, 6 L. ed. 204. We think, therefore, that the true principle which underlies the case that we have just been discussing, as we gather it from its peculiar facts and the opinion of the court, is that when the damages would be irreparable, if the threatened injury is not prevented, equity, if properly appealed to, will not permit valuable vested corporate franchises, granted by the state, to be seriously impaired or practically destroyed by prosecutions instituted under color of municipal ordinances, which are wrested from their legitimate purposes and fraudulently used, in a matter to which they cannot apply, as a means with which to prevent the exercise of these franchises.

A similar case to the one in 71 Ga. 106, is that of Port of Mobile v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ala. 115, where the supreme court of Alabama held that "where a city attempts, by an ordinance, unlawfully to destroy the franchise of a railroad company, a court of equity will not refuse to interfere by injunction for the reason that the ordinance is quasi criminal in character." Somerville, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It cannot be tolerated that a municipal corporation . . . should escape the grasp of a court of chancery, in a clear case of equitable cognizance, by the device of adding a penalty to an illegal and void ordinance." How different from such a case as the one in 71 Ga. 106, is the one at bar. Here no question as to the destruction or invasion of civil rights which had become vested under a legislative charter is presented; and, so far as the record discloses, the municipal authorities of Sycamore are simply endeavoring, in good faith, to enforce the penal provisions of the charter and ordinance of the city, the enactment of each of which appears to have been a bona fide effort to exercise the police power, for the protection and preservation of the peace and good order of the community. The plaintiff in error, with full knowledge that the charter of the city contained a provision prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its incorporated limits, and that one of its ordinances prohibited the keeping of such liquors for sale or barter therein, after seeking and taking legal advice, deliberately purchased a stock of whisky, beer, etc., procured state and Federal licenses, opened a "store" in that city, and commenced selling his stock, in defiance of the law and the ordinance. Having voluntarily gotten himself into this predicament, he now invokes the aid of equity to extricate him therefrom, upon the plea that his business will be ruined, without authority of law, unless he is afforded this relief. He deliberately undertook to test the validity of both the local law and ordinance of Sycamore, by voluntarily and knowingly engaging in the business which they prohibited. He has ample opportunity to make this test in the courts having jurisdiction over criminal matters, and a court of equity will not invade their domain in his behalf.

A case which is almost the exact counterpart of this one is that of Burnett v. Craig, 30 Ala. 185, 68 Am. Dec. 115, in which there was a bill for injunction, which alleged that the town council of Cahaba had passed an ordinance fixing a license for retailing within its incorporate limits; that the complainant had obtained a state license, and, acting upon legal advice that the ordinance was illegal, had opened a store in that town, and commenced retailing spirituous liquors; that he was thereupon arrested for violating the ordinance, and fined and imprisoned; that he had instituted a proceeding, which was still pending, to test the ordinance; and that the council still threatened to fine and imprison him as long as he persisted in carrying on his business. The prayer was that the municipal authorities be enjoined until the validity of the ordinance was determined by the legal proceedings. The bill was dismissed, in the court below, for want of equity; and the case was carried to the supreme court, where the judgment of the lower court was affirmed, the higher court holding that "chancery . . . [will not] restrain quasi criminal proceedings on the part of the municipal authorities [of a municipal corporation] for repeated violations of an alleged invalid ordinance." This case was subsequently referred to in Port of Mobile v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ala. 115, as not being at all in conflict with the decision rendered in that case.

The case made by the plaintiff in the court below falling within the general and well-established rule applicable to cases in which an injunction is sought to restrain criminal or quasi criminal proceedings, the judge committed no error in refusing to grant a temporary injunction.

Judgment affirmed.

All the justices concur, except Cobb, J., absent for providential cause.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, ex rel.
Edward C. AKIN, Attorney General,

v.

Joseph KIPLEY, Superintendent of Police et al.

SAME

v.

Adolph KRAUS et al., Civil Service Commissioners.

(171 Ill. 44.)

1. Authorizing civil service commissioners to make rules for the examination of persons applying for appointments to public office does not delegate to them legislative power.
2. The legislature may select any means for the administration of a municipal government which it thinks best adapted to that end, and may provide for the election of municipal officers by the people, or authorize any officers or persons to fill the offices by appointment.
3. A law providing that appointments to municipal offices or positions shall be made according to merit and fitness, and that such merit and fitness must be ascertained by competitive examination, is within the power of the legislature.
4. Judicial power is not delegated to civil service commissioners by giving them authority to investigate complaints against officers and matters as to the enforcement of the civil service law with the right to administer oaths and secure the attendance of witnesses by subpoena, and providing that a court may compel obedience to such subpoena.
5. Issues in a proceeding for contempt by disobeying an order of court do not require trial by jury.
6. The trial of charges against officers for their removal is not within the constitutional provision for trial by jury.
7. A public office, or the prospective fees of an office, are not the property of the incumbent within the constitutional provision against depriving a man of property.
8. The constitutional provision for trial by jury does not apply to special summary jurisdictions unknown to the common law and not providing for that mode of trial.
9. A statute to operate only in cities which adopt it by vote of the people is not unconstitutional as special legislation.

10. The disqualification from holding office for five years, prescribed by § 35 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895 as a punishment for conviction under the preceding section, so far as that punishment is authorized without an indictment, is in violation of Const. art. 2, § 8, requiring indictment for criminal offenses except where the punishment is "by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary."
11. An unconstitutional provision for disqualifying a person convicted under civil service law from holding office can be eliminated without invalidating its other provisions.
12. The words "heads of any principal department of the city," in § 11 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895, excluding such heads of departments from the classified service, refer to heads of the departments as they existed at the time when the act was passed, and do not extend to subordinates, even where the department has but one head.
13. An officer whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council, even though he be a subordinate in one of the principal departments of the city, is excluded from the classified service by § 11 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895, if the office had been created and was in existence when the act was passed.
14. Ordinances to be valid must be reasonable, and must spring from an honest exercise of legislative discretion.
15. An ordinance which purports to change certain subordinate officers into heads of principal department, and require their appointments to be confirmed by the city council in order to remove them from the classified service for which appointments must be made by examination under Illinois civil service act of 1895, and place them in the list of those exempt from examination, which includes heads of principal departments and officers whose nominations must be confirmed by the city council, is invalid as an attempt to nullify the statute.

(Phillips, Ch. J., and Boggs, J., dissent from proposition 12.)

(December 22, 1897.)*

*A writ of error to take this case to the Supreme Court of the United States was dismissed by that court on April 18, 1898.

NOTE.—For constitutionality of civil service laws, see also Rogers v. Buffalo (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 379; People, McClelland, v. Roberts (N. Y.) 81 L. R. 41 L. R. A.

A. 309; Re Keymer (N. Y.) 35 L. R. A. 447, and Chittenden v. Wurster (N. Y.) 37 L. R. A. 808.

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel respondents to carry out the provisions of the civil service law. Granted.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

At the June term, 1897, of this court, to wit, on June 1, 1897, the attorney general filed a motion for leave to file an original petition for mandamus. Leave was granted to file the petition, and it was so filed on June 2, 1897. The petition prays for summons for Joseph Kiple, superintendent of police of Chicago, and Adolph Kraus, Dudley Winston, and Hempstead Washburne, civil service commissioners, requiring them to answer the petition. The petition alleges that vacancies exist in the positions of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police; that such positions have not been filled in accordance with the terms of the "Act to Regulate the Civil Service of Cities;" that upon the occurrence of such vacancies, it was the duty of the superintendent of police, as the head of the department of police of the city of Chicago, to notify the civil service commissioners of said city of such vacancies; that, upon such notification, it was the duty of said commissioners to submit to the said superintendent of police the names of not more than three applicants in each grade or class next below the grade or class in which the vacancy existed, for promotion to such vacancies; that said superintendent of police claims the power to fill vacancies in the positions of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police in said city; that, in violation of the provisions of said act, said superintendent has assumed to fill some of such vacancies by appointing persons not in the classified lists formulated by said civil service commission, and not designated or selected by the said commission for appointment or promotion; that said superintendent has attempted to appoint one Lyman Lewis as assistant superintendent of police, and one John J. Harkness as inspector of police. The petition further alleges the passage of the "Act to Regulate the Civil Service of Cities," on March 20, 1895; the adoption of the same by the city of Chicago at the general city election held on April 2, 1895; the proclamation of George B. Swift, then mayor of said city, issued on July 1, 1895, declaring the adoption of said act, and that the same was in full force after the date of said proclamation; the appointment by said Swift, as mayor, on July 1, 1895, of three civil service commissioners under said act, to wit, John M. Clark, Robert A. Waller, and Christoph Hotz; the qualification of said commissioners; and the adoption by said commissioners of certain "Civil Service Rules," which rules are appended as an exhibit to said petition. The petition further alleges that on April 6, 1897, Carter H. Harrison was elected mayor of said city, as the successor to said Swift, and qualified as such mayor; that thereafter said Waller resigned his position as one of said civil service commissioners, and said Clark and Hotz were removed from said commission by the said Carter H. Harrison, mayor; and the respondents Winston, Kraus, and Washburne were appointed commissioners in place of said Clark, Waller, and Hotz, and have duly qualified and are acting as such commissioners. The petition also alleges that the rules of the first board of commissioners, which were adopted as aforesaid, have not been altered or changed; that, by such rules the old board of commissioners, in the year 1895, classified the offices of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police, and thereby brought them within the terms and provisions of said civil service act; that by an opinion in writing addressed to the mayor, and signed by the respondents, who constitute the present board of commissioners, and promulgated on or about May 22, 1897, the positions of assistant superintendent of police and inspectors of police were held by the present board of commissioners not to be required to be classified under said act, and to be exempt from the rules and regulations of said commissioners. The petition also sets forth ordinances of the city of Chicago, showing that, before and at the time of the passage of the civil service act, there was established an executive department of the municipal government of Chicago, known as the department of police, embracing the superintendent of police and other officials; that there was created the office of superintendent of police, who should be the head of said department of police, and should hold his office for the term of two years, and until his successor should be appointed and qualified. The ordinances referred to in the petition also provide that said superintendent of police shall be appointed by the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the city council. It is also alleged in the petition that, prior to the passage of said civil service act, ordinances had been adopted by the city council of Chicago relating to the department of public works, the department of health, and other departments, by which a head of each department was established in terms similar to the provisions relating to the department of police. The petition represents that on April 15, 1897, the respondent Joseph Kiple was, by Carter H. Harrison, mayor of said city, appointed superintendent of police, and was afterwards duly confirmed by the city council, and qualified as such superintendent, and caused the city to be divided, or accepted a division of said city theretofore made, into four divisions and fifteen districts, and assigned, or recognized as having been assigned, to each division an inspector of police, and to each district a captain of police. The petition prays that a writ of mandamus may issue to the said Joseph Kiple, as superintendent of police, directing and commanding him to notify the civil service commissioners of vacancies existing in the positions of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police in said city, and to said Kraus, Winston, and Washburne, as such civil service commissioners, commanding them to submit to said Kiple, as such superintendent of police, the names of not more than three applicants for promotion for each vacancy from the grade next below that in which such vacancy or vacancies exist, etc.

41 L. R. A.

On June 14, 1897, the respondent Kiple filed a separate answer, in which, among other things, he set up that the said civil service act was unconstitutional and void. The said an-answer admits that the present civil service commissioners, on May 22, 1897, promulgated the opinion mentioned in the petition, holding that the positions of assistant superintendent of police and inspectors of police were not required to be classified under said civil service act, and were exempt from the rules and regulations of said commissioners. The answer avers that the true construction of the third and eleventh sections of said act, if the same have any force or validity, is stated in the opinion of May 22, 1897, a copy of which opinion is annexed to the answer and made a part thereof. The answer also adopts and makes a part thereof a certain opinion dated May 5, 1897, given by Charles S. Thornton, corporation counsel of said city, to the said Carter H. Harrison, mayor, therein holding that said positions of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police, and other subordinate positions in the department of public works, of buildings, of health, of fire, and of police, are not required to be classified under said act, and are exempt from its provisions, and from the rules and regulations of the commissioners. The answer of the respondent Kipley avers that the said respondent has followed the construction of the provisions of said act as given in the opinions aforesaid. The answer further sets up that the respondent neither admits nor denies that, by the rules referred to in the petition, the first board of civil service commissioners for the year 1895 classified the offices of assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police, as stated in the petition; but in his answer the said Kipley positively denies that the said positions were by said rules, or could be, brought within the terms and provisions of said civil service act. The answer furthermore admits the existence of the vacancies in the department of police referred to in the petition, and that the said respondent Kipley has caused the same to be filled. On June 15, 1897, the people, by the attorney general, demurred to the answer of the respondent Kipley.

On June 14, 1897, the respondents Kraus, Washburne, and Winston, civil service commissioners, aforesaid, filed their answer to the petition, and filed and annexed thereto a copy of the answer filed by them in another proceeding for mandamus instituted against them, as civil service commissioners, at the same time at which the present proceeding was instituted, but to which the said Kipley was not made a party defendant. The said civil service commissioners also adopt, as a part of their answer, the answer filed herein by said Kipley, except so much of Kipley's answer as attacks the validity and constitutionality of said civil service act. The answer of said commissioners admits the appointment of Lyman Lewis as assistant superintendent of police, and John J. Harkness as inspector of police by the said Kipley, and alleges that, as said Lewis and Harkness are not made parties to the petition, the petition is defective. The answer of the respondents Kraus, Winston, and Washburne, in the proceedings for mandamus commenced against them alone, and without joining Kipley, and which is made a part of their answer in the present proceeding, refers to and in-dorses and adopts the said opinion promulgated by them, and addressed to the mayor, on May 22, 1897. The answer of the commissioners, by the adoption of said opinion, and of their answer in the other proceeding, claim that certain positions in the police, fire, and health departments, and in the departments of buildings, and of public works, in the city of Chicago, other than the heads of those departments, as mentioned in the ordinances referred to in the petition, are not required to be classified under the civil service act, and are exempt from its provisions. The positions claimed by the commissioners in their answer to be thus exempt and not subject to classification are, in the department of public works, the following positions, to wit, secretary to commissioner of public works, city engineer, superintendent of streets, superintendent of water, superintendent of sewerage, superintendent of special assessments, superintendent of maps; in the department of buildings, secretary to commissioner of buildings, deputy commissioner of buildings; in the department of health, assistant commissioner of health, in the department of police, secretary of the department of police, assistant superintendent of police, inspector of police; in the fire department, first assistant fire marshal, superintendent of city telegraph, fire inspector, secretary of fire department, etc. On June 15, 1897, the people, by the attorney general, filed a demurrer to the answer of the respondents who are civil service commissioners.

Subsequently, after the adjournment of this court in the June term, 1897, and on the 28th day of June, A. D. 1897, the city council of the city of Chicago passed an ordinance entitled "An ordinance to designate certain public officials who shall be selected by the mayor with the concurrence of the council," which ordinance is as follows:

"Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Chicago:

"Sec. 1. That the following list of public officials shall be designated as 'Heads of Principal Departments,' as said term is used in § 11 of 'An Act to Regulate the Civil Service of Cities,' approved and in full force March 20, 1895, and shall be nominated by the mayor, and shall be confirmed by the city council, viz.: City engineer, superintendent of streets, superintendent of water, superintendent of sewerage or sewers, superintendent of special assessments, superintendent of water pipe extension, superintendent of city pipe yards, secretary of police department, assistant superintendent of police, fifteen captains of police, four inspectors of police, chief sidewalk inspector, assessor of the water department, district foreman of street repairs, district foreman of water-pipe extension, district foreman of sewer cleaning, district foreman for street cleaning.

"Sec. 2. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"Sec. 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

This ordinance was approved by the mayor, Carter H. Harrison, on July 1, 1897.

On July 10, 1897, the respondent Joseph Kipley, superintendent of police, filed a plea in this court, setting up that since the filing of his answer to the petition herein, and since the last adjournment of the court, the city council of Chicago had adopted the said ordinance of June 28, 1897. The plea then sets forth said last-mentioned ordinance in full, and alleges that the same is in full force and effect, and that thereby, upon the respondent's failure to notify said civil service commissioners, and to submit to them the appointment of certain subordinate police officers of said city, they have been if they ever were within the same, wholly taken away from and removed out of the control, jurisdiction, and power of the said civil service commissioners, and that such matters are now expressly excepted by the terms of said ordinance from the force and effect of the civil service act. The plea then quotes in full §§ 3 and 11 of said act, and submits said last-named ordinance to the court, to be read and construed in view of said sections. On October 18, 1897, the attorney general filed a demurrer to said plea.

Messrs. Smith, Blair, & Smith and Murry Nelson, Jr., with Mr. Edward C. Akin, Attorney General, for petitioners:

The proceeding of mandamus, as established by statute, is an action at law.

Dement v. Rokker, 126 Ill. 174; People, Hemstreet, v. Crabb, 156 Ill. 155.

The substantive allegations of the petition are not denied, and therefore are admitted.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274. The act concerning civil service in cities is constitutional.

Owners of Lands v. People, Stookey, 118 Ill. 296; People, Kern, v. Chase, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105; Opinion of the Justices, 188 Mass. 601.

The act is remedial, and should be favorably construed with reference to the evils that prompted it.

Lieber, Hermeneutics, Ham. ed. 159; Potter, Dwarrr. Stat. pp. 73, 231; Wolcott v. Pond, 19 Conn. 597; Soby v. People, 134 Ill. 66; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heflin, 65 Ill. 366; Rigg v. Willon, 13 Ill. 15. 54 Am. Dec. 419; Streeter v. People, 69 Ill. 595; Re Keymer, 148 N. Y. 219, 35 L. R. A. 447; Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579; Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 345, 37 L. R. A. 809; United States v. Curtis, 12 Fed. Rep. 824; Ex parte Curtis, 106 U. S. 871, 27 L. ed. 232.

The civil service act should not be rendered meaningless, or the city council permitted to defeat its purpose.

Soby v. People, 134 Ill. 66; East St. Louis v. Renshaw, 153 Ill. 491; Hawes v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 653, 30 L. R. A. 225; Bloomington v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 134 Ill. 451; Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405; Cairo v. Feuchter, 159 Ill. 155; Caldwell v. Alton, 33 Ill. 416, 85 Am. Dec. 282; Bloomington v. Wahl, 46 Ill. 489; Title Guarantee & T. Co. v. Chicago, 162 Ill. 505; Palmer v. Danville, 154 Ill. 156; Lake View v. Tate, 180 Ill. 247, 6 L. R. A. 268; Huesing v. Rock Island, 128 Ill. 465.

Mandamus is the proper remedy.

Brokaw v. Blooming Twp. Highway Comrs. 130 Ill. 482; People, Peair, v. Upper Alton School Dist. Bd. of Edu. 127 Ill. 618; Dement v. Rokker, 126 Ill. 174; People, German Ins. Co., v. Getzendaner, 137 Ill. 284; Pike County Comrs. 41 L. R. A.

v. People, Metz, 11 Ill. 202; Swift v. Klein, 163 Ill. 269; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274.

Mr. Edwin Burritt Smith, also for petitioners:

The vital question presented by these important cases is this: Have municipal authorities power to nullify the civil service law? If what has been attempted in Chicago by the present city administration is sustained here, a single additional ordinance of a few lines will, as to that city, annul the act.

The rule is elementary that municipal authorities must act within the scope of their authority and in accord with the laws of the state.

Alton v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 45; Agnew v. Brall, 124 Ill. 312; Huesing v. Rock Island, 128 Ill. 465.

An ordinance must be reasonable, and if it is unreasonable, unjust, and oppressive the courts will hold it invalid and void. . . . The question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a municipal ordinance is one for the decision of the court, and in determining that question the court will have regard to all existing circumstances or contemporaneous conditions, the objects sought to be obtained, and the necessity or want of necessity for its adoption.

Hawes v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 653, 30 L. R. A. 225.

Ordinances, to be valid, must be reasonable, —not unfair and oppressive,—and must spring from an honest exercise of legislative discretion.

Bloomington v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 134 Ill. 451.

The real question upon this ordinance is whether the provision for the nomination by the mayor of the "officials" named and for their confirmation by the council is a valid exercise of municipal power, and operates to exclude them from the classified service.

The purpose accomplished by the ordinance —the object attained—may always be considered, indeed, must be, in determining the validity of the ordinance.

Smith v. McDowell, 148 Ill. 56, 22 L. R. A. 393.

The only possible construction of § 11, which is not destructive of the law, is strictly to confine the exemption of "heads of any principal department" to the heads of the principal departments of the city government as they existed when the act was adopted, and such few similar additional departments, if any, as may be reasonably created from time to time to meet the needs of a growing city.

In New York, where by the Constitution all appointments are required to be made according to merit, to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by competitive examination, it is a question of law whether competitive examination for appointment to a given position is practicable. Under this provision the supreme court of that state has announced that "competitive examination is the rule, and 'pass' examination and exemption from examination the exception."

Chittenden v. Wurster, 14 App. Div. 483.

Our statute assumes that competitive examination is practicable as to all positions in the civil service, except those named in § 11 of the act.

Competitive examination is the rule; exemption from it is the exception. The presumption is that all positions are within the classified service, unless clearly excepted by § 11 of the act. The ordinance is unreasonable and void.

The merit system of appointment securely rests upon its direct advantage to the public service.

The act secures to all the right to compete for public employment, the right of freedom of contract with the largest employer of skilled and unskilled labor. No one has a right to be or remain employed by the public, but all have an equal right to compete for public employment. One of the main objects of the civil service law is to preserve this right.

This court has always jealously guarded the fundamental rights of citizenship in Illinois.

Bracerille Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 23 L. R. A. 840; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79.

These fundamental doctrines have been given full effect by this court in sustaining the right of citizens to compete for private employment. But all citizens, having the proper requirements of age, health, and moral character, have a right to compete for public as well as private employment. The spoils system everywhere denies and ignores this right.

The merit system is in entire accord with democratic institutions.

Nothing short of the merit system is really democratic. Nothing less than the open competition which it provides can secure to all citizens their equal right to compete for public employment.

An earnest desire for the general welfare would suggest a fair trial of this new system. A strict and full enforcement of the legislation already enacted in this state on that subject would be the only means of making the experiment.

Rogers v. Buffalo, 128 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579.

Experience has demonstrated that competitive examinations have greatly benefited the public service.

People, McClelland, v. Roberts, 148 N. Y. 864, 51 L. R. A. 899; Re Keymer, 148 N. Y. 219, 35 L. R. A. 447.

The duty rests upon the legislature and the courts to enforce the civil service provision of the Constitution in their letter and spirit.

Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 345, 37 L. R. A. 809.

In public life, wherever the semi barbarous maxim, "To the victor belongs the spoils," is recognized, the discretion of the appointing officer, to be exercised only in the public interest, is a myth. He merely registers and legalizes appointments to office which have been made for him by the irresponsible chief or chiefs of his party machine.

Rogers v. Buffalo, 128 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579.

Messrs. Thomas A. Moran, John W. Eila, and Levy Mayer, for respondents:

The demurrers in each case must be carried back to the petition.

41 L. R. A.

People, Hemstreet, v. Crabb, 156 Ill. 155.

In the case against the superintendent of police the petition does not make a case for relief against these respondents. No present necessity for relief is shown.

North v. University of Illinois Trustees, 137 Ill. 296; People, Morgan, v. Curyea, 16 Ill. 547; Cristman v. Peck, 90 Ill. 150.

There is not sufficient showing that the acts required to be done by these respondents fall within their legal duties.

People, Rinard, v. Mount Morris, 145 Ill. 427; Swigert v. Hamilton County, 130 Ill. 538; People, Montony, v. Elgin, 66 Ill. 507; People, Phillips, v. Lueb, 85 Ill. 484.

Future or contingent cases cannot be anticipated on mandamus. It is not a substitute for a mandatory injunction.

2 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 1385.

The occasion for action by these respondents has not yet arrived, as shown by the petition. Civil Service Act, §§ 9, 10, 18.

This defect goes to the whole petition.

People, Harless, v. Yates, 40 Ill. 126; High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. § 440.

The petition is defective in form.

In the case against the commissioners the petition asks more than in any event it shows grounds for demanding, and is bad.

Reg. v. Twitty, 2 Salk. 434; State, Rader, v. Union Twp. Committee, 43 N. J. L. 518; People, Poughkeepsie Highway Comrs., v. Dutchess County Supers. 1 Hill, 50.

This being an original case in this court the rules of the common law apply.

People, Cunningham, v. Thistlewood, 103 Ill. 189; High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. § 450; People, Hemstreet, v. Crabb, 156 Ill. 155; People, Rinard, v. Mount Morris, 145 Ill. 427.

There is no doubt whatever as to the civil service law being constitutional.

The legislature has power to institute such a system of appointments to inferior municipal county or state offices and places of employment.

People, Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 562; Opinion of the Justices, 138 Mass. 601, 145 Mass. 537.

The civil service law is not local or special legislation.

People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 601, 56 Am. Rep. 793; West Chicago Park Comrs. v. McMullen, 184 Ill. 170, 10 L. R. A. 215; Cummings v. Chicago, 144 Ill. 566.

The power of investigation given to the commissioners, whether for general purposes under the act, or for purposes of removal from office, is not judicial in the sense that powers exercisable only by the courts are conferred on the commission.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 601, 56 Am. Rep. 793; Re Meador, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 817; Re Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 242; State, Atty. Gen., v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98; Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 872; Noyes v. Bybee, 45 Conn. 882; DeCamp v. Archibald, 50 Ohio St. 625; People, Steitz, v. Rice, 57 Hun. 62; People, Secretary of State, v. State Ins. Co. 19 Mich. 895; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 612, 2 L.

R. A. 289, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 712, 37 L. ed. 912; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 106; Stern v. People, St. Clair County, 102 Ill. 550; People, Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 562; Cameron v. Parker, 2 Okla. 277; Fuller v. Ellis, 98 Mich. 104; McMaster v. Herald, 56 Kan. 231.

The powers of the legislature are plenary, and no limitation appearing in the Constitution to the contrary, all agencies necessary to carry out the administration of the law may be established.

People, Peoria County, v. Hill, 163 Ill. 186, 38 L. R. A. 634; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 476, 38 L. ed. 1057, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545; Re Gross, 78 Fed. Rep. 107; Re Chapman, 166 U. S. 661, 41 L. ed. 1154; Re Meador, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 317; Stunwood v. Green, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 184; People, Steitz, v. Rice, 57 Hun. 62; Re Llewellyn, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 631; Re Superintendent of Poor, 6 App. Div. 144; Re Lippman, 8 Ben. 95.

There is no infringement of the right of trial by jury in the proceeding before a circuit court to compel the giving of testimony. That is a purely statutory proceeding, civil in its nature.

Re Strouse, 1 Sawy. 605; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 476, 38 L. ed. 1057, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545; Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 612; People, Peoria County, v. Hill, 163 Ill. 186, 38 L. R. A. 634.

The general legislative construction of the constitutional question involved is in favor of the power, acts establishing it being common in all the states.

People, Steitz, v. Rice, 57 Hun. 62; Re Superintendent of Poor, 6 App. Div. 144; Re Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 242; Opinion of the Justices, 138 Mass. 601; Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548; Woods v. Gary, 25 Wash. L. Rep. 591.

Mr. Charles S. Thornton for respondent Joseph Kipley.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The civil service commissioners, who are respondents in this case, do not set up in their answer the unconstitutionality of the civil service act, nor do they adopt that part of the answer of the respondent Kipley, the superintendent of police, which attacks the constitutionality of the law. But the respondent Kipley, in his answer, expressly alleges that the act is unconstitutional, and relies upon its unconstitutionality as a defense to the matters and things set up in the petition. By the demurrer filed by the petitioner to the answer of Kipley, the question of the constitutionality of the law is directly raised. The plea filed on July 10, 1897, setting up the ordinance of June 28, 1897, is a plea puis darrein continuance. That plea relies upon the ordinance of June 28, 1897, as a defense, and, under the technical rules applicable to such a plea, it may be that the defenses set up in the answer of Kipley are superseded, and the substantive averments of the petition confessed. It has been held that, where a plea puis darrein continuance is filed, everything is confessed except the matter contested by the plea. East St. Louis v. Renshaw, 153 Ill. 491. In this view it would seem to follow that the question of the constitutionality of the law, as raised in the answer of Kipley, has been waived by the filing of the plea puis. Counsel for the respondent Kipley insists that, in an original proceeding by mandamus in this court, the question of the constitutionality of the act can be raised at any time before the issuance of the peremptory writ, irrespective of the filing of the plea puis darrein continuance. He contends that the court will not in such a proceeding enforce by mandamus an unconstitutional law, if, at any time in the progress of the proceedings, such unconstitutionality is made apparent, and is brought to the attention of the court. This contention receives some support from the following remark made by this court in People, Rindard, v. Mount Morris, 145 Ill. 427: "It has been held that defects in substance in the petition may be taken advantage of at any time before granting the peremptory writ." Without determining, however, whether the contention thus made by counsel is absolutely correct or not, we deem it proper to dispose of the question of the constitutionality of the act, in view of the fact that the counsel for the respondent Kipley furnishes us with an elaborate argument against its constitutionality, and the petitioner and the respondents who are civil service commissioners present equally elaborate arguments in favor of its constitutionality. The subject is thus urged upon our attention by all the parties to this controversy. The civil service act, passed by the legislature of this state on March 20, 1895, is not the first law of its kind which has appeared in this country. Such a law has been passed by the Congress of the United States to be applied to the civil service under the Federal government. Statutes of the same kind have also been adopted in the states of Massachusetts and New York. The civil service law, which was in force in the state of New York for more than ten years before the year 1894, had so commended itself to popular approval, and had been so beneficent in its results, that its underlying principle was embodied in the new or amended and revised Constitution of that state, adopted by the people in 1894, and which went into effect on January 1, 1895. The provision upon this subject in the New York Constitution of 1894 is as follows: "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and of all the civil divisions thereof, including cities and villages, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive. . . . Laws shall be made to provide for the enforcement of this section." Const. art. 5, § 9. The evils sought to be remedied by legislation of this character are well known and well understood. These evils are such as grow out of what is generally called "the spoils system" in the matter of appointments to public office. This system rests upon what Mr. Justice Peckham, now of the Supreme Court of the United States, then a member of the court of appeals of the state of New York, speaking for the latter court in Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579, calls "the semibarbarous maxim that to the victors belong the spoils." Under the system thus designated as "the spoils system," party service and party fealty are made the tests for appointments to office. Wherever this system prevails, political work done by the applicant, and his supposed power to do more, are regarded as the chief reasons for his appointment to office. Public office is thus made to be the reward for political work. All the offices are "parceled out by the chiefs of the victorious party to their faithful followers in recognition of past political services or in expectation of future support of the same nature. Possession of office, under such a system, is to be the reward of party fidelity and party service." Rogers v. Buffalo, 128 N. Y. 178, 9 L. R. A. 579. Where an appointment is made under the system in question, the officer making it is apt to ignore any sense of personal or official responsibility to the people, and to substitute in its stead a feeling of responsibility to his party only. The appointments to offices are such as the leading men therein choose to ask for. Rogers v. Buffalo, 128 N. Y. 178, 9 L. R. A. 579. Where civil service laws have been adopted, they have been so adopted for the purpose of doing away with the evils which necessarily result from "the spoils system." Those evils have been fitly characterized as inefficiency, extravagance, the interruption of public business by place hunters, corruption of the electoral franchise, and political assessments. A distinguished writer on the Constitutional History of the United States has spoken of the maxim, "To the victors belong the spoils," as being "an inviolable principle of American politicians," and he says: "It is owing only to the astonishing vitality of the people of the United States, and to the altogether unsurpassed and unsurpassable favor of their natural conditions, that the state has not succumbed under the onerous burden of the curse." 2 Von Holst, Const. Hist. of U. S. 26. To do away with the onerous burden of this curse in the cities of Illinois, the act of March 20, 1895, was passed by the legislature of this state. The foundation principles of the act are that appointments to municipal offices or employments must be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by competitive examinations, free to all, and that promotions from lower to higher grades in the public service must be made upon the basis of merit. That this is so will appear from the examination of the various provisions of the act. Section 8 of the act provides for the classification of all the offices and places of employment in any city which has adopted the act, with reference to the examinations therein provided for, with certain exceptions, and that the offices and places, so classified by the civil service commission, shall constitute the classified civil service of the city. Section 6 provides that all applicants for offices or places in such classified service, with certain exceptions, shall be subjected to examination, which shall be public, competitive, and free to all citizens of the United States, with specified limitations as to residence, age, health, habits, and moral character; that such examinations shall be practical in their character, and shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the positions to which they seek to be appointed, and shall include tests of physical qualifications and health, and, when appropriate, of manual skill; that no questions in any examination shall relate to political or religious opinions or affiliations. Section 8 provides that from these examinations the commission shall prepare a register for each grade or class of positions, in the classified service of the city, of the persons whose general average standing, upon examination for such grade or class, is not less than the minimum fixed by the rules of such commission, and who are otherwise eligible; and that such persons shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative excellence as determined by examination, without reference to priority of time of examination. Section 9 provides that the commission shall, by its rules, provide for promotions in such classified service on the basis of ascertained merit and seniority in service and examination, and shall provide, "in all cases, where it is practicable," that vacancies shall be filled by promotion; that all examinations for promotion shall be competitive among such members of the next lower rank as desire to submit themselves to such examination; that it shall be the duty of the commission to submit to the appointing power the names of not more than three applicants for each promotion having the highest rating. Section 10 provides that "the head of the department" or office, in which a position classified under this act is to be filled, shall notify said commission of that fact, and said commission shall certify to the appointing officer the name and address of the candidate standing highest upon the register for the class or grade to which said position belongs, with a certain exception in regard to laborers; that the appointing officer shall notify the commission of each position to be filled separately, and shall fill such place by the appointment of the person certified to him by said commissioner therefor, etc. Section 34 provides that any person who shall wilfully, or through culpable negligence, violate any of the provisions of this act, or any rule, promulgated in accordance with the provisions thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $50, and not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

In 1884 the state of Massachusetts passed a civil service act, whose general provisions are substantially the same as those of the Illinois act now under consideration. The supreme court of Massachusetts, being requested by the house of representatives of that state to give their opinion upon the constitutionality of certain provisions of the act, held that the legislature has the constitutional right to provide for the appointment of civil service commissioners, and to delegate to them the power to make rules, not inconsistent with existing laws, to guide and control their discretion, and the discretion of the officers of the cities in whom the appointing power is vested; that the duty of determining and ascertaining the qualifications of such officers and servants cannot be performed directly by the legislature, but must be delegated to certain officers or agents; that it is not a delegation of power to enact laws, but merely a delegation of administrative powers and duties; that there was no provision of the Constitution which prevented the legislature from enacting that such rules, when duly made, should be binding upon the officers and citizens to whom they apply, and that they might be enforced by suitable penalties; that the power of the legislature to make or to authorize local laws for the administration of local affairs was beyond question. Opinion of the Justices, 138 Mass. 601.

In 1883, the legislature of the state of New York passed a civil service law which is similar in most of its features to the Illinois act. In Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579, it was held that the provision of the act which creates a board of commissioners consisting of two or more persons, and which provides that not more than a certain proportion shall be taken from one party, does not amount to an arbitrary exclusion from office, or to a general regulation requiring qualifications not mentioned in the state Constitution, and is not unconstitutional; and that a provision therein which required an applicant for appointment to a position in a public office to show his fitness therefor was not an illegal test, within the meaning of the Constitution. In the course of the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Peckham in the latter case he says: "Looking at it as a matter of common sense, we are quite sure that the framers of our organic law never intended to oppose a constitutional barrier to the right of the people through their legislature to enact laws which would have for their sole object the possession of fit and proper qualifications for the performance of the duties of a public office on the part of him who desired to be appointed to such office. So long as the means adopted to accomplish such end are appropriate therefor, they must be within the legislative power. The idea cannot be entertained for one moment that an intelligent people would ever consent to so bind themselves with constitutional restrictions on the power of their own representatives as to prevent the adoption of any means by which to secure, if possible, honest and intelligent service in public office. . . . Statutes looking only to the purpose of ascertaining whether candidates for an appointive office are possessed of those qualifications which are necessary for a fit and intelligent discharge of the duties pertaining to such office are not dangerous in their nature, and in their execution they are not liable to abuse in any manner involving the liberties of the people."

The Illinois act contains a similar provision to that in the New York act, namely, that not more than two members of the civil service commission shall, at the time of appointment, be members of the same political party. Section 31 of the Illinois act provides that no comptroller, or other auditing officer of a city which has adopted the act, shall approve the payment of or be in any manner concerned in paying, any salary or wages to any person for services as an officer or employee of such city, unless such person is occupying an office or place of employment according to the provisions of law, and is entitled to payment therefor. Section 32 provides that no paymaster, treasurer, or other officer or agent of a city which has adopted the act shall wilfully pay, or be in any manner concerned in paying, any person any salary or wages for services, as an officer or employee of such city, unless such person is occupying an office or place of employment according to the provisions of law, and is entitled to payment therefor. The New York act provided that clerks and other subordinates in the civil service of the state should be appointed or selected from lists produced, as therein provided, after competitive examination, and that it should be unlawful for the comptroller to pay the compensation of any clerk in the civil service who had not been appointed pursuant to the provisions of the law, and whose name had not been certified to him by the civil service commission. In People, McClelland, v. Roberts, 148 N. Y. 360, 81 L. R. A. 399, the facts showed that the relator was appointed to a certain position without having passed the civil service examination, and that his name had never been certified to the comptroller by the civil service commission, and that for that reason the comptroller refused to pay the claim. It was there held that the relator was not entitled to a mandamus to compel the comptroller to pay him the salary attached to such position, in the absence of a certificate from the civil service commission that he had been duly appointed pursuant to the civil service act; and the act was there held to be constitutional, the court saying: "The power of the legislature to enact the law, as it appears on the statute book, has never been doubted or questioned." Again, in Chittenden v. Wurster, 153 N. Y. 845, 87 L. R. A. 809, which was an action brought by taxpayers of the city of Brooklyn to enjoin the fiscal officers of the city from paying the salaries earned by them to certain employees, who were appointed to their positions without competitive examinations, it was held that the New York act, with the exception of a provision which exempted certain soldiers and sailors from competitive examination where the compensation did not exceed $4 per day, was not repugnant to the Constitution of the state. See also Peck v. Bolknap, 130 N. Y. 394; Re Keymer, 148 N. Y. 219, 85 L. R. A. 447.

The act passed by the legislature of Illinois on March 20, 1895, is not unconstitutional in requiring examinations as therein provided for, as tests for appointments to public office, nor in requiring promotions to be made in the manner therein specified, nor in attaching a penalty to the violation of the provisions of the act. The act does not delegate legislative power to the civil service commissioners by authorizing them to make the rules therein provided for. In this state, when the general assembly creates a municipal government, it has the power to provide the manner of filling the offices of such government. The legislature may select any means for the administration of the municipal government which it thinks best adapted to that end. It may provide for the election of municipal officers by the people, or may authorize any officers or persons to fill the offices by appointment. People, Dunham, v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558. It has therefore the right to enact a law which provides that appointments to mu-municipal offices or positions shall be made according to merit and fitness, and that such merit and fitness must be ascertained by competitive examination. In most instances, before the passage of the civil service act, the municipal officers, having the power to make appointments to office, removed their appointees at their own pleasure. It is certainly not a violation of the organic law to require them to conform to and obey regulations which make merit and fitness the necessary qualifications for office.

It is contended, however, by counsel for the respondent Kipley, that the act is unconstitutional and void upon the alleged ground that it delegates to the civil service commissioners the exercise of judicial functions. This contention rests upon the character of the provisions contained in §§ 12, 14, and 38 of the act. Section 12 provides that no officer or employee in the classified civil service of any city, who shall have been appointed under said rules and after said examination, shall be removed or discharged except for cause, upon written charges, and after an opportunity to be heard in his own defense; that such charges shall be investigated by or before said civil service commission, or by or before some officer or board appointed by said commission to conduct such investigation; that the finding and decision of such commission or investigating officer or board, when approved by said commission, shall be forthwith enforced by such officer; that, in the course of an investigation of charges, each member of the commission, and of any board so appointed by it, and any officer so appointed, shall have the power to administer oaths, and shall have power to secure by its subpoena both the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers relevant to such investigation. Section 14 provides that the commission shall investigate the enforcement of the act and of its rules, and the action of the examiners therein provided for, and the conduct and action of the appointees in the classified service in its city, and may inquire as to the nature, tenure, and compensation of all offices and places in the public service thereof, add that, in the course of such investigations, each commissioner shall have power to administer oaths, and said commission shall have the power to secure by its subpoena both the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers relevant to such investigations. Section 38 provides that any person who shall be served with a subpoena to appear and testify or to produce books and papers, etc., under the orders of the commission, in the course of such investigations above specified, and who shall refuse or neglect to appear or to testify or to produce books and papers relevant to said investigation, as commanded in such subpoena, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished as provided in § 34, which has already been referred to; that any circuit court of this state, or any judge thereof, either in term time or vacation upon application of any such commissioner or officer or board, may, in his discretion, compel the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and papers, and giving of testimony before the commission, etc., by attachment for contempt or otherwise, in the same manner as the production of evidence may be compelled before said court.

41 L. R. A.

We regard the question of the constitutionality of the act, so far as its constitutionality is attacked upon the ground that there is a supposed delegation of judicial functions to the civil service commissioners, as settled by the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 88 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545. The 12th section of the Interstate Commerce Act passed by Congress provided (36 Stat. at L. 743, chap. 128) that the interstate commerce commission should have power to require, by subpoena, the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, etc., relating to any matter under investigation; that in case of disobedience to a subpoena the commission might invoke the aid of any circuit court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers and documents under the provisions of said section; that any of the circuit courts of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry was carried on, might, in case of refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of the act, or other persons, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and that any failure to obey such order of the court might be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. In the Brimson Case, 154 U. S. 447, 88 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, it was held that the provisions of said 12th section, as above set forth, were not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States; that the party subpoenaed to testify or to produce books and papers was bound to obey the subpoena if the testimony sought, and the books and papers called for, related to a matter under investigation, which the commission was legally entitled to investigate. The Constitution of the United States provides that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority. . . . to controversies to which the United States shall be a party," etc. Const. art. 3, § 2. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States held that the issue made before the circuit court upon the application of the commission for an order to compel the giving of testimony or the production of books and papers was a "case" or "controversy," within the meaning of the Federal Constitution, which authorized the circuit court to act, and that the judgment of the circuit court rendered in pursuance of such application was none the less judicial in its character because the effect of it was to aid an administrative body in the performance of the duties legally imposed upon it by Congress in execution of a power granted by the Constitution. As we understand the Brimson Case, it also holds that where an act of Congress made the refusal of a witness, duly summoned, to appear and testify before the commission in respect to a matter rightfully committed to that body for examination, an offense against the United States, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, a criminal prosecution or a proceeding by information could be instituted against the party who had committed such offense. The Constitution of Illinois (art. 6, § 12) provides that "the circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction of all causes in law and equity," etc. In the civil service act the commission is authorized to subpoena witnesses to testify and to produce books and papers in the investigation of a matter which is clearly within its power to investigate, for the reasons already stated. This being so, upon the refusal of the witness to obey the subpoena the application of the commission to the circuit court for an order requiring such persons so to appear before the commission and give evidence or produce books and papers would constitute such a case as would authorize the circuit court to act. The judicial function is performed by the court, and not by the commission. The commission is not authorized to punish the party for contempt, but the circuit court, upon the application of the commission, makes the order to produce the papers, and, upon failure to obey the order, inflicts the punishment as for a contempt. There is here no delegation of the judicial functions to the commission, but simply a provision for the exercise of judicial functions by the circuit court. The views here advanced do not conflict with the decision of this court in Puterbaugh v. Smith, 181 Ill. 199, which latter case was decided before this question was passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545. It was held in the Puterbaugh Case that so much of a certain act, entitled "Evidence," as authorized a judge in vacation to punish in a summary manner, by fine and imprisonment, or fine or imprisonment, a person who should refuse to obey a subpoena of a notary public to appear and have his deposition taken, or to subscribe his name to a deposition, was unconstitutional; but the decision in that case was placed upon the ground that the witness there merely acted in contempt of the notary's authority, and not in contempt of the authority of the circuit court. Here, however, the civil service act does not provide for punishment of the party for failing to obey the subpoena of the commission, but for failing to obey the order made by the circuit court. When the application is made by the commission or commissioners, the court is authorized to compel the attendance of witnesses, by attachment for contempt or otherwise, "in the same manner as the production of evidence may be compelled before said court." The orderly course of the proceeding would require that an order should be made requiring the witness to testify, and that it should appear that the witness refused to obey said order, before the punishment for contempt could be inflicted upon him. The phraseology of § 83 involves the making of such order as a preliminary step before the punishment is inflicted. We are of the opinion that the act is not unconstitutional as delegating judicial power to the commission.

41 L. R. A.

But, even if the provision authorizing the commission to make application to the circuit court in the manner stated was unconstitutional, it would not necessarily follow that the whole act should fall because of such unconstitutional provision. Where one provision in an act is in conflict with the Constitution, but is so independent of other provisions that without it the latter are complete, and fully capable of execution, the act will be construed the same as if the void part had never been inserted. Dupee v. Swigert, 127 Ill. 494.

It is claimed by counsel for the respondent Kipley that the law is unconstitutional as violating those sections of the Constitution which secure the right of trial by jury. The right of trial by jury is not violated by the provisions of the civil service act which provide for the summoning of witnesses and the requiring of such witnesses to testify and to produce books, papers, etc., and which further provide that, in the event of their failure to obey the order of the court in this regard, they shall be punished for contempt. The issue presented by these provisions is not one for the determination of the jury. It is an issue of law, exclusively, and not of fact. In matters of contempt a jury is not required by due process of law. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545; Re Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 242.

Counsel also contends that § 12, which provides for the trial of charges against appointees, violates the constitutional right of trial by jury. This is said to be so upon the alleged ground that the office from which the officer or employee is to be removed or discharged in case the charges presented against him are sustained is, with its attending emoluments, the property of the officeholder, and that no man can be deprived of his property without a trial by a jury of his peers. This position is wholly untenable. A public office is not property, nor are the prospective fees of an office the property of its incumbent. An office is a mere right to exercise a public function or employment. It is not the subject of sale, purchase, or encumbrance. The term "office" implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power of the government to the person filling the office. Its duties are to be performed for the benefit of the public, and in the public interest. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 881, 882. In Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94, it was held that a law which authorizes county boards to remove county treasurers from office for certain violations of their duties was not unconstitutional; that the removal of an official from office was not a judicial act, and in that case could be performed by the county board. In the Donahue Case, 100 Ill. 94, the contention that, under the constitutional provision prohibiting any person to be deprived of his property without process of law, a county treasurer could only be deprived of his office by a trial and judgment in a court of law, was held to be wholly untenable. We there said (p. 103): "It is impossible to conceive how, under our form of government, a person can own, or have a title to, a governmental office. Offices are created for the adadministration of public affairs. When a person is inducted into an office, he thereby becomes empowered to exercise its powers and perform its duties, not for his, but for the public benefit. It would be a misnomer and a perversion of terms to say that an incumbent owned an office, or had any title to it." In State, Atty. Gen., v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, the supreme court of Ohio said: "The incumbent of an office has not, under our system of government, any property in it. His right to exercise it is not based upon any contract or grant. It is conferred on him as a public trust to be exercised for the benefit of the public." If the removal of a county official, for cause does not involve the exercise of judicial power, then certainly the removal of a municipal officer is not the exercise of judicial power. State, Atty. Gen., v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98. The legislature has the power to control the municipalities created by it. Such municipalities must look to the state for such charters of government as the legislature shall see fit to provide; and while they have a right to manage their own local concerns and choose their own administrative and police officers, yet this right is subject to such exceptions as the legislative power of the state may see fit to make. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 208 (notes), 227, 231. Therefore the legislature may direct how municipal officers shall be elected or appointed by the cities and villages in the state, and how such officers may be removed. Moreover, the provisions of the civil service act for the removal or discharge of officers or employees upon written charges are purely statutory provisions. The constitutional provision that "the right of trial by jury, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate," was not intended to introduce the right of trial by jury into special, summary jurisdictions, unknown to the common law, and not providing for that mode of trial. People Peoria County, v. Hill, 163 Ill. 186, 36 L. R. A. 634.

It is further claimed that the law is unconstitutional as being special legislation. This contention, also, is without force, as the law itself provides for its operation only in those cities which by a vote of the people may adopt it. Laws of this character are not obnoxious to the constitutional inhibition against special legislation. People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 601, 56 Am. Rep. 798. The present law has been adopted by the people of the city of Chicago.

Counsel for the respondent Kiple also contends that § 35 of the act is unconstitutional. Section 35 provides that "if any person shall be convicted under the next preceding section, any public office or place of public employment, which such person may hold, shall, by force of such conviction, be rendered vacant, and such person shall be incapable of holding any office or place of public employment for the period of five years from the date of such conviction." We are inclined to agree with counsel that the portion of this section which makes the person therein referred to incapable of holding any office or place of public employment for the period of five years from the date of his conviction is unconstitutional. Section 8 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state provides that "no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on indictment of a grand jury, except in cases in which the punishment is by fine, or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary," etc. The act seems to contemplate prosecutions by information for the violations of its provisions. No person can be held to answer for any crime, for which an infamous punishment may be imposed by the court, without presentment or indictment by a grand jury. A crime which subjects the party to a disqualification to hold office in case he is convicted of such crime is an infamous crime. Disqualification from holding office, if inflicted as a punishment for crime, is an infamous punishment. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. ed. 89. Here § 35 of the act provides for punishing the party guilty of violating its provisions by disqualifying him from holding office. This is not a punishment by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary, and is in addition to such punishment by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, or by both fine and imprisonment, as is specified in § 34. So far, therefore, as the act provides for the infliction of punishment by a disqualification to hold office, where the prosecution is by information, and not by indictment, it is in violation of § 8 of article 2 of the Constitution. It is true that § 35 provides that such disqualification shall only be for five years from the date of the conviction, but, as counsel have furnished us with no authority in favor of the position that a limitation of the disqualification to a period of years is different from a disqualification where no such limitation had been fixed, and has presented us, in the briefs, with no reasons or arguments upon the subject, we assume that the disqualification for a limited period is as much an infamous punishment as though it was not subject to any such limitation. But the obnoxious feature which thus exists in § 35 may be eliminated from the act without invalidating its other provisions. With the exception thus indicated, our conclusion is that the act is not unconstitutional in any of the respects heretofore mentioned, and which have been called to our attention by counsel for the respondent Kiple.

2. The demurrers of the petitioner to the answers and plea raise a further question as to the proper construction of certain provisions of the civil service act. Section 8 of the act provides that "said commissioners shall classify all the officers and places of employment in such city with reference to the examinations hereinafter provided for, except those offices and places mentioned in § 11 of this act. The officers and places so classified by the commission shall constitute the classified civil service of such city, and no appointments to any of such offices or places shall be made except under and according to the rules hereinafter mentioned." Section 6 provides that "all applicants for offices or places in said classified service, except those mentioned in § 11, shall be subjected to examination," etc. The plain meaning of these sections is that the offices and places mentioned in § 11 are not to be classified under the act, and are excepted out of the operation of the provisions of the act. Section 11, which thus designates the officers excepted from the classified service, is as follows: "Officers who are elected by the people, or who are elected by the city council pursuant to the city charter, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council, judges, and clerks of election, members of any board of education, the superintendent and teachers of schools, heads of any principal department of the city, members of the law department, and one private secretary of the mayor, shall not be included in such classified service." The present controversy arises out of a difference of opinion between the petitioner and the respondents as to the meaning of the two clauses, "whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council," and "heads of any principal department of the city." Under ordinances existing at the time of the passage of the civil service act, certain departments of the municipal government of the city of Chicago, known as the "Department of Police," the "Fire Department," the "Department of Health," the "Department of Public Works," the "Department of Buildings," and the "Department of Law," were in existence and in operation, having been created and established by such ordinances. By the terms of such ordinances, and in pursuance of a practice which had existed for many years, each of these departments had one head, and each of these heads was appointed by the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the city council. Thus, the ordinance in regard to the police provides as follows: "there is hereby created the office of superintendent of police, who shall be the head of said department of police." The fire ordinance provides as follows: "There is hereby created the office of fire-marshal, who shall be the head of the fire department." The health ordinance provides as follows: "There is hereby created the office of commissioner of health, who shall be the head of said department of health." The ordinance in regard to public works provides as follows: "There is hereby created the office of commissioner of public works, who shall be the head of said department of public works." The ordinance in regard to buildings provides as follows: "There is hereby created the office of commissioner of buildings, who shall be the head of the said department of buildings." The ordinance in regard to law provides as follows: "There is hereby created the office of corporation counsel, who shall be the head of the law department." These ordinances further provide that there shall be certain subordinates or assistants for each of these departments, who are specifically named in the ordinance. By the terms of these ordinances, all of these subordinates or assistants, with a few exceptions, to be hereinafter mentioned, were appointed in each department, by the head of that department, either subject to the approval and consent of the mayor, or without such approval or consent. Thus, the ordinance in regard to police provides as follows: "There is hereby established an executive department of the municipal government of the city of Chicago, which shall be known as the Department of Police, and shall embrace the superintendent of police, an assistant superintendent of police, a secretary of the department of police, a secretary to said super-police division, one captain of police for each police district, and such number of lieutenants, sergeants, detective sergeants, sergeants of detectives, deak sergeants, patrol men, clerks, photographers, telegraphers, and veterinary surgeons as has been, or may be, prescribed by ordinances." The contention of the petitioner is that the expression, "heads of any principal department of the city," as those words are used in § 11, means when the act is applied to the city of Chicago, the following officers, to wit: The superintendent of police, the fire marshal, the commissioner of health, the commissioner of public works, the commissioner of buildings, and the corporation counsel. On the contrary, the respondents who are civil service commissioners contend that the words, "heads of any principal department of the city" mean, not only the said officials who are designated as heads in the ordinances, but also certain subordinates or assistants named in the ordinances. For instance in the present case it is contended by the civil service commissioners that the assistant superintendent of police, the secretary of the department of police, and the inspectors of police must be regarded as heads of the police department. The respondent Kipley further contends that the captains of police shall be regarded as heads of the police department. The same contention is made in regard to certain of the subordinates and assistants in the other departments above named. Therefore the question which is to be determined in this branch of the case is this: What was the meaning of the legislature when it provided, in § 11, that "heads of any principal department of the city" should not be included in the classified service?

The practice which has prevailed under a Constitution or a statute for a long series of years, unchallenged and unquestioned, can be resorted to as affording strong evidence of the meaning of any phrase or term used in such Constitution or statute. Burn v. People, Lafin, 45 Ill. 397; Opinion of the Justices, 198 Mass. 601. In determining the meaning of a statute, a court will have regard to existing circumstances or contemporaneous conditions, and also to the objects sought to be obtained by the statute, and the necessity or want of necessity for its adoption. Haves v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 653, 30 L. R. A. 225. It is conceded by counsel on both sides, in their arguments, that the legislature passed the civil service act with full knowledge of the ordinances of the city of Chicago, which designated each of the officers already named as the head of each of the departments above mentioned. The opinion of the corporation counsel, which is made a part of the answer of the respondent Kipley, makes the following statement: "We find no difficulty in passing upon the question as to what are principal departments in the service of this city, as the ordinances of the city provide for such departments. They are the departments of public works, buildings, fire, health, and police." The respondents, who are civil service commissioners, by adopting the answer of the respondent Kipley, also adopted the statement as to what are the principal departments of the city. It is also admitted in the argument of counsel that the appoint-is made subject to the approval of the city council. It is also conceded by counsel for the civil service commissioners that the word "heads," as used in § 11, should be given the meaning which it had at the time of the passage of the civil service act. The word "department" had a well understood meaning, and had been used in prior statutes, and in the city and village act itself, at the time when the civil service act was passed. Thus, in § 3 of article 7 of the city and village act the following words are used, to wit: "Neither the city council, nor the board of trustees, nor any department or officer of the corporation," etc. In § 17 of the same article, the city comptroller is authorized to require of all officers a statement of the condition and expenses of their respective offices or "departments." Section 2 of the act in regard to the police and firemen's relief fund provides that "the superintendent or chief officer of the police department, the fire marshal or chief officer of the fire department," and other officials, shall constitute the board therein named. So also, in the act of 1887, in regard to the police pension fund, § 2 speaks of the "superintendent or chief officer at the police department." 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 727, 731, 885, 838. There can be no doubt that the words as used in § 11 were intended by the legislature to refer to heads of the principal departments, as they existed under ordinances then in force. At that time there was no principal department of the city government in Chicago which had more than one head. Each department had a single head. Counsel say that, in the clause "heads of any principal department of the city," the word "heads" is plural, and the words "any department" are singular, and that, therefore, the legislature must have contemplated that there should be two or more heads in one department. In pursuance of this construction, it is then contended that certain subordinate officers in each department, such as the assistant superintendent of police, the secretary of the police department, each police inspector, and each captain of police, may be regarded as one of the heads of the department of police. If it be true that, when the civil service act was passed, each principal department had only one head, and if it be also true, as it is admitted, that the legislature had full knowledge of the ordinance giving one head to each principal department, then the legislature must have intended to refer to each single head of each principal department by the words used in § 11. If the legislature meant that only heads of a department should be excluded from the classified service, then, where a department had only one head, such single head would not be excluded. Such a construction cannot be accepted as correct. The intention evidently was that the head or heads of any principal department should be excepted. If there was only one head, such single head should be excepted; if there were two or more heads, they should be excepted. It might be that the legislature could or would create some department besides and outside of those existing at the time of the passage of the act which should con-within the meaning of § 11. But, so far as the city of Chicago is concerned, the departments, at the time of the passage of the act, had each only one head, and therefore the words used in § 11 must refer to such heads as then existed. In § 10 immediately preceding § 11, the legislature three times makes use of the expression "the head of the department," or the "head of any department," making use of the singular number. Section 10 provides that "the head of the department," etc., shall notify the commission of a vacancy. Therein the head of the department is authorized, under certain circumstances, with the consent of the commission, to discharge a candidate. Therein, also, the head of any department is authorized, under certain circumstances, with the approval of the commission, to make a temporary appointment. Section 10 also refers to "the head of the department" as the appointing officer. This feature of § 10 corresponds with the ordinances referred to, which make "the head" of each one of the six departments above referred to the appointing officer of most of the subordinates in his department, with a certain limited number of exceptions. It cannot be that after the use, in § 10 of the expressions which refer to one single head of a department, the legislature intended a different meaning, by the use of the words contained in § 11. The expression there used is merely a pluralizing of the expression used in § 10, so as to convey the idea that, where there were several departments and one head in each department, there were heads of departments.

The construction contended for by counsel as to the meaning of the words "heads of any department of the city" would not only destroy and nullify the civil service act itself, but would lead to confusion and uncertainty in its interpretation. If the expression "heads of any principal department" is not to be interpreted to have the meaning given to it in the ordinances in force when the act was passed, what rule of interpretation is to be adopted in determining who are the heads of any principal department, and how many heads there shall be? Counsel say it must be determined who are heads by applying certain tests. It is said that, where an employee is authorized to exercise control in the absence of the chief officer of the department, such employee ought to be considered a head. There is nothing in the act which justifies the application of any such rule, in order to determine who are the heads. It is also said that where an employee has charge of the hiring and employing of a large number of men and the expenditure of large sums of money, and is to be appointed only with the mayor's concurrence, and whose position is next to that of the chief of the whole department, such an employee must be considered a head of the division or department under his supervision. There is nothing in the act which justifies the application of any such test as is thus indicated. It is also said, that where any employee has confidential and business relations with the chief officers in any branch of the city service, he is to be deemed a head. This test also is with-referred to must be the heads of "any principal department," not the head of a division or a department under the supervision of a subordinate. The "principal" departments are limited in number, being either six departments, or seven departments if the department of finance is included; and each of such departments, as has already been stated, has only one head. If the construction contended for by counsel is correct, then, when § 10 authorizes "the head of the department" to notify the commission of a vacancy, which one of such heads is to give such notice? and why is not the direction that "the heads of the department" should give the notice, instead of a direction that "the head" thereof should give it? The construction thus contended for would prevent the fulfillment of the object contemplated by the act itself. If it be once held that there can be other "heads of any principal department" than those existing in the ordinances at the time the act was passed, then new "heads" may from time to time be created by the common council or the appointing officers; and every foreman who has a squad of men at work under him will be considered the head of a department. The object of the law is to provide for appointment to office upon the basis of merit and fitness; as ascertained by competitive examinations which are open and free to all. But if the doctrine is to prevail that new heads of any principal department may be created whenever the exigencies of politics or the demands of partisan service require it, appointments upon the basis of merit and fitness will soon cease to be made. In addition to this, the act contemplates that promotions shall be made from one grade of the civil service to another, upon the basis of ascertained merit and seniority in service and examination. If, however, every officer who has a number of subordinates under him is to be regarded as the head of a principal department, there can be no opportunity for promotion. If all are heads, and all thus occupy the highest grades, there will be no lower grades from which subordinates can rise by promotion. Thus, the intention of the legislature in passing the act to make both original appointments and subsequent promotions depend upon merit, and upon merit as ascertained by examinations, will be defeated. It is well settled that courts will construe an act of the legislature so as to give effect to the plain intention of the body, as embodied in the act. Soby v. People, 134 Ill. 66. In so far as the administration of the civil service act is dependent upon the action of the judicial department, "it is entitled to, and doubtless will receive a fair and liberal construction, not only according to its letter, but its true spirit and the general purpose of its enactment." People, McClelland, v. Roberts, 148 N. Y. 360, 31 L. R. A. 399.

But § 11 also says that officers "whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council" shall not be included in the classified service. Counsel say that the heads of the principal departments, as created in the ordinances already referred to, are officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council. It is therefore argued that, if the words "heads of any principal department of the city" refer only to the single heads already referred to, then § 11 is subject to the criticism of a mere repetition in the matter of the excepted class. The theory of counsel seems to be this: When § 11 said that officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council shall not be included in the classified service, it said thereby that the head of each principal department, as named in the ordinances, should not be included; and that, this being so, when it afterwards used the expression "heads of any principal department of the city," it merely repeated an exception which had been already made, if the construction contended for by the attorney general is correct. It is true that each head of each principal department comes under both designations in § 11, to wit, the designation "whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council," and also the designation "heads of any principal department of the city." But the same is true of several other officials mentioned in § 11. Thus, the section mentions judges and clerks of election. Judges and clerks of election are included in the previous expression, to wit, "officers . . . who are elected by the city council pursuant to the city charter." This is so because § 9 of article 4 of the city and village act provides that the city council shall appoint the judges and clerks of election. It may be said therefore, that the mention of judges and clerks of election in § 11 is a mere repetition of the designation of those officials, which had already been made under the designation of officers elected by the city council pursuant to the city charter. Section 11 mentions, as persons not included in the classified service, "members of any board of education." But "members of any board of education" are included in the previous designations of officers elected by the people, and of officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council. This is so because § 2 of article 6 of the school law provides that, in school districts having not over 100,000 inhabitants there shall be elected a board of education, while § 17 of that act provides that, in cities having more than 100,000 inhabitants the board of education shall be appointed by the mayor by and with the advice and consent of the common council. 3 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 3691, 3695. So, also, in reference to members of the law department as mentioned in § 11, the corporation counsel, who is the head of that department, is an official whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council. Section 11 designates certain officers with reference to the mode of their appointment, to wit, election by the people, or election by the city council, or appointment subject to confirmation by the city council. It then proceeds to designate certain officials, who may be selected by one or more of the three modes already specified. The fact, therefore, that the mention of "heads of any principal department of the city" is a repetition of a class previously designated, has no particular significance, except in the light of the views hereafter expressed upon that subject.

It is a well settled rule of construction that where there are two provisions, one of which is general and designed to apply to cases generally, and the other is particular and relating to one subject, the particular provision must prevail, and must be treated as an exception to the general provision. Dahnke v. People, 168 Ill. 111, 39 L. R. A. 197. Section 8 provides that the commissioners shall classify all the offices and places of employment in the city with reference to the examinations provided for, except the offices and places mentioned in § 11; and further provides that no appointment to any of such offices or places shall be made, except under and according to the rules provided for in the act. When these words of § 8 are applied to § 11, § 11 means that all officers and employees of "any principal department of the city," except the "head" or "heads" thereof, shall be included in the classified service. This is a broad and general direction, but there is an exception to it. Wherever there is any officer whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council, provided the office filled by him had been created and was in existence when the act was passed, such officer is not to be included in the classified service, even though he be a subordinate in one of the principal departments of the city. The same is true if such officer is one elected by the people or elected by the city council. Thus, in the department of law the ordinance provides that that department shall embrace the corporation counsel, the city attorney, the prosecuting attorney, and such number of assistants and clerks as the city council may by ordinance see fit to prescribe and establish. The corporation counsel is made the head of the law department, but the city attorney is an officer who is elected by the people. He, therefore, is not included in the classified service. So, in the ordinance in regard to the department of health, it is provided that that department shall embrace the commissioner of health, the superintendent of police, and others. Although the commissioner of health is made the head of the department of health, yet as the superintendent of police is an official, whose appointment is made by the mayor subject to confirmation by the city council, the superintendent of police is an officer who is not included in the classified service. Still again, the ordinances create a department of finance, of which the city comptroller is made the head. It is provided that this department of finance shall embrace the city comptroller, the city treasurer, and others. But, as the city treasurer is an officer who is required by the statute to be elected by the people, he is not included in the classified service. We are inclined to the opinion that, if any member of any principal department of the city is an official whose appointment is made by the mayor subject to confirmation by the city council, he is not to be included in the classified service, notwithstanding he may not be made the head of the department. Thus it would appear that the two clauses, "officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council," and "heads of any principal department of the city," should be construed together, in order to make them consistent with each other.

It seems to be contended by counsel for the respondent Kipley that, inasmuch as officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council are excepted from the operation of the act, the common council may by ordinance increase the number of officers so to be appointed, and thereby increase the number of exceptions under § 11. Accordingly the plea filed by the respondent Kipley sets up the ordinance of June 28, 1897, which is fully described in the statement of facts preceding this opinion. That ordinance requires that certain subordinate officers or employees in certain of the principal departments of the city government shall be "designated as heads of principal departments," as said term is used in § 11 of the civil service act, "and shall be nominated by the mayor and shall be confirmed by the city council." This ordinance was passed by the city council of Chicago after the present proceeding was commenced in this court, and after the petition and answers had been filed and demurred to. If it is a valid ordinance, and has the effect which it was intended to have, it will certainly nullify and make worthless the civil service act. Its passage is not defended or indorsed by the respondents who are civil service commissioners. We have held that ordinances passed by the common council must be reasonable in order to be valid, and that they must spring from an honest exercise of legislative discretion. Bloomington v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 184 Ill. 451; Hawes v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 658, 30 L. R. A. 225. The civil service law is binding as well upon the common council of the city as upon the other persons mentioned in the act. Peck v. Belknap, 180 N. Y. 394. The ordinance assumes to define the meaning of the words, "heads of any principal department of the city," as those words are used in the civil service act. The power to interpret and construe a statute, or to define the meaning of the terms therein, rests with the courts, and not with the legislature, and certainly not with a subordinate legislative body, like the common council of a city. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 449. The ordinance does not create any new office or any new department, but simply provides that certain subordinate officials in departments already created shall be designated as heads of principal departments, and shall be appointed in a different manner from that in which existing ordinances require them to be appointed. Such an ordinance is invalid, as being beyond the power of the common council to pass it, in view of the provisions of the civil service act and of the city and village act. As has already been stated, §§ 8 and 11 of the civil service act provide, in effect, that all the subordinate officers and employees of any principal department of the city shall be embraced within the classified service. The ordinance of June 28 provides, in effect, that certain designated subordinates in the principal departments of the city government shall not be included in the classified service. The ordinance is therefore directly in the teeth of the statute.

This will further appear from a consideration of the meaning of §§ 2 and 3 of article 6 of the city and village act, as those sections bear upon, and have reference to, the ordinances hereinbefore mentioned, which existed at the time of the passage of the civil service act. Section 2 of said article 6 provides that "the city council may, in its discretion, from time to time, by ordinance, passed by a vote of two thirds of all the aldermen elected, provide for the election by the legal voters of the city, or the appointment by the mayor with the approval of the city council, of a city collector, a city marshal, a city superintendent of streets, a corporation counsel, a city comptroller, or any or either of them, and such other officers as may by said council be deemed necessary or expedient. The city council may, by a like vote, by ordinance or resolution, to take effect at the end of the then fiscal year, discontinue any office so created, and devolve the duties thereof on any other city officer," etc. Section 3 provides that "all officers of any city, except where herein otherwise provided, shall be appointed by the mayor (and vacancies in all offices except the mayor and aldermen shall be filled by like appointment) by and with the advice and consent of the city council. The city council may, by ordinance not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, prescribe the duties and confine the powers of all such officers, together with the term of such office," etc. 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 721, 722. Said § 2 provides for the creation of certain offices by ordinance passed by a vote of two thirds of the aldermen elected. Section 2 gives the council power to provide, in the manner therein stated, for such other officers, than those specifically mentioned, as may by said council be deemed necessary or expedient. It thus provides for offices not specifically named in the section, and whose designation cannot be determined until the ordinance therein provided for is passed. In other words, the 2d section gives the common council power to provide in a certain way for the election or appointment of officers whose designation and duties are not mentioned in the statute, but whose designation and duties are to be fixed by ordinances to be subsequently passed. The object of the section cannot be accomplished without action on the part of the city council. Section 3 merely provides for the mode of appointing individuals to the offices created by § 2. The officers referred to in § 3 are the officers to be created by ordinance, as provided in § 2. For example, the common council of the city of Chicago, under the authority contained in § 2, provided for the appointment by the mayor, with the approval of the city council, of a superintendent of police. When the present mayor appointed the respondent Kipley to the position of superintendent of police, he appointed him under the authority contained in § 3. Section 2 creates the office; § 3 provides for the appointment of an individual to the office so created. The ordinance mentioned in § 2, creating the office, must be passed by a two thirds vote of the aldermen elected, but the confirmation provided for by § 3 may be accomplished by a majority vote.

From what has been said it is apparent that the words, "whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council," as used in § 11 of the civil service act, refer to officers whose appointment was subject to such confirmation at the time the civil service act went into force. The words used are "is subject," not "may be subject" by some future action of the council. Section 11 refers, by the use of the words last quoted, to officers whose positions had then already been created by virtue of the power contained in § 2 of article 6 of the city and village act. It could not refer to officers whose positions might thereafter be created, because in that view there were no officers whose appointment was subject to confirmation by the city council. The appointment of an officer whose position has not yet been brought into being cannot be subject now and at the present time to confirmation by the city council. The words in § 11 refer to cases where the council had already acted under said § 2 of article 6. In the case at bar the city council of Chicago had already passed ordinances providing for the appointment by the mayor, subject to confirmation by the city council, of the heads of the fire, police, public works, buildings, health, and law departments. The appointments of these officials had been provided for when the act went into force, and they are referred to by the terms of § 11. They were then existing officials, and were made exempt from the operation of the civil service law. It is true that under § 2, the common council might discontinue an office created under § 2, where such an office was unnecessary, in order to devolve its duties upon some other officer.

41 L. R. A.

But the common council had no right to pass an ordinance providing that subordinates in a department already created should be elevated to be the heads of such department. To hold that it had such right would be to hold that it could nullify the civil service act by making every person holding a position, however subordinate, an official whose appointment should be subject to confirmation by the city council, thereby taking his appointment out from the operation of the civil service act. To construe the act so as to permit such a result as this would be to construe it in opposition to the intention of its authors, and not with a view to carrying out such intention. The civil service act provides that all laws or parts of laws which are inconsistent with it, or with any of its provisions, were thereby repealed. Hence, any provision, either of the city and village act, or of any ordinance of the city, which provided for a different mode of appointment than that specified in the civil service act, was repealed, except so far as it might come within the exceptions named in § 11. It is to be noted that the words, "in all cases where it is practicable," are only used in the act in reference to the subject of promotion. The New York Constitution, and the civil service acts passed by the legislature of that state, provided that appointments and promotions in the civil service should be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, "so far as practicable," by examinations. People, McClelland, v. Roberts, 148 N. Y. 860, 31 L. R. A. 399; Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 845, 37 L. R. A. 809. But in the Illinois civil service act this word "practicable" is not used in connection with the subject of examinations.

Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the assistant superintendent of police, inspectors of police, and captains of police, are not excepted from the operation of the civil service law by the provisions of § 11, or by any other provision in the act. The same is true as to all positions in the other principal departments of the city government herein mentioned which are of a lower grade than the chiefs or heads of those departments, or which are subordinate to such chiefs or heads. This statement, however, is subject to this qualification, namely: That wherever, at the time the civil service act was passed, an office or place of appointment was one the appointment to which was to be made by the mayor subject to confirmation by the city council, it is within the exception named in § 11, and is excluded from the classified service.

3. Certain objections are made to the petition as a pleading. It is contended that the demurrer to the answers should be carried back to the petition. We do not regard the petition as defective in any essential particular. The right of mandamus lies to compel the performance of a public duty, or in the enforcement of a public right, and, in such case, no demand and refusal need be shown. Brokaw v. Bloomington Twp. Highway Comrs. 130 Ill. 483; People, Peair, v. Upper Alton School Dist. Bd. of Edu. 127 Ill. 613. The respondents who are made parties to the petition are the only necessary parties. Dement v. Rokker, 126 Ill. 174. The answers neither admit nor deny some of the averments in the petition. Wherever an averment of the petition, well pleaded, is not expressly denied in the answer, it must be taken to be true. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274. A petition for mandamus must set forth a clear right on the part of the relator to have the act performed. It must also show that it is the plain duty of the party against whom the remedy is sought to act in the premises. People, Rinard, v. Mount Morris, 145 Ill. 427; People, Montony, v. Elgin, 66 Ill. 507. We are of the opinion that in this case a clear right is shown on the part of the relator, and a clear duty on the part of the respondents. It was the duty, under the act of the respondent Kipley to notify the commissioners of vacancies that existed in his department under § 10 of the act, and it was the duty of the civil service commissioners to certify to him the names and addresses of the candidates to be appointed to fill the vacancies, in the manner prescribed in the act. Accordingly it is ordered that the writ of mandamus issue to the respondents, the one to give the notice, and the others to make the certification, as prayed in the petition.

Writ awarded.

Phillips, Ch. J., dissenting:

I do not concur in all that is said in this opinion nor in the judgment announced. The phrase, "heads of any principal department," would include more than a single official who is an officer provided for by the city and village act. Included in that phrase would be an employee who, in the absence of the chief officer, would, under his duties, have control of the department, as it also would include an employee having charge of a distinct branch of service employing a large number of men. Any head of a division having duties to discharge which causes him to be directly responsible to the mayor or city council for the manner in which he supervises and cares for the service entrusted to him, and who has confidential and personal relations to the chief officer in such service, or to the mayor and city council, would, in my opinion, be included in the phrase, "heads of any principal department," as used in § 11 of the act, and not subject to classification, under § 3 of that act. In my opinion, the writ should not be awarded.

Boggs, J., dissenting:

I concur in the view that it was within the constitutional power of the general assembly to enact the "Act to Regulate the Civil Service of Cities," but join Mr. Chief Justice Phillips in dissenting to the conclusion that the law-making power intended that the phrase, "heads of any principal department of the city," incorporated by the general assembly in the 11th section, should be construed by the court to mean the "head" or chief officer only of such department. The appointment of the "head" or chief officer of "each principal department of the city" is subject to confirmation by the city council, and, the general assembly having declared by a prior phrase in the same section that "officers whose appointment is subject to confirmation" should be exempted from the operation of the act, it is not reasonably to be presumed or supposed the latter phrase was inserted merely as a repetition of the former, but that it was employed for the purpose of exempting from the effect of the act other officers than those included in the former exempting clauses. The construction given the phrase under consideration simply refuses to accord it any meaning or force whatever, and, in effect, expunges it from the act, for it is clear the section, as construed by the court, would be given the same effect if the phrase in question did not appear at all. The rejection of a portion of an act is only to be resorted to as a desperate and heroic remedy, necessary to be employed for the preservation of the act itself. It is a universal rule of construction, so frequently declared that the citation of authorities is superfluous, that the words of a statute of common use are to be taken in their natural, plain, obvious, and ordinary signification, "and that a plain, common-sense interpretation of such words is to be accepted, rather than a refined and technical grammatical construction." It must be conceded the meaning of the words "heads of a department" is not, in popular and common acceptance, at all a matter of doubt. It does not mean the "head" alone of the department, but the chief or principal governing officers thereof. The meaning of the word in this instance is the word itself, and there is no occasion to invoke the refinements of construction to defeat it.

Rehearing denied February 4, 1898.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE, Appt.,N. L. VARBLE, Receiver of Rassinier Hotel & Wine Company.

(..... Ky.....)

1. The partial destruction of a building is within the provision of Stat. § 2297, that a mere agreement of a lessee to repair will not bind him to restore buildings destroyed by fire or other casualty.
2. A provision of an insurance policy as to prorating in case of loss of property covered by several policies controls another provision that the interest of a mortgagee or trustee shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property.
3. Insurance of a lessor's interest in the premises on which the lessee also had procured insurance for the lessor's benefit as his lease required him to do will cover such part of the loss insured against as remains after the application of the policies taken by the lessee, where they fail to cover the whole loss because of a stipulation in them for prorating with all other insurance on the premises.

(May 31, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. F. Buckner for appellant.Messrs. Humphrey & Davie for appellee.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In July, 1889, Mrs. Leonora Thruston leased her property on Market street, in the city of Louisville, to Octave Rassinier, for the period of fifteen years. By the terms of the lease, Rassinier was to take down the buildings then upon the lots, and in their place erect a new building, which was to be at least of the value of $8,000. A corporation was organized, known as the Rassinier Hotel & Wine Company, to which Rassinier transferred his lease. Pursuant to the terms of the lease, the old buildings were removed, and a new building was erected, of the value of more than $15,000. The corporation became involved, and made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. The appellee, Varble, by appropriate orders of the court, was made receiver of the leased property. It is stipulated in the lease that the second party shall keep the premises in repair, and deliver the same at the expiration of the lease in good repair; and, if he fails to keep the same in good repair, then the first party is at liberty to enter on the premises, and make the repairs, etc. It is also stipulated in the lease that "the second party agrees to take insurance and renew the same from time to time as it may expire on the improvements in the sum of $8,000, to be assigned to said first party to guarantee the stipulations of this lease. In case of loss by fire, the insurance to be used in replacing said improvements under the conditions herein recited." At the expiration of the lease, Mrs. Thruston was to own the building erected upon her lots. Before the assignment, a mortgage was executed to certain persons as trustees to secure the payment of seventy-two notes of Rassinier to the German Insurance Bank. Various policies of insurance, amounting to $22,000, were procured upon the building which had been erected; and to the extent of $8,000 they were for the benefit of Mrs. Thruston, and the balance for the benefit of the trustees. These policies were procured by Varble, receiver. It was provided in the several policies of insurance procured by Varble that, "in case of any other insurance upon the property hereby insured, then this company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater portion of any loss sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount of insurance on said property, issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest therein. The appellant issued a policy of insurance to Mrs. Thruston on the building, she and her interest being described in language as follows: "Lessor and owner in remainder as her interest may appear . . . against all direct loss or damage by fire . . . to an amount not exceeding $5,000." The building was partially destroyed by fire, and the loss was fixed at $7,094.35. The various insurance companies which had issued policies amounting to $22,000 paid $5,780.58 of the loss, which left $1,313.77 of it unpaid.

The question on this appeal is whether the companies which issued the policies, amounting to $22,000, should pay the $1,313.77, or whether the appellant, Sun Insurance Office, should pay it. The building was restored with the money which was paid by the insurance companies other than the appellant, and a sum furnished by Varble, receiver, out of the assets in his hands, under an agreement with Mrs. Thruston. She assigned Varble, the receiver, the benefit of the policy upon which this action was brought; and it is in her right the receiver seeks to recover. The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant may be summarized as follows: (1) That, under the contract of the lease, the tenant was obligated to restore the building to its condition before the fire; and, the receiver having done so, Mrs. Thruston has sustained no loss. Therefore, no cause of action exists against the appellant. (2) That the policies which were issued to Varble, receiver, were on the leasehold interest which he held in the building, and the policy which the appellant issued to Mrs. Thruston was on her reversionary interest therein; therefore, as the policies issued by the other companies and the one issued by the appellant are on different interests in the building, it is not double insurance; hence the appellant is not compelled to contribute with the other companies issuing policies to pay the loss.

At common law, when the lessee expressly

NOTE.—As to rights and liabilities of tenant on destruction of leased premises, see Porter v. Tull (Wash.) 22 L. R. A. 612, and note.

41 L. R. A.

covenanted to repair, his liability was not confined to cases of ordinary and gradual decay, but extended to injuries done to the property by fire; and, if the premises were entirely consumed, he was bound to restore them within a reasonable time. Redding v. Hall, 1 Bibb, 536; Bohannons v. Lewis, 3 T. B. Mon. 380. At common law the tenant was bound to pay the rent, though the premises should be destroyed by inevitable casualty, unless he, by contract, provided otherwise. Helburn v. Mofford, 7 Bush, 169. The common law has been abrogated by our statutes. Section 2297, Ky. Stat. reads as follows: "Unless the contrary be expressly provided for in the writing, no agreement of a lessee that he will repair, or leave the premises in repair, shall have the effect of binding him to erect similar buildings, if without his fault or neglect the same may be destroyed by fire or other casualty, nor shall a tenant, unless he otherwise contracts, be liable for the rent for the remainder of his term of any building leased by him, and destroyed during the term by fire or other casualty without his fault or neglect." It is not expressly provided in the lease that the lessee is to erect a similar building to the one on the leased premises in case it is destroyed by fire or other casualty without his fault. An agreement to "repair or leave the premises in repair" does not obligate the tenant to restore the building which is destroyed by fire or other casualty without his fault. The statute does not have reference alone to cases where the premises are "destroyed"—that is, totally destroyed; it has reference to any case where the "fire or other casualty" injured the premises. It occurs to us that it would be unreasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to relieve the tenant from liability to erect a similar building, and compel him to restore it, when only one half of the value of the building is destroyed by fire or other casualty. The effect of such reasoning is that, had the entire building been destroyed, and the loss occurred thereby been $15,000, the lessee would not have been compelled to erect a similar one; but as the fire injured the building, so as to inflict a loss of only $7,034.95, he must be held liable therefor, or repair the building. An agreement to "repair or leave the premises in repair" is confined to injuries which result from ordinary use and gradual decay of the property. Besides, the writing evidencing the contract of lease shows that it was not contemplated by the parties that the lessee was under liability to restore the property from the effect of the fire. He was to have the building insured in the sum of $8,000, and assign the policy to the lessor; and, in case of loss by fire, the "insurance was to be used in replacing the improvements." It must be presumed that the parties knew that a fire might produce, not a total, but a partial, loss of the building, and that a policy of insurance would be for indemnity in case of a partial, as in one of total, loss; hence we must conclude that the parties were contracting with reference to that condition; therefore it was to be used to replace the improvements (meaning those to be placed on the lots by the lessee), whether the loss was partial or total.

From our view of this case it is unnecessary to decide whether or not the doctrine as to the 41 L. R. A.

double insurance is as claimed, nor is it necessary to determine whether Mrs. Thruston's interest as "lessor," which the appellant insured (as well as her interest as owner in reversion), could not be said to be substantially the same interest which the underwriters insured for the receiver, as the interest of the receiver and that of Mrs. Thruston were mutual and common in this, to wit, the restoration of the building for use during the lifetime of the lease. The insurance companies had the right to place in their policies provisions defining and limiting their several liabilities, providing that they should not be liable for a greater portion of any loss sustained than the sum insured bore to the whole amount of insurance on the property "issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest therein." They did not seem willing to contribute proportionately to a loss with the companies alone which issued policies on the same interest in the property, but, by express and unmistakable language, limited their liability so they would not be required to pay a greater portion of any loss sustained than the sum they respectively insured bore to the whole amount on the property. The insurance held by any party having an insurable interest therein must be taken into account. Their liability must be measured by the rule written in the policies, and under it each company had the right to prorate with other policies issued, including the one issued by the appellant, as Mrs. Thruston had an "insurable interest" in the property. It is not the business of a court to make contracts for parties, but to construe and enforce them. Each of the policies issued to Varble, receiver, for the benefit of Mrs. Thruston and the mortgagees, contains a clause as follows: "The interest of the mortgagee, or trustee, . . . shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured." In our opinion this stipulation is limited and controlled by the more particular provision herein considered, relating to prorating in case of loss. In construing a similar clause in a policy of insurance in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 27 U. S. App. 493, 68 Fed. Rep. 925, 11 C. C. A. 508, the court said: "In construing a contract like the one now in hand, it is our duty to look to all of the provisions of the agreement, and to give effect to what seems to have been the obvious intent and meaning of the parties. We would not be justified in ignoring an agreement in one part of the instrument, which is as clearly expressed as language could well express it, merely because it limits to some extent the scope of general language employed in another part of the instrument. It is very common in the construction of contracts and statutes to restrict the meaning of general words and phrases, when it is plain to be seen from particular provisions of the contract or statute that they were not intended to have the broad signification of which they are fairly susceptible." It is not claimed that the mortgagor or the owner of the leasehold estate (being the estate upon which the mortgage was given) did or attempted to do any act which invalidated the insurance, or in any degree injured the mortgagees; neither did the mortgagees complain at the act of Mrs. Thruston in procuring the policy of insurance from the appellant. Eight thousand dollars of the insurance was to be used in replacing the improvements, thus adding value to the property upon which the mortgagees held their lien; and, in case that amount was insufficient to do so, Mrs. Thruston, if she desired to get any rent from the property, would be compelled to incur the balance of such expense. In view of this fact it is difficult to see how the mortgagees are prejudiced by Mrs. Thruston's effort to provide the means for that purpose by taking the additional insurance. If the property was maintained in the condition in which it was when the mortgage was executed, the mortgagees had no right to complain.

Having reached the conclusion that the insurance companies (other than the appellant) have paid that portion of the loss which they contracted to pay, and that the lessee, under the terms of the lease, was not compelled to replace that part of the building destroyed, it follows that the difference between what the companies paid and the total loss must fall upon Mrs. Thruston. The policy which appellant issued to her was to indemnify her against such loss, and it must pay it. We have considered the case of Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. 143 N. Y. 811, 25 L. R. A. 686.

The judgment is affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Edward E. STONE

v.

BOSTON & ALBANY RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....Mass.....)

1. Negligence in storing oil upon a station platform, and permitting it to remain there in violation of statute, is not the proximate cause of damage by a fire which is started by the careless dropping of a match by a man who comes to the platform to deliver goods, and who is in no sense a servant, agent, or guest of the railroad company.
2. The negligence of a railroad company in keeping oil on a station platform is not concurrent with the careless act of a man who starts a fire by dropping a match.
3. In an action for negligent injury to property where the court is able on all the evidence to see that the injury was not a probable, but was a remote, result of the negligence, it should so rule as matter of law, and not submit the question to the jury.

(Knowlton, J., dissents.)

(July 1, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Worcester County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligence causing the destruction by fire of plaintiff's building which resulted in a verdict in defendant's favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry W. King, Charles M. Rice, and W. S. B. Hopkins, for plaintiff: If the defendant was negligent in storing the twenty seven barrels of kerosene upon the oil-soaked wooden platform, uncovered and unguarded, taking into consideration the oil-soaked condition of the ground and rubbish under the platform, the length of time the oil had remained there when the fire took place, the location of the platform with regard to the buildings of the plaintiff, and all other circumstances shown by the evidence; and if the burning of the buildings and other property of the plaintiff was the natural and probable consequence of that negligence,—then the defendant was liable, provided that injurious consequences of its negligence might reasonably have been anticipated. And these were questions for the jury.

Lane v. Atlantic Works, 107 Mass. 104, 111 Mass. 186; Smethurst v. Proprietors of Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 2 L. R. A. 695; Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 131; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 93 Am. Dec. 768; Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Ass. 156 Mass. 851, 17 L. R. A. 753; Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette, 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 643; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; Banks v. Wabash Western R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 458; Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. 92 Wis. 636, 31 L. R. A. 583; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Trowbridge, 126 Ind. 391.

In cases where injury has been caused to the plaintiff's property by the explosion of explosive substances stored in large quantities on the defendant's premises, the rule has been more particularly formulated so as to bring such a case under the head of nuisances, declaring the defendant liable for damage caused by explosions in these cases whether the act occasioning the explosion was due to third persons or not.

The court should have admitted the evidence offered by the plaintiff to show that the freight yard and platform were situated in a very populous portion of Spencer.

Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200; Wilson v. Phasiz Powder Mfg. Co. 40 W. Va. 413; Luffin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 181 Ill. 322, 7 L. R. A. 262; McAndrews v. Collier, 42 N. J. L. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 508; Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 36 Am. Rep. 654; Emory v. Hazard Powder Co. 22 S. C. 476, 53 Am. Rep. 730; Wier's Appeal, 74 Pa. 280; Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 292, 41 Am. Dec. 744; Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 213; Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. §§ 69, 140; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 723.

If the jury had found that the injury to the plaintiff was the natural and probable consequence of the defendant's negligence in suffering a dangerous state of things to exist on its premises, to wit, the unguarded kerosene upon the oil-soaked platform with the oily condition of the rubbish and the ground itself beneath the platform, then it could not avail to excuse the defendant that the act of a third person, to wit, Casserly, had concurred with the negligence of the defendant to contribute a condition necessary to the injurious effect of the negligence of the defendant.

NOTE.—For negligent fires, see also Cook v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. (Wis.) 40 L. R. A. 457, and other cases cited in note thereto. 41 L. R. A.

The act of Casserly in throwing down the match with which he had lighted his pipe was really concurrent in point of time with the negligence of the defendant; but even if his act were regarded as negligent and intervening between the negligence of the defendant and the injury to plaintiff, nevertheless it could not avail to excuse the defendant if the jury had found that such an act, considering the unguarded and uncovered condition of the kerosene and the condition of the platform and the ground and rubbish under it, and the inflammable nature of kerosene, and the position of the platform with regard to the public and those whose business brought them by or to the platform, or the freight yard or depot, ought to have been foreseen and provided against by the defendant.

The negligence of the defendant still remained a culpable and direct cause of the injury to the plaintiff.

Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 186; McCauley v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 584; The Joseph B. Thomas, 81 Fed. Rep. 578; Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 181; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768; Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 730; Griffin v. Boston & A. R. Co. 148 Mass. 143, 1 L. R. A. 698; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Elmer v. Locke, 185 Mass. 575; Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co. 97 Mass. 361, 98 Am. Dec. 99; Spicer v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 149 Mass. 207; Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. 152 Pa. 855, 18 L. R. A. 759; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sutton, 27 U. S. App. 310, 63 Fed. Rep. 394, 11 C. C. A. 251; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215, 41 Ill. App. 34; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 32 U. S. App. 635, 69 Fed. Rep. 823, 16 C. C. A. 457; Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 32 U. S. App. 253, 68 Fed. Rep. 148, 15 C. C. A. 327; and cases cited; Banks v. Wabash Western R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 458; Johnson v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 48 Minn. 433; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette, 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642; Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 98; Bisford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508; Murdock v. Walker, 43 Ill. App. 590; Wilder v. Stanley, 65 Vt. 145, 20 L. R. A. 479; Phillips v. Denald, 79 Ga. 732; Lake v. Milliken, 62 Me. 240, 16 Am. Rep. 456; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 21, 29, 31, 84-88; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. §§ 100-102, and 32, note 3; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. 2d ed. pp. 38, 39, note, p. 48, note; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1088, § 5, pp. 1089, 1090, § 6, pp. 1085, 1086, § 3; Wharton, Neg. §§ 90-92, 95, 144-146.

If the act of Casserly referred to, be regarded by the jury as negligent, and as intervening between the negligence of the defendant and the injury to plaintiff, then it was no excuse for the defendant, provided the jury found that it was such an act as ought to have been provided against by the defendant.

Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 186; McCauley v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 584; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768; Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200; Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 181; Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co. 97 Mass. 361, 98 Am. Dec. 99; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; The Joseph B. Thomas, 81 Fed. Rep. 578; Banks v. Wabash Western R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 458; Johnson v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 48 Minn. 433; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette, 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642; Bisford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508; Murdock v. Walker, 43 Ill. App. 590; Lake v. Milliken, 62 Me. 240, 16 Am. Rep. 456.

If the act of Casserly, referred to, should be regarded as negligent and concurrent with the negligence of defendant, defendant could not escape liability. His act must be regarded as concurrent with the negligence of the defendant, since, if defendant was negligent, its negligence still existed when Casserly threw down the match.

Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 730; Griffin v. Boston & A. R. Co. 148 Mass. 143, 1 L. R. A. 698; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Elmer v. Locke, 185 Mass. 575; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. 152 Pa. 855, 18 L. R. A. 759; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sutton, 27 U. S. App. 310, 63 Fed. Rep. 394, 11 C. C. A. 251; Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 32 U. S. App. 253, 68 Fed. Rep. 148, 15 C. C. A. 327; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 32 U. S. App. 635, 69 Fed. Rep. 823, 16 C. C. A. 457; Wilder v. Stanley, 65 Vt. 145, 20 L. R. A. 479.

If the act of Casserly be not regarded as negligent, but merely as an entirely innocent act, the defendant is liable.

Hayes v. Hyde Park, 153 Mass. 514, 12 L. R. A. 249; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 3 Am. Rep. 354; Kuhn v. Jewett, 32 N. J. Eq. 647; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 80, 83, 36, 38, 39; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 48, note, pp. 41, 42, note; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1087, § 4, pp. 1085, 1086, § 3; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Shanly, 107 Mass. 568; Carter v. Towne, 98 Mass. 567, 96 Am. Dec. 682; Wharton, Neg. §§ 90-92, 95, 146.

The case at bar falls under the rule of—

Fletcher v. Rylands. L. R. 3 H. L. 330, L. R. 1 Exch. 265; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Mears v. Dole, 185 Mass. 508.

This violation of the provisions of the Public Statutes was some evidence of negligence in itself.

Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 186; Hanlon v. South Boston Horse R. Co. 129 Mass. 310; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 3 Am. Rep. 354; Bradley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 2 Cush. 539; Clark v. Boston & M. R. Co. 64 N. H. 828; Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co.

27 Ill. App. 200; Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 181 Ill. 822, 7 L. R. A. 262; Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508.

The fact that the fire spread to other property of plaintiff does not make the damage to such last-named property any the less the proximate consequence of the fire and of the defendant's negligence.

Perley v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 414, 96 Am. Dec. 645; Kuhn v. Jewett, 32 N. J. Eq. 647; Martin v. New York, & N. E. R. Co. 63 Conn. 331; Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 9 Am. Rep. 68.

Messrs. Frank P. Goulding and William C. Mellish, for defendant:

There is no evidence showing negligence of the defendant, in respect to the condition of the platform.

Oil is an article of merchandise, which the defendant as a common carrier was bound to receive, transport, and deliver, and, as incident to that duty, to hold as a warehouseman until taken away by the consignees.

Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 856, 56 Am. Rep. 684.

If there was any violation of the statute it was by the owners of the oil who suffered it to remain.

Denny v. New York C. R. Co. 13 Gray, 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645; Hynds v. Schenectady County Mut. Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 554.

The statute is merely penal. It did not add to, or diminish, the duties owed by the defendant to the plaintiff. It is not enacted for the benefit of the plaintiff in particular, or for the benefit of any class to which the plaintiff specially belongs, and he cannot found any right of action by it.

Knapp v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 84 N. Y. 489; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588; Toutloff v. Green Bay, 91 Wis. 490; Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 181 Ill. 822, 7 L. R. A. 262; Selbeck v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 58 Mich. 195; 2 Jaggard, Torts, 918.

A condition harmless in itself is not made wrongful because a third person may by an independent tortious act work an injury through it.

Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co. 115 Mass. 804, 15 Am. Rep. 106.

No case is found in the commonwealth where the owner of premises has been held liable for fire originating thereon without his negligence in kindling or guarding his fires.

Lothrop v. Thayer, 188 Mass. 466, 52 Am. Rep. 286.

It can make no difference whether the person kindling the fire was rightfully or wrongfully on the premises. The owner would be no more or less bound to anticipate a negligent or wilful kindling of a fire by a licensee than by a trespasser.

Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 181 Ill. 822, 7 L. R. A. 262; Rolle, Abr. Actions upon the Case, B.

In an action for negligently keeping a fire the defendant may plead that an unknown person set fire to his house per quod, and traverse the negligence.

6 Comyns' Digest, Pleader, pp. 2, 8; Beven, Neg. 2d ed. 590; Carstairs v. Taylor, L. R. 6 Exch. 217; Ross v. Fedden, L. R. 7 Q. B. 661; 41 L. R. A.

Read v. Nichols, 118 N. Y. 224, 7 L. R. A. 130; Dubuque Wood & C. Association v. Dubuque, 80 Iowa, 176; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Fairbanks v. Kerr, 70 Pa. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 664; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790; Brooks v. Old Colony R. Co. 168 Mass. 164; Mars v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 54 Hun, 625; Leavitt v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 509, 36 L. R. A. 382.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort to recover for the loss of the plaintiff's buildings and other property by fire, under the following circumstances: The defendant owned and operated a branch railroad extending from its main line at South Spencer to the village of Spencer, and had at the Spencer terminus a passenger station, a freight house, and a freight yard, all adjoining a public street. On the side of the freight house, and extending beyond it about 75 feet, was a wooden platform about 8 feet wide and 4 feet high, placed upon posts set in the ground, the underside being left open and exposed. The main tracks ran along on the front side of this platform and freight house, and on the rear of the platform there was a freight track, so near as to be convenient to load and unload cars from and upon it. The plaintiff was engaged in the lumber business, buying at wholesale and selling at wholesale and retail, manufacturing boxes, etc. His place of business comprised several buildings, some of which were across the street from the defendant's buildings, and his principal buildings were about 75 feet from the point on the defendant's premises, beneath the platform, where the fire originated. The evidence tended to show that the platform was mostly used for the storing of oil which had been brought upon the railroad, until it was taken away by the consignees; and that the platform had become thoroughly saturated with oil, which had leaked from the barrels, and which not only saturated the platform, but dripped to the ground beneath. More or less rubbish accumulated from time to time under the platform, and was occasionally carried away. The evidence tended to show that this space below had been cleaned out two or three weeks before the fire. On the day of the fire, September 18, 1893, from 25 to 30 barrels of oil and oil barrels were upon the platform. Some were nearly or quite empty, some were partly full, but the most of them were probably full and nearly full. The only evidence to show how the fire originated tended to prove that one Casserly, a teamster, brought a load of boots to be shipped upon a car which was standing upon the track on the rear side of the platform; that he was smoking a pipe; that he stepped into the car, to wait for the defendant's foreman of the yard, who was to help him unload the boots; that, in stepping in, he stubbed his toe, and knocked some of the ashes and tobacco out of his pipe; that he relighted the pipe with a match, and threw the match down; that at this time he was standing in the door of the car, facing the platform. It must be assumed upon the evidence that the fire caught upon the ground underneath the platform from the match thrown down by Casserly. All efforts to extinguish the fire failed. It spread fast, and was almost immediately upon the top of the platform,—running up a post, according to one of the witnesses,—and very soon it reached the barrels of oil, which began to explode, and the fire communicated to the plaintiff's buildings, and they were burned. There was evidence tending to show that all of the oil had been upon the platform for a longer time than forty-eight hours. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, the platform was never, to his knowledge, empty of oil or oil barrels. It was completely saturated with oil, and that general condition of things, so far as the platform was concerned, had existed for eight years,—ever since he himself had been there. Upon the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, the court directed a verdict for the defendant.

The plaintiff, in substance, contends before us that the defendant was negligent in storing oil upon the platform, taking into consideration the condition of the platform, and of the ground and material under it, and the length of time during which the oil had been allowed to remain there; that, irrespectively of the question of negligence, the platform with the oil upon it constituted a public nuisance, especially in view of Pub. Stat. chap. 103, § 74, providing that the oil composed wholly or in part of any of the products of petroleum shall not be allowed to remain on the grounds of a railroad corporation in a town for a longer time than forty-eight hours without a special permit from the selectmen; that the defendant is responsible for the damage resulting from the public nuisance, whether the act of starting the fire was due to a third person or not; and that the question should have been submitted to the jury whether the damage to the plaintiff's property was the natural and proximate consequence of the defendant's tort. Upon the evidence, the supposed tort of the defendant, whether it be called "negligence" or "nuisance," appears to have been limited to the keeping of oil too long upon the platform. Assuming this oil to have been a product of petroleum, and so within the statute cited, nevertheless the defendant, as a common carrier, was bound to transport it and deliver it to the consignees. The oil, as is well known, was an article of commerce, and in extensive use, and the defendant was bound to transport it, and keep it for a reasonable time, after its arrival in Spencer, in readiness for delivery. There was no evidence that the oil was liable to spontaneous ignition, or that the platform was an unsuitable place for its temporary storage till it could be removed, or that the defendant could have prevented the escape of oil upon the platform from leaky barrels. But we may assume without discussion that the defendant was in fault in keeping the oil there so long, and that, if the oil had been removed within forty eight hours after its arrival, the fire would probably not have been attended with such disastrous consequences.

Nevertheless, the question remains—and, in our view, this becomes the important and decisive question of the case—whether, assuming that the defendant was thus in fault, the plaintiff introduced any evidence which would warrant any finding by the jury that the damage to his property was a consequence for which the defendant is responsible; or, in other words, whether the act of Casserly in starting the fire was such a consequence of the defendant's original wrong, in allowing the oil to remain upon the platform that the defendant is responsible to the plaintiff for it. In approaching this question, it must be borne in mind that Casserly was in no sense a servant, agent, or guest of the defendant. He brought a load of goods to the defendant's station, to be carried upon the defendant's railroad. The defendant was bound by law to accept and carry them. It could not lawfully exclude Casserly from its ground. By Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 188, it was bound to give all persons reasonable and equal terms, facilities, and accommodations for the transportation of merchandise upon its railroad, and for the use of its depot and other buildings and ground. Casserly came there in his own right, and the defendant is not responsible for him in the same way that perhaps it might be responsible for a servant, agent, or (according to some statements of the law) guest. Lothrop v. Thayer, 138 Mass. 466, 53 Am. Rep. 286. It is also to be borne in mind that this was not a case of spontaneous ignition of a substance liable to ignite spontaneously, as was the case in Vaughan v. Menlove, 3 Bing. N. C. 468. Nor did the defendant owe to the plaintiff the duties of a carrier of passengers or freight towards its customers, or any other duties growing out of a contract with the plaintiff. There was no contract of any kind between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The rule is very often stated that, in law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is to be regarded; and, in applying this rule, it is sometimes said that the law will not look back from the injurious consequence beyond the last sufficient cause, and especially that, where an intelligent and responsible human being has intervened between the original cause and the resulting damage, the law will not look back beyond him. This ground of exonerating an original wrongdoer may be found discussed or suggested in the following decisions and text-books, among others: Clifford v. Atlantic Cotton Mills, 146 Mass. 47; Elmer v. Feasenden, 151 Mass. 359, 5 L. R. A. 724; Hayes v. Hyde Park, 153 Mass. 514, 12 L. R. A. 249; Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Asso. 156 Mass. 851, 17 L. R. A. 753; Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden F. Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 20 L. R. A. 297; Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. 44, 19 L. ed. 65; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Hickey, 166 U. S. 521, 41 L. ed. 1101; Reiper v. Nichols, 31 Hun, 491; Read v. Nichols, 118 N. Y. 224, 7 L. R. A. 130; Mars v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 54 Hun, 625; Leavitt v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 509, 36 L. R. A. 382; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 70, 12 L. R. A. 322; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Salmon, 89 N. J. L. 299, 23 Am. Rep. 214; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 71; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 24 U. S.

App. 7, 63 Fed. Rep. 400, 405, 27 L. R. A. 583, 11 C. C. A. 253; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 38, 666; Wharton, Neg. §§ 184 et seq.

It cannot, however, be considered that in all cases the intervention even of a responsible and intelligent human being will absolutely exonerate a preceding wrongdoer. Many instances to the contrary have occurred, and these are usually cases where it has been found that it was the duty of the original wrongdoer to anticipate and provide against such intervention, because such intervention was a thing likely to happen in the ordinary course of events. Such was the case of Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 186, where it was found by the jury that the meddling of young boys with a loaded truck left in a public street was an act which the defendants ought to have apprehended and provided against, and the verdict for the plaintiff was allowed to stand. In the carefully expressed opinion by Mr. Justice Colt the court says: "In actions of this description the defendant is liable for the natural and probable consequences of his negligent act or omission. The injury must be the direct result of the misconduct charged; but it will not be considered too remote if, according to the usual experience of mankind, the result ought to have been apprehended. The act of a third person, intervening and contributing a condition necessary to the injurious effect of the original negligence, will not excuse the first wrongdoer, if such act ought to have been foreseen. The original negligence still remains a culpable and direct cause of the injury. The test is to be found in the probable injurious consequences which were to be anticipated, not in the number of subsequent events and agencies which might arise." According to this statement of the law, the questions in the present case are: Was the starting of the fire by Casserly the natural and probable consequence of the defendant's negligent act in leaving the oil upon the platform? According to the usual experience of mankind, ought this result to have been apprehended? The question is not whether it was a possible consequence, but whether it was probable; that is, likely to occur, according to the usual experience of mankind. That this is the true test of responsibility, applicable to a case like this, has been held in very many cases, according to which a wrongdoer is not responsible for a consequence which is merely possible, according to occasional experience, but only for a consequence which is probable, according to ordinary and usual experience. One is bound to anticipate and provide against what usually happens and what is likely to happen; but it would impose too heavy a responsibility to hold him bound in like manner to guard against what is unusual and unlikely to happen, or what, as it is sometimes said, is only remotely and slightly probable. A high degree of caution might, and perhaps would, guard against injurious consequences which are merely possible; but it is not negligence, in a legal sense, to omit to do so. There may not always have been entire consistency in the application of this doctrine; but, in addition to cases of boys meddling with things left in a public street, courts have also held it competent for a juror articles left near an opening in the floor of an unfinished building, or in the deck of a vessel, were accidentally jostled so that they fell upon persons below (McCauley v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 584; The Joseph B. Thomas, 81 Fed. Rep. 578); when sheep, allowed to escape from a pasture, and stray away in a region frequented by bears, were killed by the bears (Gilman v. Noyes, 57 N. H. 627); and when a candle or match was lighted by a person in search of a gas leak, with a view to stop the escape of gas (Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. 152 Pa. 855, 18 L. R. A. 759), and in other cases not necessary to be specially referred to. In all of these cases the real ground of decision has been that the result was or might be found to be probable, according to common experience. Without dwelling upon other authorities in detail, we will mention some of those in which substantially this view of the law has been stated: Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 514; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768; Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 98 Am. Dec. 154; Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co. 115 Mass. 304, 15 Am. Rep. 106; Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251; Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 181; Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Assn. 156 Mass. 351, 17 L. R. A. 753; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, and cases there cited; Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118; Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. 274, 98 Am. Dec. 231; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 298, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Behling v. Southwest Pennsylvania Pipe Lines, 160 Pa. 359; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 24 U. S. App. 7, 63 Fed. Rep. 400, 405, 406, 27 L. R. A. 583, 11 C. C. A. 253; Hail v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. Rep. 557, 23 L. R. A. 774, 9 C. C. A. 184; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 327; Wharton, Neg. 2d ed. §§ 74, 76, 78, 188-145, 155, 955; Cooley, Torts, *69, *70; Addison, Torts, *40; Pollock, Torts, *388; Mayne, Damages, *89, *47, *48. For a recent English case involving a case of remoteness, see Engelhart v. Farrant [1897] 1 Q. B. 240. The rule exempting a slanderer from damages caused by repetition of his words rests on the same ground. Hastings v. Stetson, 126 Mass. 329, 30 Am. Rep. 683; Shurtleff v. Parker, 130 Mass. 293, 39 Am. Rep. 454; Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, 5 L. R. A. 724.

Tried by this test, the defendant is not responsible for the consequences of Casserly's act. There was no close connection between it and the defendant's negligence. There was nothing to show that such a consequence had ever happened before, during the eight years covered by the plaintiff's testimony, or that there were any exciting circumstances which made it probable that it would happen. It was, of course, possible that some careless person might come along, and throw down a lighted match, where a fire would be started by it. This might, indeed, have happened upon the plaintiff's own premises, or in any other place where inflammable materials were gathered. But it was not according to the usual and ordinary course of events. In failing to anticipate and guard against such an occurrence or accident, the defendant violated no legal duty which it owed to the plaintiff. What qualification if any of dynamite, we do not now consider. See Rudder v. Koopmann (Ala.) 37 L. R. A. 489; Kinney v. Koopman (Ala.) 37 L. R. A. 497, and cases there cited; Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. 274, 290, 98 Am. Dec. 221.

The plaintiff, however, contends that this question should have been submitted to the jury. This course would have been necessary if material facts had been in dispute. But where, upon all the evidence, the court is able to see that the resulting injury was not probable, but remote, the plaintiff fails to make out his case, and the court should so rule, the same as in cases where there is no sufficient proof of negligence. McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 299, 93 Am. Dec. 768. In Hobbs v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 111, 122, Blackburn, J., said: "I do not think that the question of remoteness ought ever to be left to a jury. That would be, in effect, to say that there shall be no such rule as to damages being too remote." It is common practice to withdraw cases from the jury on the ground that the damages are too remote. Hammond v. Bussey, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 79, 89; Read v. Nichols, 118 N. Y. 224, 7 L. R. A. 130; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; Behling v. Southwest Pennsylvania Pipe Lines, 160 Pa. 359; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 24 U. S. App. 7, 63 Fed. Rep. 400, 405, 406, 27 L. R. A. 558, 11 C. C. A. 258; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 71; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507; Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co. 115 Mass. 804, 15 Am. Rep. 106; Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 123 Mass. 219; Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, 5 L. R. A. 724.

The plaintiff further contends that the negligence of the defendant in keeping the oil upon the platform was concurrent with the careless act of Casserly, and that, therefore, it was a case where two wrongdoers, acting at the same time, contributed to the injurious result. But this is not a just view of the matter. The negligence of the defendant preceded that of Casserly, and was an existing fact when he intervened, just as in Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136, the negligence of the defendants in leaving their loaded truck in the street preceded that of the boys who meddled with it.

The fact, if established, that the defendant's platform, with the oil upon it, constituted a public nuisance, is immaterial, under the circumstances of the present case. If the plaintiff proved a nuisance, he need not go further and show that it was negligently maintained. But we have assumed the existence of negligence on the part of the defendant. Illegality on the part of a defendant does not of itself create a liability for remote consequences, and illegality on the part of a plaintiff does not of itself defeat his right to recover damages. The causal connection between the two still remains to be established. Hanlon v. South Boston Horse R. Co. 129 Mass. 810; Hyde Park v. Gay, 120 Mass. 589; Hall v. Ripley, 119 Mass. 135; Damon v. Scituate, 119 Mass. 66, 20 Am. Rep. 815; Kidder v. Dunstable, 11 Gray, 842; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 241, 28 L. ed. 410, 415. In order to maintain a personal action to recover damages for a public nuisance, the plaintiff must show that his particular loss or damage was caused by the nuisance, just as in case of any other tort. Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 101, 108, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 147, 154, 31 Am. Dec. 123. And, in considering the question of remoteness, it makes no difference what form of wrongdoing the action rests upon. Sherman v. Fall River Iron Works Co. 2 Allen, 524, 79 Am. Dec. 799; The Notting Hill, L. R. 9 Prob. Div. 105, 113; Mayne, Damages, *48, note.

Without considering other grounds urged by the defendant, a majority of the court is of opinion that, upon the evidence, the defendant was not bound, as a matter of legal duty, to anticipate and guard against an act like that of Casserly, he being a stranger coming upon the defendant's premises for his own purposes and in his own right.

Exceptions overruled.

Knowlton, J., dissenting:

I agree to nearly all of the propositions of law in the opinions of the majority, but I do not agree that the case presents no question of fact for the consideration of a jury. It seems to me that the principal question is whether there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant in reference to the risk of such an accident as happened. I think that there was such evidence. To say nothing of the particulars testified to, the fact that one is acting in violation of a criminal statute is always evidence of negligence. See Pub. Stat. chap. 102, § 74. The opinion assumes that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant in keeping so large a quantity of oil for so long a time in such a place. It seems to me that, if the defendant's conduct was negligent, it was in reference to the risk of just such an accident as happened. I do not know that any other kind of negligence is charged. It was to diminish the liability to such accidents that the statute was enacted. If there was negligence in violating the statute, it was because, from the storage of large quantities of kerosene oil for a long time in such an inflammable place, there was serious danger of a great and uncontrollable conflagration in connection with some accident which ought to have been contemplated, and which, in the absence of the oil, would be likely to cause little or no damage. I do not see what negligence on the part of the defendant could have been found from the evidence except its failure to anticipate and guard against such a danger. To constitute negligence creating a liability for the damages to the plaintiff, it is not necessary that the defendant should have contemplated the particular event which occurred. It is enough if it should have contemplated the probable happening of some accident of this kind, which involves danger to the property of others, that ought to be guarded against. I think the jury well might have found that the burning of the plaintiff's property was a direct result of the defendant's conduct in keeping this oil on the platform.

SMITH

v.

SMITH

(.....Mass.....)

The annulment of a marriage because the husband is constitutionally afflicted with syphilis and in a state in which his chances of cure are very remote and doubtful may be granted, under Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 11, on the ground of fraud, where, with knowledge of his condition, he did not inform his wife in regard to it, and she, learning of it on the day of the marriage soon after the ceremony, refused to live with him as his wife, and filed the libel for annulling the marriage before its consummation.

(June 22, 1898.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Middlesex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of a libel brought to annul a marriage. Decree for libellant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burke, Marshall, & Corbett for petitioner.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This libel is brought under Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 11, the first part of which is as follows: "When the validity of a marriage is doubted, either party may file a libel for annulling such marriage, or, when the validity of a marriage is denied or doubted by either party, the other party may file a libel for affirming the same." The omission of the words "for fraud or other cause," contained in Gen. Stat. chap. 107, § 4, and in Stat. 1855, chap. 27, does not change the meaning of the provision. The statute assumes that there may be marriages which are legal in form, but invalid in fact. In terms, it confers jurisdiction upon the court, but, in reference to the law of marriage, it is merely declaratory.

The facts of the present case are peculiar. On the day of the marriage, soon after the ceremony, the libellant received information that the respondent was afflicted with a venereal disease called "syphilis." She communicated the information to her mother, who immediately charged him with being so afflicted. He denied the charge, but consented to an examination by a physician. An examination was made that disclosed the fact, which the presiding justice has found, that he was constitutionally afflicted with syphilis, a contagious disease, with which the libellant would become infected in case of cohabitation, "thus seriously impairing her health, and involving consequences of the most grievous character." The judge also found "that the disease would be transmitted to any offspring which they might have; that, while it was not absolutely incurable, the chances of a cure being effected in the state in which the respondent was were very remote and doubtful." The libellant, on learning the libelee's condition, refused to live with him as his wife, and there has been no consummation of the marriage. The libelee, knowing his diseased condition, induced the libellant to contract the marriage without informing her in regard to it. She supposed him to be a man in good health and of good habits, and, if she had known that he was suffering from such a disease, she would not have contracted the marriage.

The statute to which we have referred has several times been considered by this court. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen, 605; Donovan v. Donovan, 9 Allen, 140; Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen, 26; Crehore v. Crehore, 97 Mass. 330, 98 Am. Dec. 98. The fullest discussion of the law applicable to a case like this of which we have knowledge is in Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen, 605. In that case a marriage was declared void into which a man was induced to enter by confiding in the representations of the woman whom he took for his wife that she was chaste, when in fact she was with child by another man. It has since been held that, to maintain a petition in such a case, it is not necessary to introduce evidence of express representations, and that a petition cannot be granted if it appears that the petitioner had himself been guilty of criminal intercourse with the woman before the marriage. The precise point decided in Reynolds v. Reynolds has been adjudicated in other states, and in this country seems to be generally accepted law. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87; Curris v. Carris, 24 N. J. Eq. 516. See also Morris v. Morris, Wright (Ohio) 630; Ritter v. Ritter, 5 Blackf. 81; Scott v. Schufeldt, 5 Paige, 43. The law in England is held otherwise. Moss v. Moss [1897] P. 268. The opinion of the learned chief justice to which we have referred treats of the law in reference to ordinary contracts procured by fraud, and points out the distinction between contracts to marry or executory contracts of marriage and executed contracts of marriage. There is no reason why executory contracts of marriage should not be treated, in reference to the fraud of either party, like any other contracts. We think it is well settled that fraud of such a kind, in its essential elements, as would invalidate an ordinary contract, is a good defense to an action upon a contract to marry. Van Houten v. Moree, 162 Mass. 414, 26 L. R. A. 430. But, after a contract to marry has ripened into a marriage, different considerations affect the case. On grounds of public policy, the law seeks to make the marriage relation in every case as nearly permanent as possible without doing injustice. The difference between the relation of a man and woman affianced and their relation after marriage is more than the difference between those who have made an ordinary executory contract and the same persons after the contract is executed. At marriage there is a change of status which affects them and their posterity and the whole community. It is a change which, for important reasons, the law recognizes, and it inaugurates conditions and relations which the law takes under its protection. It is of such a nature that it cannot lightly be disregarded. The contracting parties take each other for better or for worse, and agree to abide the consequences of misinformation or mistake in regard NOTE.—For disease as defense for breach of promise to marry, see Shackleford v. Hamilton (Ky.) 15 L. R. A. 631. See also the following case of McMahon v. McMahon (Pa.) post, 802.

41 L. R. A.

to each other. Says Chief Justice Bigelow in Reynolds v. Reynolds: "In the absence of force or duress, and where there is no mistake as to the identity of the person, any error or misapprehension as to personal traits or attributes, or concerning the position or circumstances in life of a party, is deemed wholly immaterial, and furnishes no good cause for divorce. Therefore no misconception as to the character, fortune, health, or temper, however brought about, will support an allegation of fraud on which a dissolution of the marriage contract, when once executed, can be obtained in a court of justice. These are accidental qualities, which do not constitute the essential and material elements on which the marriage relation rests." The decree of nullity was entered in that case, not merely because the libellant was deceived in regard to the supposed chastity of the libelee, for it is generally accepted law that unchastity of either party before marriage will not warrant a decree of divorce or nullity,—but because, besides the unchastity, the woman was in such a condition that she could not properly assume the duties of wifehood. More than that, she was in a condition to introduce into the husband's family spurious offspring, of which he would be presumed in law, if not in fact, to be the father. The deception, viewed in its different aspects, was in regard to facts essential to the very existence of the marriage relation. Her condition in reference to the objects of marriage was somewhat analogous to impotence, which without reference to fraud, is always held to be a ground for a decree of nullity. So far as we are aware, this is the only particular in which mistake or fraud in regard to the condition, character, or experience of one of the parties to a marriage has been held to be a ground for a decree of nullity or of divorce in favor of the other in this commonwealth. Most courts in other jurisdictions have gone no further in favor of libellants. But in Cumington v. Belchertown, 149 Mass 223, 4 L. R. A. 131, it appeared that a marriage was set aside for fraud by a court in New York, on the ground that the libelee had been afflicted with insanity before the marriage, and had concealed the fact, and not long afterwards again became insane. It was held by this court that the marriage could not have been declared invalid for this cause in this commonwealth.

The case at bar rests solely upon fraud in regard to the bodily condition of the libelee. As we have already seen, the previous unchastity of the libelee is not enough to entitle the libellant to relief. Indeed, we are not quite certain from the report that the libelee might not have been constitutionally affected with the disease from his birth. But in the findings of the judge his concealed disease was such as would leave with him no foundation on which the marriage relation could properly rest. It had advanced to such a stage as probably to be incurable. The libellant could not live with him as his wife without making herself a victim for life, and giving to her offspring, if she had any, an inheritance of disease and suffering. While this case lacks the element of introducing a bastard child into the husband's family, which existed in Reynolds

v. Reynolds, it has the element of a loathsome, incurable, contagious disease to be communicated to the wife, which the other had not. Few, if any, would be bold enough to say that it was the duty of the libellant, on discovery of the fraud before consummation of the marriage, to give herself up as a sacrifice, and to become a party to the transmission of such a disease to her posterity.

It may be said that this cause for a decree of nullity is not different in kind, but only in degree, from other bodily or mental conditions which the law does not recognize as a good ground for a separation. There are many peculiarities of body or mind, natural or acquired or contracted, which may render one, in a broad sense, unfit for matrimony, and of which, if concealed until after marriage, the law can take no cognizance in a suit for separation. In proceedings in court it is more difficult to deal with conditions like these in the case before us than with that in Reynolds v. Reynolds, because they are obscure, and it is hard to ascertain the truth. For this reason there is more danger in opening the door to libellants in such cases. Yet there may be circumstances in which justice requires that relief should be given. In Reynolds v. Reynolds much stress was laid upon the difference between an executory and an executed contract of marriage. But, for fraud in procuring ordinary contracts, the law gives a remedy as well after the contract is executed as before. The learned chief justice did not say exactly at what stage a contract of marriage should be deemed to be executed. Clearly, it is executory up to the time of the ceremony. Viewed in its legal aspect, it becomes a binding marriage as soon as the ceremony is performed; but the full execution of the contract contemplated by the parties in their original agreement is then just beginning, and is to continue during their joint lives. Their status up to the time of the ceremony is that of parties to an executory contract. Their status as soon as the ceremony is performed, is that of persons legally married, who, with the sanction and under the forms of the law, have assumed new relations to each other and to the state. But these new relations are then rather inchoate than complete, and they do not assume their perfected form so as to have their full possible effect upon the parties and the community until consummation of the marriage. There are therefore reasons why a fraud like that in the present case, discovered before consummation of the marriage, and at once made a ground for a separation, should move the court more strongly in favor of the libellant than if the discovery had come later. 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 456, 461, 462. The reluctance of the court to recognize such frauds as a ground for legal proceedings is founded on considerations of public policy. These considerations are much less weighty in a case like the present than if the parties had cohabited for a considerable time before the proceedings were commenced. Although in many cases the distinction between consummated and unconsummated marriages in proceedings for separation has been overlooked, it is distinctly recognized in Lyndon v. Lyndon, 69 Ill. 43, and Robertson v. Coile, 12 Tex.

856, in each of which cases a decree of nullity was entered when the court said that the ground would have been insufficient if the marriage had been consummated. We do not intimate that the concealed existence of venereal disease in one of the parties to a marriage will ordinarily be a sufficient ground for a decree of nullity. In most cases, presumably, the disease is curable. But, confining our decision to the facts before us, we are of opinion that it was in the power of the judge of the superior court to enter a decree for the libellant.

Decree for the libellant.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Margaret M. McMAHEN

v.

William H. McMAHEN, Appt.

(186 Pa. 485.)

The communication of syphilis to a wife by her husband, who has the disease in the tertiary stage and is probably incurable, whereby she is kept in a constant state of suffering, is a ground for a divorce under 1 Pepper & L. Dig. p. 1633, pl. 11, allowing a divorce for cruel and barbarous treatment endangering the wife's life or rendering her condition intolerable and life burdensome.

(July 21, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Philadelphia County granting a divorce. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. Horace Hepburn and Joseph A. Robbins for appellant.

Mr. A. S. L. Shields, for appellee:

The cruelty within our statute which entitles a wife to a divorce from her husband is actual personal violence or the reasonable apprehension of it; or such a course of treatment as endangers her life or health, and makes cohabitation unsafe.

Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 329.

The respondent's answer to the libel and bill of particulars is alone sufficient to support a decree on this ground.

Hollister v. Hollister, 6 Pa. 449; Popkin v. Popkin, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 765, note; Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491; Tackaberry v. Tackaberry, 101 Mich. 102; Ryder v. Ryder, 66 Vt. 158.

It is not necessary to prove actual brutality on the part of the husband with respect to conjugal embraces. The only safety for the wife must be a separation. She is entitled to protection under the circumstances, even against herself, and if she asks it the law will mercifully extend it, and will as well prevent her being led into temptation as delivered from evil.

Burton v. Burton, 52 N. J. Eq. 215; Grant v. Grant, 53 Minn. 181; Mayhew v. Mayhew, 61 Conn. 233; Robinson v. Robinson, 66 N. H. 600, 15 L. R. A. 121; Walsh v. Walsh, 61 Mich. 554; English v. English, 27 N. J. Eq. 71.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While it is to be much regretted that the NOTE.—See preceding case of Smith v. Smith (Mass.) ante, 800.

41 L. R. A.

learned court below filed no opinion in this case setting forth their reasons for disagreeing with the master as to his conclusions the view we take of the testimony and its legal effect renders the solution of the controversy a comparatively easy task. As to the acts of cruelty complained of by the wife, there is no very serious difference between her testimony and her husband's. She specifies them all in detail, and includes personal violence on his part in every instance. He admits them all, including the personal violence, and differs from her only as to the degree and frequency of the acts of violence. As admitted by himself, they would be quite sufficient to sustain a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro, or a vinculo; but it is not necessary to rest the decision on that branch of the case, because there is another branch, of a much more serious character, as to which there is scarcely any, and no serious, contradiction. The respondent himself testifies that he was affected with syphilis for a number of years before his marriage with libellant, and that he continued to be so affected until within a very few months before his marriage, when he alleges that he was cured. The medical testimony, however, and indeed all the other testimony, including his own admissions, are decidedly against him on this subject. He admitted that he had been under treatment for this loathsome disease during practically the whole of his married life, until his wife left him. He was asked:

Q. How long had you been under treatment for it?

A. I had been under treatment with Dr. Hickman, off and on, all during marriage; that is, after the three months after my marriage until she left.

And he also admitted that he was suffering from this disease at the very time his wife left him. He was asked:

Q. So that, at the time she left you, you knew and she knew that you were suffering from this disorder?

A. We both knew that we were suffering.

Q. But you did know that you had the disease?

A. Yes, sir.

It was also admitted by the defendant that his wife innocently became infected by him with the disease before their marriage; she claiming that it resulted from his kissing her, and all the physicians concurring in saying that it could easily be communicated in that way. It was fully shown by the testimony of the wife and her husband, and by the physicians who attended her, that she was continually affected by the disease during all her married life; and it was testified by the physicians that so long as cohabitation continued the disease would continue, and that she had already reached the secondary stage, and was on the verge of the tertiary, at the time she left her husband. So far as the husband is concerned, his own medical witness, Dr. Hickman, testified that he was in the tertiary stage. After saying that the defendant told him he had been treated for the disease for a number of years, he was asked:

Q. Do you believe it was syphilis?

A. From what he told me, I certainly do.

Q. Did you treat him for tertiary or secondary?

A. Tertiary.

Q. So you believe he had tertiary?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so treated him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can tertiary, in your opinion, be cured?

A. It apparently can be, but in my opinion it cannot altogether be cured.

As to its effect upon the wife, he was asked:

Q. How would it affect her in respect to her having children?

A. She could conceive, go through gestation, and have a child.

Q. And the child would be poisoned?

A. Naturally so.

Q. Would you not, then, regard the marital relations between two such persons as dangerous to both?

A. As to the child and mother and father?

Q. To all.

A. Yes, sir; the father and mother could have syphilis, and a child could be born to that mother, and do no harm to the mother. Still, the child can have infantile syphilis, and still a mother not be harmed.

Q. Would it not make pregnancy dangerous?

A. It would.

Dr. Hickman further testified that he had also treated the respondent for syphilis since his separation from his wife, so that it appears from the testimony of his own witness that he continued to have the disease after his wife left him. The doctor further testified that he considered the disease incurable. Dr. Bernardy testified that the respondent, prior to his marriage, told him he had syphilis, and showed him his mouth, and it was full of sores; that he had also attended the libellant at the same time, and found a syphilitic sore on her lip. He also said the disease could be quite innocently communicated in several ways; that he told them both before marriage that they each had the disease; that after marriage, if pregnancy ensued, the disease was unsafe for the wife. As all imputations of unchastity on the part of the libellant were expressly disavowed on the hearing before the master by the counsel for the respondent, and as the respondent took upon himself all the responsibility of having communicated the disease to his wife, it must be assumed that he alone was to blame for the original contraction of the disease by her, and for its incessant continuance upon her person at all times after the marriage. In addition to the foregoing, Dr. Lorman, another medical witness, who treated the libellant for this disease from November 20, 1893, to January 25, 1894, testified that on one occasion, on January 1, 1894, he was present with both the parties, and that respondent told him that he (the respondent) "was the cause of it originally"; and he added: We had a consultation about it, and I told Mrs. McMahan, in the presence of her husband, that this thing was liable to reappear, even though she got better, as long as she continued to cohabit with her husband. At a subsequent period she had a gummy tumor. This belongs to the tertiary stage, but I don't think she was quite that bad.

Q. As a matter of fact, and as a medical fact, would it or would it not have been safe for her to have lived and cohabited with her husband?

A. She would have had this thing reoccur. We are taught that at no time is it well, and it would become more apparent if she became pregnant.

After having testified that in his opinion the disease was positively incurable, he was asked:

Q. Please explain for what reason it was dangerous for Mrs. McMahan to cohabit with her husband.

A. On account of contamination.

Q. Mr. McMahan had the disease?

A. I recommended a medicine for Mr. McMahan that very day. I have the original label in my pocket.

Q. And Mrs. McMahan had the same malady at that time?

A. She was improving then. She asked whether, in her condition, it would be safe to cohabit. I said that if she cohabited, and had children, she would again become in the same condition. Mr. McMahan was present.

Q. Doctor, did Mrs. McMahan ask you the question whether it would be safe for her to live with her husband?

A. My impression is that she did. Mr. McMahan broached the subject.

Q. What did he say?

A. The substance was that he blamed himself. He felt very penitent.

Q. Did he assent to that proposition?

A. I cannot remember. I know that he was penitent. On another occasion, in my store, I told him that, if a child was born, that child would be sick; and he said, "If my child dies, my wife will blame me, for I am to blame."

Q. Are you quite sure that Mr. McMahan said that he gave her the disease in the first instance?

A. Yes, sir; I will swear to that.

Q. So you advised Mrs. McMahan to leave her husband?

A. No, sir; I told her the plain facts, and told her to use her own judgment. She said she would have left him before, but Dr. Hickman told her she was pregnant, and then she would not leave.

Q. Doctor, would Mrs. McMahan's life have been in danger had she continued to live with her husband?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just explain.

A. Her condition would have become tertiary. It would naturally affect the brain, the lungs, and everything else. It is worse than leprosy, and should be so regarded.

Q. Would continued cohabitation intensify the malady?

A. We are taught so, and I believe so.

Although the respondent was subsequently examined, he did not deny any part of the statements made by Dr. Lorman, nor of the statements made by his wife of the same conversation, which was in direct corroboration of Dr. Lorman's testimony.

This rather extended review of the testimony has been rendered necessary because the master refused a decree of divorce, and the court filed no opinion in support of the decree granting a divorce. Upon the whole of the testimony, which was really uncontradicted as to its most important features, we have a case in which a young woman, whose innocence is not at all impeached, having been contaminated with a foul and disgusting disease by her lover (who subsequently became her husband) during the period of his courtship, probably by kissing her frequently, and after marriage having been kept constantly in a diseased condition from the same cause until she had passed into the secondary condition of the disease, and had approached to the verge of the tertiary and most dangerous stage of the disease, had been advised by her husband's physician that the disease would be continuous while cohabitation continued, and that her children, if she had any, would be poisoned by the disease, and that pregnancy would be dangerous and perilous to her health, and had been advised by another physician that her life would be in danger if she continued to live with her husband, and that her condition would become tertiary,—her brain, lungs, and other vital organs becoming affected; having endured for upwards of five years the constant presence of one of the vilest, most shocking, and dangerous diseases with which the human body can be afflicted; and being still only about thirty years of age; and the question is whether such a person is legally bound to remain in such relation with her husband during the whole of her subsequent life, and has no redress whatever in the way of a divorce. In our opinion, to state this question is to answer it. We do not see how it is possible to imagine a more direct and palpable case of cruelty to a wife by a husband than this. It comes within, not only the spirit, but the very letter, of our statute, which allows divorce "where any husband shall have, by cruel and barbarous treatment, endangered his wife's life, or offered such indignities to her person as to render her condition intolerable and life burdensome, and thereby force her to withdraw from his house and family." 1 Pepper & Lewis, Dig. p. 1638, pl. 11. That the libellant in this case was kept in a constant state of suffering from a malignant venereal disease was proved without contradiction. It was equally well established that so long as cohabitation continued the disease would continue, and that this condition was always dangerous, especially during pregnancy, and in the case of childbirth might prove fatal. In Bishop on Marriage and Divorce (§ 717) it is said: "Cruelty, therefore, is such conduct in one of the married parties as renders further cohabitation dangerous to the physical safety of the other, or creates in the other such reasonable apprehension of bodily harm as materially to interfere with the discharge of marital duty." This definition was taken from the leading case of Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 85, and has been approved in numerous cases cited in the footnotes to Bishop. In our own celebrated case of Butler v. Butler, 1 Para. Sel. Eq. Cas. 329, tried by Judge King, it was held that the cruelty which entitles a wife to a divorce is "actual personal violence or the reasonable apprehension of it; or such a course of treatment as endangers her life or health, and renders cohabitation unsafe." This has been followed ever since. Thus, in Gordon v. Gordon, 48 Pa. 226, Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion, and quoting the above definition, said: "This definition accords with the present doctrine of the English ecclesiastical courts. It gives the extremest possible liberal construction to our act of assembly." In May v. May, 62 Pa. 206, we said: "It is not every act of cruelty, on the part of the husband, that will entitle the wife to a divorce,—this ill treatment may or may not endanger her life. But to entitle her to a divorce for the cause first specified, there must be actual personal violence, or the reasonable apprehension of it; or such a course of treatment as endangers life or health, and renders cohabitation unsafe." In 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 790, it is said: "Cruelty, as a cause of divorce, is the wilful and persistent causing of unnecessary suffering, whether in realization or in apprehension, whether of body or of mind, in such a way as to render cohabitation dangerous or unendurable." On page 794 the same work further says: "But excessive intercourse may be cruelty, or intercourse when the wife's health is delicate, or where the husband has venereal disease;" citing for the last cause Popkin v. Popkin, 1 Hagg. Ecc. Rep. 733, note; Holthofer v. Holthofer, 47 Mich. 260; Canfield v. Canfield, 34 Mich. 519. In English v. English, 27 N. J. Eq. 71, a decree of divorce from bed and board was made on the ground of extreme cruelty, consisting mainly in gross abuse by the husband of his marital rights. The chancellor said: "There can be no doubt that she was so diseased that connubial intercourse inflicted great and distressing pain upon her; nor can there be any doubt that her condition was known to him. . . . He has been guilty of extreme cruelty towards her, so as to render it unsafe for her, under existing circumstances, to cohabit with him or to be under his dominion or control." To the same effect are the cases of Grant v. Grant, 53 Minn. 181; and Mayhew v. Mayhew, 61 Conn. 233. We are clearly of opinion that the conduct of the respondent towards his wife was of such a character as to render her condition intolerable, and life burdensome, so that she was forced thereby to withdraw from his house and family.

and also that her health was thereby greatly impaired, and her life endangered. It is of no consequence that inoculation occurred before marriage. It is the continuation and constant presence of the disease after marriage, making her condition intolerable, and endangering her health and life, that entitles her to a divorce.

The decree of the court below is affirmed, and appeal dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

Anthony J. McHUGH

v.

Bridget McHUGH, Exrx., etc., of Richard McHugh, Deceased, Appt.

(186 Pa. 197.)

1. An attempt to procure false testimony, or to corrupt jurors, may be proved for the purpose of raising a presumption against the party who is guilty of it.
2. The representative character of an executrix will not prevent evidence that she has attempted to procure false testimony,—especially when she is personally interested in the litigation.

(May 16, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Lackawanna County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to revive a judgment. Affirmed.

In 1867 a judgment was obtained against Richard McHugh which in 1870 was assigned to John J. Ward. In 1872 the judgment was revived and the following year assigned to John T. Fitzpatrick. In 1877 it was again revived and by a paper filed March 13, 1891, but dated December 19, 1879, Fitzpatrick assigned the judgment to Mary McHugh, a sister of Richard. On the same day an assignment was filed without date transferring the judgment to Anthony J. McHugh. Richard McHugh died March 27, 1891. On March 28, 1891, an exemplification of this judgment was filed in the court. The claim was made by defendant that the judgment had been satisfied in the lifetime of Richard.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. F. J. Fitzsimmons, John F. Scragg, and Willard, Warren, & Knapp, for appellant:

This judgment is surrounded on all sides with the circumstances and indicia of payment and satisfaction.

The executrix was not a party except in a representative capacity, and the dead man's estate ought not to be prejudiced before the jury by proof of any such alleged conduct on her part.

The evidence offered on the trial of a case must be confined to the point in issue.

The court erred in refusing to allow us the opening and closing to the jury.

NOTE.—As to presumption against the destroyer of evidence, see Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 84 L. R. A. 561, and note.

For presumption from failure to put witness on stand, see Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison (Ga.) 40 L. R. A. 84.

41 L. R. A.

Smith v. Frazier, 53 Pa. 226; Richards v. Nixon, 20 Pa. 19; Huntington v. Conkey, 83 Barb. 220.

Claims which on their face have been accruing for years, but which are delayed in their presentation as legal demands, shall, after the death of the alleged debtor, come before the court discredited by the claimant's own acts, and every fair intendment will be and ought to be made against them.

Pickens's Estate, 14 W. N. C. 407; Keyser's Appeal, 124 Pa. 80, 2 L. R. A. 159; Hess v. Frankenfeld, 106 Pa. 448.

Messrs. John R. Edwards and O'Brien & Kelly for appellee.

Fell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Three of the specifications of error relate to the admission of testimony to show that the defendant, before a former trial of the same issue, had attempted to procure false testimony and corruptly to influence the jurors. The action was to revive a judgment obtained against the defendant's deceased husband, of whose will she was the executrix. The defense was accord and satisfaction. In rebuttal the plaintiff offered to prove by two witnesses that, before the first trial, the defendant had attempted to induce them to appear as witnesses for her, and to testify falsely, and to prove by a third witness that the defendant had attempted to induce him to corrupt the jurors. These offers were sustained, and the witnesses were allowed to testify. The defendant had not testified at either trial.

The spoliation of papers and the destruction or withholding of evidence which a party ought to produce gives rise to a presumption unfavorable to him, as his conduct may properly be attributed to his supposed knowledge that the truth would operate against him. This principle has been applied in a great variety of cases, and it is now so well established that it is unnecessary to do more than state it. A somewhat extreme illustration of its application is found in Brown v. Schock, 77 Pa. 471, where the failure of a party to an action to appear at the trial, when he had a strong motive to appear, was said to be evidence against him. Those who have had experience in the trial of causes will assent to the statement of Thompson, Ch. J., in the opinion in Frick v. Barbours, 64 Pa. 120: "The testimony [of a case] often consists in what is not proved as well as in what is proved." A like presumption arises where, in connection with the trial, testimony has been fabricated or witnesses suborned, or a jury corruptly influenced, or where an attempt has been made to do any of these things. The conduct of the party may then be attributed to his knowledge that his cause was an unjust one. This rule is suggested in 2 Taylor, Ev. § 116, and in 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. §§ 87, 196, and thus stated in 2 Wharton, Ev. 3d ed. § 1265: "Proof of the forgery of false testimony is admissible against the party by whom the fabrication is made. The same presumption . . . is drawn . . . against all forms of attempted suppression of or tampering with evidence" or subornation of witnesses. And in 2 Best, Ev. § 411: "If it be shown that a plaintiff has been suborning false testimony, and has endeavored to have recourse to perjury, it is strong evidence that he knew perfectly well that his cause was an unrighteous one."

It is surprising that there are so few cases upon the subject, but there are some of very high authority upon the exact point raised. Moriarty v. London, O. & D. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 814, was an action by a husband and wife against a railroad company for personal injuries to the wife, caused by negligence. Evidence was admitted that the husband, who was not a witness, had offered to share with witnesses the compensation in the event of a recovery of damages. A rule for a new trial was made absolute on the ground of surprise, but it was held that the testimony was properly admitted. It was said by Cockburn, Ch. J.: "I think this rule ought to be discharged, so far as the ground taken that the evidence was improperly admitted. . . . The conduct of a party to a cause may be of the highest importance in determining whether the cause of action in which he is plaintiff, or the ground of defense if he is defendant, is honest and just; just as it is evidence against a prisoner that he has said one thing at one time, and another at another, as showing that the recourse to falsehood leads fairly to an inference of guilt. Anything from which such an inference can be drawn is cogent and important evidence, with a view to the issue. So, if you can show that a plaintiff has been suborning false testimony, and has endeavored to have recourse to perjury, it is strong evidence that he knew perfectly well his cause was an unrighteous one." In Egan v. Bowker, 5 Allen, 449, it was held that it was competent to prove that a party to an action had suborned a witness to swear falsely in a deposition taken in relation to the case, although the deposition had not been put in evidence by either party at the trial. The decision rests on the ground that a party would not support a fair claim by falsehood, and that, when he has been guilty of fraud in the maintenance of the action, proof of the fraud is competent as an admission of the fraudulent nature of the claim. This case was approved in Hastings v. Stetson, 180 Mass. 76, in which testimony was admitted to show that the adverse party had attempted to bribe a juror at a former trial of the cause. In Chicago City R. Co. v. McMahon, 103 Ill. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 29, an action for injuries resulting from negligence, a witness in the case was allowed to testify that he had been offered money by a clerk in the employ of the corporation defendant not to appear or to influence his testimony. In Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, letters written by a party to third persons warning them not to aid the other party by testifying or otherwise, and urging them to testify to a particular state of facts, were admitted; and it was said to be immaterial that they had been written before the action was commenced, if written after the controversy had arisen. To the same effect is the case of Winchell v. Edwards, 57 Ill. 41. In Heslop v. Heslop, 82 Pa. 587, it was held not to be error to receive testimony to show the participation of the defendant in an attempt to corrupt the plaintiff's witnesses; but it was said that the presumption arising from the misconduct of the party would not justify the jury in utterly disregarding the testimony which he had produced in support of this defense, although it should admonish them carefully to scrutinize it. In some of these cases the reason given for the admission of the testimony is that it is an admission by contract, and in others that it gives rise to a presumption; but the decisions all rest on the ground that evidence of the misconduct of a party in connection with the trial is admissible as tending to show that the party guilty of the misconduct is unwilling to rely on the truth of his cause, or is conscious that it is an unjust one. The effect of such testimony may be to impeach witnesses by proof of misconduct with which they have had no connection, but the testimony of a witness is never exempt from scrutiny. The cause may be discredited while the witness is not, for an entirely honest piece of testimony may be part of a dishonest claim or defense.

41 L. R. A.

It did not help the defendant's position in objection to the testimony that she was defending as executrix, and acting in a representative capacity. As a beneficiary under her husband's will, she was in fact largely interested in the result of the litigation. But the effect of her conduct was the same whether she was acting for herself or for another. The same ground of objection to the admission of testimony to show an attempt to corrupt witnesses was taken in Moriarty v. London, O. & D. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 814, and it was said by Lush, J.: "I also think that no distinction can be made with reference to the character of the party suing; whether it is a representative character, or he is suing to enforce some right of his own. Either way the inference which the evidence tends to raise is the same, that the case is not a true one, and on that ground the evidence is receivable."

There is nothing in the other assignments which need be considered. If there was any defect in the manner in which the defendant was brought upon the record, her voluntary appearance cured it.

The judgment is affirmed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GULF, COLORADO, & SANTA FÉ RAIL-WAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

W. T. BEALL and Wife.

(.....Tex.....)

The loss of services of a minor child killed by the fault of another does not give the parents any common-law right of action against the party in fault.

(December 6, 1897.)

QUESTIONS certified by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District for the opinion of the Supreme Court which arose upon an appeal by defendant

NOTE.—Common-law right of action of parent for loss of services of child killed.

I. Rule that no action will lie.

- a. Different theories as to.
- b. Doctrine that private injury is merged in public wrong.
- c. Doctrine that human life is not a subject of civil damages.
- d. Effect when death is not instantaneous.

II. The contrary rule.

III. The true rule.

IV. Rule when injury consists of a breach of contract.

I. Rule that no action will lie.

a. Different theories as to.

The general rule that no action would lie at common law for causing the death of a human being, though it has been repeatedly and vigorously attacked (see infra, II.), is supported by a decided preponderance of authority. But while all the cases holding this rule, in which the killing was instant, arrive at the same result, two different theories have been acted upon in reaching it, the first and older theory being, the merger of the private right in the public wrong, and the second and younger being that the death of a human being cannot be complained of as a civil injury.

b. Doctrine that private injury is merged in public wrong.

This is the doctrine upon which the rule that the action would not lie at common law was originally based, and the early English cases announcing it, though not cases of action by a parent for the death or loss of services of a child, and consequently not strictly within the subject of the note, are here included because they are repeatedly cited in subsequent parent and child cases as furnishing the rule applied in cases of that class.

Thus, in Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89, 1
Brownl. 205, Noy, 18, the first case on the subject, which was an action by a husband for damages against one who assaulted and beat his wife so that she died upon the following day, it was held that the right of action for the assault, being a personal tort to the wife, died with her, and it was said that if a man beats a servant of another so that he dies of the battery, the master thereof shall not have an action against the other for the battery and loss of services, because the servant dying of 41 L. R. A.

from a judgment of the District Court for Bell County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's minor son.
Answers favorable to appellant returned.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. Terry and Charles K.
Lee, for appellant:

At common law there is no action for injuries resulting in death. Actio personalis moritur cum persona. And this action, if maintainable at all, is only maintainable by virtue of title 52 of the Revised Statutes.

McGown v. International & G. N. R. Co.,
85 Tex. 289; Yoakum v. Selph, 83 Tex. 607;
Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 78 Tex.
621, 11 L. R. A. 391; Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v.
Hanks, 73 Tex. 323; Hendrick v. Walton, 69 the extremity of the battery, it then becomes an offense to the Crown, being converted into felony, and that drowns the particular offense and private wrong suffered by the master, and his action is thereby lost.

And in Smith v. Sykes, Freem. C. L. 224, it was held that no action will lie on the part of a husband against one who beats his wife so that she dies, as the matter is criminal and of a higher nature.

And in Cooper v. Witham, 1 Lev. 247, which was an action against a husband, alleging that the wife, affirming herself to be sole, procured the plaintiff to marry her with intent to deceive him, whereby he was disturbed in conscience and put to great charge by the husband, holding that this was a felony in the wife, and that an action would not lie, the court said, quoting Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89, 1 Brownl. 205, Noy, 18, that an action did not lie for the master, for the beating of his servant to death or for the loss of his services, for the party ought to be indicted for it.

So, in Bacon's Abr. title Master and Servant, it is said that if a man beats another's servant to that degree that he dies thereof, the master loses his action and must proceed by indictment, for the private injury to him is drowned in the general injury to the public; Citing 2
Rolle, Abr. 568.

And in Bulter, N. P. 78, it was said, that while an action on the case will lie in favor of a master for loss of services of a servant against a third person who beats the servant thereby causing such loss, if the servant died of the battery the master cannot have an action for his services, for the private offense is drowned in the felony; Citing Osborn's Case, 10 Coke, 133; Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89,
1 Brownl. 205, Noy, 18.

So, this doctrine has been adopted in Kentucky.

Thus, in Eden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14
B. Mon. 204, in which the question was whether a husband whose wife had been killed on a railroad by a collision produced by the careles-ness and misconduct of the persons running the locomotives and cars at the time can maintain an action against the company for the injury sustained by him in consequence of the death of his wife, it was held that according to the principles of the common law injuries affecting life cannot in general be the subject of a civil action; that for injuries to life the civil remedy is considered as being entirely merged in the public offense. But in other inferior felonies the civil remedy is merely suspended until aft-

Tex. 192; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 125; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1272, and cases cited; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 124, and cases cited; Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89; Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616; Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283.

Even if this action could be maintained inter the conviction or acquittal of the supposed felon.

Elsewhere, however, it would seem to have been repudiated. See Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698, Sullivan v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Dill. 334, infra, II, and Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware, 75, and cases infra, I. c.

c. Doctrine that human life is not a subject of civil damages.

Subsequent cases establishing the prevailing rule arrive at the same results reasoning from a different standpoint, holding that the action would not lie at common law on the ground that human life is not a subject of civil damages.

Thus, in Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, which was the first case adopting this doctrine, and which though an action by a husband against the proprietor of a stage coach for the death of his wife, from which she was thrown and so injured that she died about a month afterwards, and not a parent and child case, has been repeatedly cited as the foundation of the doctrine as applied to cases of that class, it was held that in a civil court the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury, and that he was not entitled to any damages for the loss of her society, or for his mental suffering on her account after the moment of her death.

So, in Worley v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 1 Handy (Ohio) 481, which was an action by a husband against a railroad company for a personal injury to his wife whereby she was immediately killed, the rule was laid down that an action cannot be maintained by a husband to recover damages for the loss of his wife, or by a father for the loss of the services of his child, in consequence of the death of the wife or child by the carelessness or fault of the agents or servants of a railroad company, placing the decision upon the ground that the death of a human being cannot be made the subject of damages in a civil action. This followed Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, and it was said that the reasoning in Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89, 1 Brownl. 205, Noy, 18, supra, I. b, could not be adopted as it is inapplicable to the judicial proceedings in that state, because they have no felonies as at common law, and the commission of crime there works no corruption of blood or attainder of estate, and the individual doing the wrong, though punishable to the extremity of the law, is still liable for the personal injury he inflicts, and his estate may be legally subjected by way of indemnity to the injured party.

Under this rule it has been repeatedly held that a civil action by a parent for the death of his minor child cannot be maintained at common law. Kramer v. San Francisco Market Street R. Co. 25 Cal. 434; Jackson v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 140 Ind. 241; Wilson v. Bumstead, 12 Neb. 1; Sullivan v. Union P. R. Co. 1 McCrary, 301, 2 Fed. Rep. 447; Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 42 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 28 L. T. N. S. 197, 21 Week. Rep. 409; Weems v. Mathieson, 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 215; GULF, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. BEALL.

And that no action can be maintained by a father whose child has been killed by the negligent or unlawful act of another, for the loss of services of such child, in the absence of a statute giving the right of action. Gann v. Worman, 69 Ind. 458; Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616.

In Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 49 Am. Dec. 616, supra, Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, infra, II, was criticised and explained, the court saying that the case went before the court on a motion for a new trial, but no question was there raised concerning the legal right of the plaintiff to recover damages caused by the killing of his son. For aught that appears in the report that point was assumed and passed sub silentio.

Under the common law an action would not lie after the death of a child against the person inflicting the injuries which caused the death, either for the injury to the person of the child or for the loss of its services. Gann v. Worman, 69 Ind. 458.

And in case of injuries to a child if either the party who had caused them or one who received them died, the action of the parent for damages therefor abated, the maxim being Actio personalis moritur cum persona. Covington Street R. Co. v. Packer, 9 Bush, 455, 15 Am. Rep. 725.

Where death resulted instantaneously, or practically so, from a wrongful injury to a child, and no incidental expenses accrued, no action whatever was maintainable by the parent thereafter for the death of the child. Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328.

And a father had no cause of action at common law for the instant killing of his son who was a passenger on a railroad train which collided with another through the negligence of the persons in charge, causing his death. Thomas v. Union P. R. Co. 1 Utah, 232.

In this case it was said that Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, infra, II., holding to the contrary, was subsequently disapproved by the court of appeals in Pack v. New York, 3 N. Y. 493.

While a parent as master may recover for the injury to his child as his servant where the service is simply interrupted by accident resulting from negligence, he cannot do so where the service is determined altogether by the servant's immediate death. Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 42 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 28 L. T. N. S. 197, 21 Week. Rep. 409.

And an action to recover for the damages the parents sustained through the killing of their child by reason of the loss of anticipated services that might have been rendered to them by the deceased up to his majority cannot be maintained. Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794.

The death of a human being, though clearly involving pecuniary losses, affords no ground for an action for damages at common law, and an instruction in an action by a father for an assault and battery upon his minor son from which his death resulted, that the plaintiff might recover for loss of services of his son until he would have been of age, is error. Sherman v. Johnson, 58 Vt. 40.

And as a father has no action at common law against one causing the death of his son by negligence, and cannot recover in such an action for the services of his child up to the time he would be twenty-one years of age had he lived, brought under the statute, recovery can only be had where the wrongful act, negligence, carelessness, unskillfulness, or default made the basis of the action, is of such character that if death had not ensued it would have entitled the deceased to maintain an action.

11 L. R. A.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlton, 60 Tex. 397;
Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Crowder, 61 Tex. 263.

It is not error to allow the plaintiff in an action for a personal injury to a child causing death brought by an administrator to recover damages for such period. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Orvis, 12 Ohio C. C. 710.

So, the father of a minor killed by the wrongful act of another is not entitled to the earnings and services of such son until he is twenty-one years of age to be recovered by him in an action as such father so as to render it improper for the jury in an action by the administrator of such child, for negligently causing his death, to allow any damages for any loss of services or earnings during the period of his minority. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Slater, 129 Ill. 91, 6 L. R. A. 418.

And an action brought by a parent against another for negligently killing his child, which act was done in another state, will not lie in the absence of an averment in the complaint that the common law of that state had been changed, or that any statute was in force there which authorized the father to maintain an action for damages for the death of his child, as the court will presume, in the absence of such allegation, that the common law prevails in that state. Jackson v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 140 Ind. 241.

So, Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 77, § 1, providing that a cause of action arising out of the injury to the person dies with the person of either party, is only declaratory of the common-law rule, and an action cannot be maintained thereunder by a father to recover for the negligent killing of his minor son whereby he will be deprived of his services. Scheffer v. Minnesota & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 125.

And California act of April 26, 1862, p. 447, providing that the father, or, in case of his death or desertion of his family, the mother, may maintain an action for the injury or death of a child, does not create a right of action where none existed before, and does not change the common-law rule that a parent cannot maintain a civil action for the death of his child, but merely designates the person by whom an action for the costs therein mentioned should be brought, and does not authorize an action by the father as father and sole heir, the action being maintainable only by the administrator or executor of the deceased. Kramer v. San Francisco Market Street R. Co. 25 Cal. 434.

So, besides the direct holdings above set forth, there are numerous dicta in other cases to the same effect.

Thus, in Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Rowan, 66 Pa. 393, which was an action by a father for damages for the death of a son occasioned by the alleged negligence of the defendants, it was said that the right of action for damages for death is exclusively statutory.

And in Oldfield v. New York & H. R. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 310, which was an action under the statute by a parent for damages inflicted upon his seven-year-old daughter by a street-railway company by negligently running a car over her and causing her death, it was said that at common law the right to maintain an action for personal injuries died with the person.

And in Telfer v. Northern R. Co. 30 N. J. L. 100, which was an action by a father under the

A minor is not incapacitated to make a contract for employment, even to enter a dangerous business; and in any action that would accrue to such minor his minority is only material on an issue as to whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in employing in a dangerous business one of such youth and inexperience that he had not the capacity suffistatute for the recovery of damages sustained by the death of his son, occasioned by the alleged wrongful act, neglect, or default of the defendant, it was said that the common law gives no action to a father sustaining such an injury.

So, in Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp, 100 Pa. 98, which was an action by a father to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of his son, it was said that in such cases as these there was no right of action at common law. The right is purely statutory.

And in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Baker, 33 Ark. 350, which was an action under the statute by a mother for the negligent killing by a railway train of her infant child, it was said that by the common law the death of a human being could not be made the subject of a civil action.

And in Morgan v. Southern Pac. Co. 95 Cal. 510, 17 L. R. A. 71, which was a similar action, it was said that an action to recover damages for the death of a relative was not known to common law. It is of recent legislative origin.

And in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Adams, 55 Pa. 499, which was an action under the statute relating to actions for personal injuries for negligence, by parents for the negligence of a railroad company resulting in the death of their son, it was said that at common law no private action lay to compensate anyone, parent or child, husband or wife, brother or sister, for a loss occasioned by the negligence or violent destruction of life. The right is altogether of statutory origin.

So, in Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627, which was an action by the father, as administrator, of a person killed in a collision between two vessels, holding that an action in such case is properly brought in the name of the executor or administrator, but that the complaint must aver that the deceased left a widow or next of kin, who sustained a pecuniary loss, it was said that by the rules of the common law no action could be maintained by the personal representatives of a deceased person for loss or damage resulting from his death.

And in Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184, in which the question was whether a cause of action for the wrongful killing of a child which was instantaneous would survive under a statute providing that actions for injuries to the person shall survive to the executor or administrator, it was said that if death ensued immediately or before suit brought or judgment recovered at common law the cause of action is gone, for the maxim is Actio personæ moritur cum persona.

And in Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 183, which was an action by a husband for damages to his wife from which death resulted, it was said that at common law no civil action could be maintained for the death of a human being caused by the wrongful act or negligence of another, or for any damages suffered by any person in consequence of such death.

So, in Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 42 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 28 L. T. N. S. 197, 21 Week. Rep. 409, it was said that in addition to the fact that no case can be found in the books where an action by a master for loss of cient to understand the dangers incident to the business, and to guard against the same.

Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Crowder, 70 Tex. 222, 41 Tex. 262; Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller, 51 Tex. 270; Hamilton v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 54 Tex. 556; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Crowder, 63 Tex. 502; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jones, 78 Tex. 232; Texas & P. R. Co.

v. Carlton, 80 Tex. 397; Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, pp. 180, 181; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schwabbe, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 573.

Although the deceased was a minor, if he had sufficient intelligence to appreciate the dangers incident to the employment of a switchman, or knew of the use of the switch services of his servant from a personal injury resulting in immediate death has been maintained, and the general acquiescence in it for so many years, there is a clear parliamentary recognition and statement that such was the law to be found in the preamble to Lord Campbell's act, 9 & 10 Vict. chap. 93, reciting that "whereas no action at law is now maintainable against a person who by his wrongful act, neglect, or default may have caused the death of another person," etc.

d. Effect when death is not instantaneous.

At common law a plaintiff might, and still may, without any statute, recover for loss of services resulting from a wrongful injury to his child during the period of disability occasioned by such injury, and, if death resulted, for the loss of services during the time between the injury and death, and for incidental damages, such as for medical attendance, care, and nursing up to the time of death, upon the theory that the parent was entitled to the services of the child at the time the injury was inflicted, and owed the child the corresponding obligation of care, nursing, and medical attendance, but when the right to the child's services or the duty of care and maintenance was at an end, then no right of action for the injury existed in favor of the parent. Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328; Jackson v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 140 Ind. 241.

And while at common law a civil action cannot be prosecuted to recover damages for an injury resulting in the death of a human being, in an action by a mother, who is the surviving parent, based upon the killing of her child where death did not result instantaneously, as she is entitled to the services of her child without reference to the statute, she may recover at least the value of his services from the date of the injuries received by him up to the time of his death, and any incidental expenses she may have incurred for medical attendance, care, and nursing up to that time, the common-law remedy being, not for the death of the child, or for the injuries suffered by him, but for the loss of his services and incidental expenses. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. v. Cook, 63 Miss. 38.

And the parent would be entitled to recover his reasonable costs and expenses incurred during the sickness of his children. Wilson v. Bumstead, 12 Neb. 1.

So, in Long v. Morrison, 14 Ind. 595, 77 Am. Dec. 72, which was an action against a physician for alleged malpractice which caused the death of the plaintiff's wife, it was said that at common law an action for personal injuries to married women, infants, and servants would lie by the husband, father, or master for the loss of services, etc.

And in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodykoontz, 119 Ind. 111, which was an action by a guardian for damages for negligence, causing the death of his ward, it was said that while it was a settled rule of the common law that no one could maintain a civil action for damages on account of the death of a human being, all claims for injuries to the person being extinguished by the death of the person injured, if a child was wrongfully injured the father or person lawfully entitled to the child's services might recover for loss of services during the period of disability up to the time of death if death resulted, and for incidental damages for nursing, surgical and medical attendance, including proper funeral expenses.

While the cause of action for injuries to the person dies with the person injured, and the cause of action having itself abated no separate action can be maintained for such damages as are exclusively consequential for aggravated injuries to the person of the wife or child, a husband or parent has an independent or separate cause of action for the loss of the society of the wife or the services of the child as the case may be, which does not abate by the subsequent death of the wife or child, though the death of either affects the extent of the recovery, as by that event all further claim to the society of the one or the services of the other ceases and terminates. Eden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14 B. Mon. 204.

And the common-law right of action of a father for loss of the services of his minor child who is killed by the wrongful act of another is not taken away by Arkansas act of 1883, Mansf. Dig. §§ 5225, 5226, embodying the provisions of Lord Campbell's act in regard to suits to recover damages for death resulting from the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another. Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283.

The exception to the rule that at common law the death of a human being is not a ground for an action for damages, however, allowing the father in his character as master to bring an action for the injury causing the death of his child, proceeds upon the ground that such action, if sustainable at all, is for the loss of the services of the child as a servant, and does not permit an action by the father for damages for the immediate death of his child. Edgar v. Castello, 14 S. C. 20, 37 Am. Rep. 714.

In this case Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware, 80, infra, II., was explained and distinguished upon the ground that in that case the right of action against another by a parent for wrongfully causing the death of his child is placed upon the ground of the loss of service.

The right of action of a parent for the wrongful killing of his minor child fell at common law with the life of the minor, upon the theory that no civil action would lie springing from the death of a human being, and that when such an injury resulted in death the father's right of recovery was limited to the interim between the disabling injury to the child and its death, and his right of recovery was restricted to the value of the minor's services and the cost of medical attendance and nursing to the time of death. Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283.

And the damages recoverable by a parent as master for a negligent injury to his child as servant by which its death was caused were strictly limited to an amount fairly compensatory for the consequent loss of services up to the time of death and the expenses which the parent has incurred in consequence of the injury, such as for surgical attendance. Covington engine, if alive, he could not have recovered for any injuries the result of such dangers, and under the statute the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover unless he could have recovered.

Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Crowder, 61 Tex. 262; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlton, 60 Tex. 397; Texas & P. R. Co. v. French, 86 Tex. 96; ton Street R. Co. v. Packer, 9 Bush, 455, 15 Am. Rep. 725.

Where the father of a child is seeking to recover for an injury which caused its death upon the alleged ground that he was entitled to its services, the foundation of the action is the relation of master and servant, and it is not maintained at common law because the plaintiff is the father of the child, but upon the ground alone that he is entitled to the child's services, and no damages can be awarded him because of his injured feelings as a parent. Covington Street R. Co. v. Packer, 9 Bush, 455, 15 Am. Rep. 725.

And in such case the father could not recover the necessary expenses incurred and paid in the burial of his child. Jackson v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 140 Ind. 241.

So, in Pack v. New York, 3 N. Y. 489, which was an action by a parent for the injury and death of his eight-year-old son caused by fragments of rock being thrown into his house from blasting in an excavation made by the city, where the child died within an hour and a half after the injury, the court said that it had a strong impression that the father could recover nothing on account of the injury to the child, beyond the physician's bill and funeral expenses; but as it was doubtful how the charge ought to be understood, the question was not determined.

And in Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 478, it was said that the question whether a father, who has been deprived of the services of his child by a personal injury from which death ensued, may maintain an action against the wrongdoer to recover damages for such injury, is in no way involved in an action under the statute by an administrator for damages for such wrongful act.

But in Connor v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144, which was an action by a mother as administratrix of her child for damages for the death of the latter caused by the negligence or wrongful act of the defendant, it was held that the acts causing the death of a party constitute but one cause of action, whether the measure of recovery sought is for the suffering of the intestate during his life or for the wilful negligence causing his death, and that the party entitled to bring the action either at common law or under the statute must make his election, the acts constituting the wrong being inseparable though the recovery is different, and a recovery by the administrator for mental and bodily suffering of the intestate is a bar to any proceeding under the statute, either by the personal representatives or the next of kin.

As to whether the one action will bar the other, see also McGovern v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 417, infra, II.

II. The contrary rule.

The contrary rule that at common law a parent might maintain a civil action for loss of services caused by an injury to his minor child from which death resulted, recovered from the time of the injury to the time the minor would have arrived at the age of twenty-one had he lived, has been adopted in some of the cases, and strenuously urged by some of the courts.

41 L. R. A.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schwabbe, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

Although deceased was a minor he was not exempt on that account from a charge of contributory negligence.

The only difference between a minor and an adult turns upon the question of whether the minor was of sufficient age and discretion to

Thus, in Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, which was an action by a father for damages for a personal injury to his child resulting in death, it was held that the father was entitled to recover for the loss of services of the child from the time he was killed until he would have arrived at his majority had he lived.

And in Sullivan v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Dill. 334, it was held that a parent entitled to the services of his son may recover, from one by whose wrongful act he is killed, the value of his services from the date of his death until he would have become of age, and for medical services, and for nursing and burial expenses; and he is not limited in the estimate of his damages to the period between the injury and the death.

In this case Eden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14 B. Mon. 204, supra, I. b, was distinguished and dissented from, upon the ground that the opinion therein was based on the untenable ground that the public wrong merges in the private injury.

And Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616, supra, I. c, was distinguished upon the ground that it was an action by a wife for the killing of her husband, instead of by a parent for the death of his child, and that the wife has no legal right to the services of her husband, or common-law right to recover for his death.

And Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 42 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 28 L. T. N. S. 197, 21 Week. Rep. 409, supra, I. c, was explained and doubted, the court saying that the dissenting opinion seems to contain the better reasons, and the majority felt bound by Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493; but that it is noticeable that no attempt was made by the majority to vindicate the doctrine they felt bound to follow.

And Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, supra, I. c, was explained and distinguished upon the theory that strictly the complaint of the plaintiff in the case at bar is not for the death of his son, but for the wrongful act which by producing the death was the cause of his pecuniary damage; and it was said that that case, which was claimed to be the origin of the doctrine contended for, was determined in 1808, which was at so late a period as not to be binding upon the courts of this country as a part of the common law.

So, in Comyns' Dig. title Trespass, d, 5, it is said that trespass lies by a master for the battery of a servant, after the death of the servant.

The prevailing rule in England, that if a tort committed against a child results in its immediate death there can be no right of action for lost services, has been entirely ignored by the courts of Georgia on account of its alleged absurdity, and it is held that an action for lost services in such case can be maintained by the parent although death results therefrom. Amos v. Atlanta R. Co. (Ga.) 31 S. E. 42.

Thus, in Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698, which was an action by a father against the superintendent of a railroad company for damages to his minor son resulting in death caused by the negligence of the employees of the railroad, it was held that the son, being eighteen years of age, was old enough to render have guarded himself against danger, and to be reasonably expected to take the same measures and means for his protection as an ordinarily prudent adult would have done.

Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Crowder, 70 Tex. 222, 61 Tex. 262; Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller, 51 Tex. 270; Hamilton v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 54 Tex. 556; Texas & N. O.

services, and that it follows that the father had the right to treat the son as his servant and sue for the injury to him as for an injury to the servant.

And under the rule adopted in that state a tortious act which deprives a minor of his ability to render valuable service will give his parents a right of action against the wrongdoer, although such tort may result in his death, and although at the time of the injury he was serving a term in the chain gang for a violation of a penal law, which term would expire in a short time and before his majority, and such action may be maintained by the mother where the father had deserted the family long before. Amos v. Atlanta R. Co. (Ga.) 31 S. E. 42.

That court holds to the rule that when the parents have not lost dominion or control over the child, but still have the power to claim its services during minority, they can recover for lost services resulting therefrom, when the child at the time had the ability or capacity to render services.

In that case Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the decision was based upon the idea that the child, on account of its infancy, was at the time incapable of rendering any service, and that it would be a matter of mere speculation as to when, if ever, he would reach an age when he could render services.

So, in Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698, which was an action by a father against a railroad company for the negligent killing of his son, the homicide being alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the superintendent while conveying the son over the railroad, it was held that as the superintendent was engaged in the performance of a lawful act, he was guilty of involuntary manslaughter and not of a felony, and that therefore the private injury which resulted from the homicide was not merged in the public injury or suspended until after that had been avenged, and that therefore an action would lie by the father for such killing of his son.

And in that case it was said that the rule of the common law is no broader than that in a civil court. The death of a human being cannot be complained of as a private injury until that death has been complained of in a criminal court as a public injury. Every death of a human being that amounts to an injury at all, however, amounts by the common law to a felony, and in every felony the private injury is suspended until after the death has been avenged.

And the ruling in Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698, was affirmed and approved in Chick v. Southwestern R. Co. 57 Ga. 357, and McDowell v. Georgia R. Co. 60 Ga. 320.

So, Georgia Code, § 2980, providing that every person may recover for torts committed to himself, his wife, his child, his ward, or his servant is held to be but declaratory of the common law, but it must be averred that such torts resulted in loss to the plaintiff of the services of such wife, child, ward, or servant. Bell v. Central R. Co. 73 Ga. 520.

And that statute is to be considered in the 41 L. R. A.

R. Co. v. Crowder, 63 Tex. 502; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jones, 73 Tex. 232; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlton, 60 Tex. 397.

At common law no action lay for an injury that resulted in the instantaneous death of a human being.

8 Rapalje & Mack's Digest of Railway Law, pp. 742, 743; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 125; light of the common law, and a person may recover damages for a tort resulting in the killing of his child as he was authorized to do by the common law, but when the tort consists in any violent injury or attempt to commit a physical injury illegally upon the person amounting to a felony as defined by the Code, the person must either simultaneously or concurrently prosecute for the same or allege a good excuse for the failure to so prosecute. Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503.

The fact that the declaration in an action for tort alleges the death of the child upon which the tort was committed in consequence thereof does not make it an action to recover for the death of the child. Chick v. Southwestern R. Co. 57 Ga. 357.

So, in Hiner v. The Sea Gull (U. S. C. C. D. C. Md.) 2 Am. L. T. Rep. 15, which was a libel in admiralty by a husband for injuries to his wife terminating in her death, it was said that the rule that personal actions die with the person does not seem to apply to a case not prosecuted by an administrator, but prosecuted by the husband of the deceased, in which redress is sought for damages to him through injuries to her.

And in Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware, 75, involving the right of a father to maintain a libel in admiralty for consequential damages resulting from an assault and battery on his minor child on the high seas, from which assault the child died, it was said that the doctrine of the merger of the civil remedy in the public crime, which is a natural and logical consequence of the fundamental and organic principles of feudal society, is entirely in opposition to the system of civil polity established in this country, and has not been adopted in the state of Maine.

So, in Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague, 522, it was said that a father may maintain an action for the violation of his parental rights if the son survives the injury, although the wrong would not have been a felony if he had died, and surely there is no reason why an action for the same act should not be maintained when to the injury is added the calamity of death of the son: and that the question is not one of local law, but of general jurisprudence, and that the court cannot consider it as settled that no action can be maintained for the death of a human being.

But in that case it was held that a father whose minor son leaves his father's services and goes to a port and ships as of full age for a whaling voyage, during which he perishes, cannot maintain an action for the loss of the services and society of the son arising from his death, where it does not appear that the person with whom he shipped knew that he was a minor when he took him.

So, in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Zebe, 33 Pa. 318, which was an action by parents against a railroad company to recover compensation for the negligent killing of their son, it was said that the act of April 26, 1855, changed the law so far as the personal representatives were concerned, and conferred the right of recovery only upon parents for the loss of children, and upon children for the loss of parents, and respectively upon husband and wife, and that it conferred no rights unknown to the common law.

3 Thomp. Neg. pp. 1272, 1273; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, chap. 1; McGowan v. International & G. N. R. Co. 85 Tex. 298; Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 78 Tex. 621, 11 L. R. A. 891; Hendrick v. Walton, 69 Tex. 192; Yoakum v. Selph, 88 Tex. 607.

Exactly the same view has been taken by the court in actions by parents.

And in McGovern v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 417, it was said that, assuming, as seems to have been held in Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, that a father can recover damages for the loss of services of his minor son against a person who negligently caused his death, to be computed and ascertained from the time of his death until the time when the son, if living, would have attained his majority, in such case damages for the loss of services may be included in the recovery as a part of the pecuniary loss to the next of kin of the deceased, resulting from his death, and where the father elects to proceed for and claim his whole damages in a statutory action, the recovery is for his exclusive benefit, and such a recovery will bar another action for the same damages by the father as such.

And in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlton, 60 Tex. 397, which was an action by a father under the statute for injuries resulting in the death of his son in which it was claimed that the son was employed by the defendant against the father's wishes, it was said that if the action was based upon the father's common-law right for loss of services of his son it may be true, although the injuries which the son received resulted in his death, that he could maintain his action if the son was employed without his consent and was thus withdrawn from his services, or if employed with his consent to perform certain labor, and he was afterwards placed without his consent at labor more hazardous, through which he was injured.

So, in Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508, which was an action by a father for damages for the death of his minor son against a dealer in cartridges which he sold to such minor, after which another boy took up a toy pistol containing one of them and killed him, it was held that a man who places in the hands of a child an article of a dangerous character, and one likely to cause injury to the child itself or to others, is guilty of an actionable wrong; but it does not appear whether the action was at common law or under the statute.

A parent cannot recover for an injury to his child resulting in death at common law, however, where the child was incapable of rendering him any services at the time of the alleged injury. Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503.

So, by the early English law compensation in some shape was usually allowed for causing the death of a human being. Thus:

In 5 Case and Comment, 15, in an article entitled "Paying for a Life" it was said: "A curious fact in English law is the loss for centuries of the right to claim damages for the death of a kinsman. That right, recreated by modern statutes, seems to have been one of the most fully established of all rights in early English law, when civil and criminal procedure were not clearly distinguished. A schedule of prices to be paid for lives of men, as Professor Maitland shows in his 'Domesday Book and Beyond,' was well established. The wergild of a villein or ceorl was 200 saxon shillings to be paid to his kinsfolk as compensation for his life, while a further sum of 30 shillings called a man-bot was to be paid to his lord. But for killing a Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v. Hanks, 78 Tex. 323; Turner v. Cross, 88 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 262.

Even if there ever existed at common law an action for injuries resulting in death that action is merged in and done away with by the act of 1860 and its amendments, being title 57 of the Revised Statutes.

serf his kinsfolk received a wergild of 40 shillings only, while his lord received a man-bot of 20 shillings. A thegn, on the other hand, was a twelve hundred man whose wergild was equal to that of six villeins or ceorls."

So, in 12 Cent. L. J. 465, it was said in an article entitled "Was death by wrongful act, default, or negligence actionable at common law?"—that in "Sullivan's Lectures on the English Law," vol. 1, p. 117, we find this statement: "Murder, therefore, like other lesser crimes, was atoned among those people, as it was among the ancient Greeks,—namely, by a satisfaction of cattle, corn, or money, to the persons injured—that is, to the next of kin to the deceased, with a fine to the King or lord as an acknowledgment of his offense, and to engage the society to protect him against the future attempts of the party offended. These satisfactions were not regulated originally, nor fixed at any certain rate, but were left to the discretion of the injured or next of kin, limited only by his inability to refuse a reasonable one."

And in Crabb's English Law, 1st Am. ed. pp. 37-39, it was said that the Saxons "adopted the principle of compensation, for every personal injury whatever, even to the taking away of life. In the Code of Ethelbert, the first Saxon legislator, there appears to be hardly any other penalty attached to any offense, however heinous. If a man killed another, the slayer was to compensate his death by the payment of a certain sum, greater or less, according to the circumstances of the case. If a man killed his chief guest, his death was to be compensated with eighty shillings, and that of his other guests according to their rank. By the laws of Athelstan, the life of every man, not excepting that of the King himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the 'were' or ættimatto capitis. The 'were' for the life of the King was 30,000 krymmas, or about 300 pounds of our [English] money; that for a prince, 15,000; that for a bishop or alderman, 8,000; that for a sheriff 4,000; that for a thane, or priest, 2,000; that for a ceorl, 260. . . . Also, if a man killed the slave of another, he was obliged to pay the price of a slave, which was called 'man-bot,' that is, the man's price or value. If a master . . . killed . . . [his slave], he paid a fine to the King. If a slave killed a freeman, the owner of the slave was to make amends. On this principle of compensation it appears that if a man in hewing a tree happened to kill another, the relations were entitled to the tree. . . . Subsequent legislators . . . added other penalties, and punished crimes, not merely as private injuries, but as public offenses. Thus, in the time of Ina, half the were in the case of homicide was paid to the King in the name of frithbote, or compensation for a breach of the peace, and half to the family of the deceased, which was called 'mægbote,' that is, literally, a compensation to the kindred. By a law of Edmund, a homicide was to bear all the consequences of his offense, and his relations to be exempted from all charge, provided they afforded him no protection or sustenance, otherwise they were to be treated as accessories."

So, in 2 Thompson on Negligence, p. 1274, the

To allow, therefore, actions for injuries resulting in the death of any person in cases which do not come within the purview of the statute is to allow actions which the legislature did not contemplate, did not provide for, and would be to hold a defendant without warrant in law.

Messrs. Monteith & Furman for appellee.

Denman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this cause the court of civil appeals has certified to this court the following questions and explanatory statement: "This is a suit by

W. T. Beall and wife against the appellant to recover damages resulting from the death of their minor son, W. C. Beall. W. C. Beall was instantaneously killed by being run over by one of the cars of appellant's road. At the time he was killed he was acting as a brakeman in the employ of the appellant, and was a minor, about nineteen years of age. He was on top of the car that was being switched, and, by reason of some movement or jar or jerk of the car, he fell from the top of the car to the track below, and was run over, crushed, and killed. Plaintiffs brought this suit to recover damages resulting from the death of their minor son; alleging that he was a minor at the ancient custom of the Saxons of paying for life taken was described in practically the same terms, and it was said that "formerly at common law, in case of the death of anyone by accident, forfeitures were imposed, called 'deodands.' Lord Coke, in defining them, says, Deodands—when any movable thing inanimate, or beast animate, do move to or cause the untimely death of any reasonable creature by mischance, in any county of the realm (and not upon the sea, or upon any salt water), without the will, offense, or fault of himself, or of any person." But no deodand accrued in the case of felonious killing. Just before the enactment of Lord Campbell's act a statute was passed abolishing deodands."

In Sullivan v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Dill. 334, 337, it was said that the civil law and the French and Scotch law recognized the right to maintain actions for injuries resulting in death.

III. The true rule.

While the Georgia rule as shown by the Georgia cases set forth supra, II. would seem to be firmly fixed and well settled, it would appear that outside of that state the rule that there is no common-law right of action by a parent for loss of services of his child killed by the wrongful act of another must be regarded as the true doctrine.

Thus, in Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580, which was an action by a life insurance company against a person who had killed another to recover the amount the company was compelled to pay under a policy upon the life of the person killed, it was said that the authorities are so numerous and so uniform to the proposition that by the common law no civil action lies for an injury which results in death, that it is impossible to speak of it as a proposition open to question. It has been decided in many cases in the English courts, and in many of the state courts, and no deliberate and well-considered decision to the contrary is to be found.

So, in The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358, in which the rule was probably settled that a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained in the courts of the United States to recover damages for the death of a human being caused by negligence, in the absence of statutory authority, the cases laying down the contrary rule at common law were criticised and explained, and said not to hold the correct rule.

And in The Garland, 5 Fed. Rep. 924, which was a proceeding in admiralty for damages for the loss of the services of two minor sons of the libellant killed in a collision between two steamers, involving the question of the power of an admiralty court to grant a recovery therefor, it was said that although the rule of the common law that the death of a human being cannot be complained of as an injury in any 41 L. R. A.

court of civil jurisdiction seems to be based upon technical ground, and does not commend itself to one's sense of natural justice, it is too firmly established to be shaken by judicial opinion.

So, in Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague, 522, it was said that the weight of authority in the common-law courts seems to favor the doctrine that a suit for damages cannot be maintained for the death of a child, and that natural equity and the general principles of law are in favor of it.

And in Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 6 Sawy. 262, 5 Fed. Rep. 75, involving the question whether an action for damages for the death of a person will lie in admiralty, it was said that it is admitted to be the rule at common law that an action will not lie to recover damages for the death of a human being, but it is not admitted that the rule is founded in reason or is consonant with justice.

And in Monaghan v. Horn, 7 Can. S. C. 409, which was also an action in admiralty for the killing of a minor child, it was also said that no civil action can be maintained at common law for an injury which results in death.

So, in Green v. Hudson River R. Co. 2 Keyes, 204, involving the question whether an action can be maintained by a husband for damages arising from the instantaneous killing of his wife by the negligence of the defendants, it was said that Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, supra, II., and Lynch v. Davis, 12 How. Pr. 323, infra, IV., were the only two cases found in the reports of decisions in New York giving the slightest authority for bringing such an action, and that these are at variance with the former current of authority and will be found to be remarks not called for by the case then before the court, and that in Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, there appears to have been no question raised or considered in respect to the cause of action except only as to the proof of the relation of master and servant existing at the time and the allegation of special damage in the declaration and the proof of the direct consequential relation of the damage to the act complained of, and that the small amount of the recovery might lead to the inference that the recovery was for the expenses of interment, or that some care and expense were bestowed in an attempt to recover the child; and it does not appear that any exception was taken to the charge, or that it was made the ground of the application for a new trial, and the subject is not referred to in the opinion of the court in the most distinct manner. The whole authority of Lynch v. Davis, 12 How. Pr. 323, is that the statute does not give an action to the personal representatives of a married woman against any person for wrongfully causing her death, and that no authority for the rule stated obiter that the common law gave the husband and father a right to recover of the wrongdoer time, and that that fact was known to the appellant, and that he was employed by the appellant without their consent, and that the business of brakeman, in which he was engaged, was dangerous. There is evidence which tends to establish these facts. The jury found that he was a minor when so employed, and was wrongfully employed by the defendant, and assessed the damages at $1,500. There is an assignment of error in which appellant complains of the following charge: 'If you find that the son was a minor, and employed, without the consent and acquiescence of the father, in a dangerous employment, and that defendant's servants knew he was a minor, or ought to have known it from his youthful appearance, then plaintiffs would be entitled to recover, whether the son was guilty of contributory negligence or not, or whether the engine and appliance were sound and suitable for the business or not, or whether said employees were skilled and competent or not. The wrong, if any, consists, under such supposed state of facts, if you find them proved, in the unauthorized employment of a minor, if you find from the testimony that there was such unauthorized employment of plaintiff's minor son.' In this connection it is well to say that there is some evidence in the record which tends to show that the deceased was guilty of the pecuniary injury he had sustained by reason of the killing of his wife or child, and that it is thought that the court would be unable to find it laid down to that extent.

And in Covington Street R. Co. v. Packer, 9 Bush, 455, 15 Am. Rep. 725, it was said that Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, supra, II., is regarded by the courts of the state of New York in recent decisions as questionable, and was reviewed in Eden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14 B. Mon. 205, and considered as a departure from the well-recognized rules of law applicable to such case.

And in Edgar v. Castello, 14 S. C. 20, 37 Am. Rep. 714, Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, supra, was explained and criticised, the court saying that the points in question received but little attention at the hands of the court, the principal question considered being in relation to another matter, and that it is difficult to understand how the charge in question could be sustained in any view of the case.

So, in Edgar v. Castello, 14 S. C. 20, 37 Am. Rep. 714, Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague, 522, supra, II., was explained and distinguished, the court saying that that case does not decide that a father may recover damages for an injury to his child resulting in death, but that on the contrary Mr. Justice Sprague, though expressing his own opinion in favor of such a doctrine, admits that the weight of authority in the common-law courts seems to be against the action, and claims that equity and the general principles of law are in favor of it.

See also criticisms on Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 210, supra, in Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616, and Thomas v. Union P. R. Co. 1 Utah, 282, supra, I. c, and particularly contrary dictum in Oldfield v. New York & H. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 310, supra, I. c.

IV. Rule when injury consists of a breach of contract.

The sparsity of authority on this subject is such that the husband and wife and master and servant cases, and others which are governed by the same principle, are included for the purpose of more clearly showing the rules controlling it.

In cases of this class an entirely different rule seems to have prevailed when the action was brought by the person with whom the contract was made.

Thus, a libel for the death of a child poisoned by carelessness on the part of the officers of a vessel on which he was a passenger, from which he died, is one for breach of contract which survives to the administrator after the death of the child, and may be sued for in rem in like manner as if the deceased had sustained an injury short of death. The City of Brussels, 6 Ben. 370.

And an action may be maintained by the executor of an estate, independent of the statute, for damages caused to the estate by a personal injury arising from the breach of a contract made with the testator in his lifetime, though the injury caused his death. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 31 L. T. N. S. 847.

So, in Lynch v. Davis, 12 How. Pr. 323, holding that the right of action for alleged malpractice and injuries received by a woman from a physician from which she dies, is vested in the husband as such under the Laws of 1847, p. 575, and not as administrator, it was said that in such a case where the contract to perform his professional duty in a skillful manner was made with the husband or father, the common law gave the husband or father a right to recover of the wrongdoer the pecuniary penalty he had sustained by the reason of the killing of his wife or child.

And in Fairmount & A. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. 374, 93 Am. Dec. 714, it was said that torts that spring from contract, that consist in mere omissions of a contract duty, are strongly distinguished from wrongs which are willful trespasses upon the rights of the master in the person of the servant. For these no remedy exists except by action on the case, and in this class of cases the action must be by the party injured, and cannot be brought by the master or mistress.

And in Potter v. Metropolitan District R. Co. 30 L. T. N. S. 765, in which a wife took a ticket for a journey on a railway and during such journey received an injury from the negligence of the railroad company in consequence of which her husband incurred expenses and suffered losses after which he died and she sued the defendants in her representative capacity as his executrix to recover compensation to the testator's estate for such expenses and loss, it was held that the action was in substance one on contract, and that it was maintainable.

So, where a passenger on a railroad train received injuries caused by the negligence of the railroad company, whereof he died about six months afterwards, and which so disabled him in the meantime as to prevent him from attending personally to his business, which fell off and became of less value in consequence, his executor may maintain an action against the company upon the contract of carriage, such damages being the natural result thereof, on the ground that owing to the breach of the contract his estate was injured in two respects: First, by the payment of his doctor bill; and second by the loss occasioned to his business by his inability to attend to it. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 31 L. T. N. S. 847.

The maxim Actio personalis moritur cum persona does not apply to an action for such an injury. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L.

negligence of such a character as may have contributed to his injuries, and of such force as would have authorized the court below to have submitted to the jury the issue of contributory negligence. It further appears from the record that the jury, in making up their verdict, considered the value of the services of the deceased minor son. Now, in view of this statement, the court of civil appeals for the third supreme judicial district certifies to the supreme court of Texas the following questions: First. The deceased being instantaneously killed, could the parents, at common law, recover for the value of the services of the minor child, after his death? Second. Was it error, in view of the instantaneous death of the minor, and under the facts as stated, for the court to give the charge quoted?"

In Baker v. Bolton (decided in 1908) 1 Campb. 493, Lord Ellenborough said that "in a civil court the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury." In adhering to the broad principle thus announced, Pigott, B., in Osborn v. Gillett (1873) L. R. 8 Exch. 88, which was a suit brought by the father to recover for the loss of services of his daughter, whose death had been occasioned by the negligence of defendant's servant, said: "By the third plea the defendant says that she was killed on the spot, and the first question is whether this plea affords a good defense in law to an action by a master for damage sustained by reason of the death of his servant. It may seem a shadowy distinction to hold that when the service is simply interrupted by accident resulting from negligence the master may recover damages, while in the case of its being determined altogether by the servant's death from the same cause no action can be sustained. Still I am of opinion that the law has been so understood up to the present time, and, if it is to be changed, it rests with the legislature, and not with the courts, to make the change. It is admitted that no case can be found in the books where such an action as the present has been maintained, although similar facts must have been a matter of very frequent occurrence. This alone is strong to show that the general understanding had been to the effect laid down by Lord Ellenborough, in 1803, in Baker v. Bolton." This rule has been generally followed by the American courts, though some vigorous protests have been made against it, and none of the various reasons assigned therefor seem entirely satisfactory. No useful purpose would be subserved by an attempt to add anything to what has been said in the well-considered opinions cited and commented upon by Mr. Tiffany in his work entitled Death by Wrongful Act (§§ 1-18), where an interesting and exhaustive discussion of the question will be found.

After a careful examination, we are of opinion that, though the reason for the original adoption of the rule announced by Lord Ellenborough is involved in doubt and obscurity, still the rule itself is a well-established principle of the common law of England, adopted in this state by act approved January 20, 1840, and we feel bound thereby. We therefore answer the first question certified in the negative, and, since the father's right to recover depends upon the statute which imputes to him the deceased son's contributory negligence, the second question certified must be answered in the affirmative.

R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 81 L. T. N. S. 847.

And the fact that a remedy is given by statute for a personal injury causing death does not affect or take away a right of action for breach of the contract, consisting of the inflicting of a personal injury causing death upon a passenger upon a railroad train. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 81 L. T. N. S. 847.

The mother of a minor having no father but living with her and contributing to her support, who becomes a passenger in a railway car and pays his own fare, however, and is injured by the negligence of the railroad company's servants, the mother providing him with medical attendance, nursing and support, cannot recover against the railroad company for the loss of his services or for the expense of such medical attendance, nursing, and support, where the contract to carry safely was made with the minor, and the mother was a stranger to it. Fairmount & A. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. 374, 93 Am. Dec. 714.

41 L. R. A.

So, in Alton v. Midland R. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 213, 84 L. J. C. P. N. S. 292, 11 Jur. N. S. 672, 12 L. T. N. S. 703, 18 Week. Rep. 918, which was an action against a railroad company for the loss of the services of a traveler in the employ of the plaintiff through the defendant's negligence, it was held that an action will not lie at the suit of a master for a personal injury caused by negligence to his servant whereby the master lost the benefit of the services of the servant, when the contract out of which the duty arose in the performance of which the negligence occurred was between the defendant and the servant, and the plaintiff was a stranger to it.

In Fairmount & A. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. 374, 93 Am. Dec. 714, supra, it was said that the only ground upon which this case could be distinguished from Alton v. Midland R. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 213, 84 L. J. C. P. N. S. 292, 11 Jur. N. S. 672, 12 L. T. N. S. 703, 18 Week. Rep. 918, supra, was that of the infancy of the servant. It not appearing that the servant in that case was an infant. F. H. B.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

George B. MORLEY et al., Receivers, etc., of Union Street Railway Company,

v.

Byron A. SNOW.

(.....Mich.....)

The adoption by receivers of a street-railway company of the use of metal safes for receiving fares, into which the passengers are required to put their fare while the conductor presses a button which rings a bell and registers the fare, is a detail in the management of the road which is within the discretion of the receivers, and will not be controlled by the court.

(May 24, 1898.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to require defendant to vacate an order which directed petitioners as receivers to discontinue the use of the Mehling fare box system on the road in their care. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

A. Benton Hanchett, with Messrs. Humphrey & Grant, for relators.

Mr. E. L. Beach, for respondent:

A receiver is the agent of the court which appointed him.

The receivers were the mere agents of the court. The trust they hold is the court's business, not their business; its management is simply intrusted to them, subject to the orders of the court.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 369, note 1.

The receiver being the mere officer of the court, the control of the court over him is plenary—at least in any controversy which may arise between him and the court touching the propriety of an order of the court made upon him.

5 Thomp. Corp. § 6941; How v. Jones, 60 Iowa, 70; The La Crosse Railroad Bridge, 2 Dill. 465; 2 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 160; McKinnon v. Wolfenden, 78 Wis. 237; Waterhouse v. Comer, 55 Fed. Rep. 153, 19 L. R. A. 408, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 564; People, Shimer, v. Branch County Circuit Judge, 17 Mich. 67; People, Aetna Live Stock, Fire & Tornado Ins. Co., v. Wayne Circuit Ct. Judge, 20 Mich. 220; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Newton, 89 Mich. 551.

Judicial discretion is not reviewable upon mandamus.

Michigan Mandamus Cases, No. 333; People, Mabley, v. Detroit Super. Ct. Judge, 41 Mich. 31; Detroit Tug & Wrecking Co. v. Gartner, 75 Mich. 860.

Mandamus lies only to enforce strict legal rights, and will not be granted to enforce the doings of an act which by law lies in the discretion of the officer refusing to do it.

People, Houghton County, v. Auditor General, 86 Mich. 271; People, Sweet, v. Adam, 3 Mich. 427; People, Brown, v. Wayne County Ct. Judge, 1 Mich. 359; People, Atty. Gen., v. Monroe County Judge of Probate, 16 Mich. 204; NOTE.—As to discretion of receivers in management of business, see also Waterhouse v. Comer (C. C. S. D. Ga.) 19 L. R. A. 404.

41 L. R. A.

People, Evans, v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 89 Mich. 123; People, Mabley, v. Detroit Super. Ct. Judge, 41 Mich. 31; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 49 U. S. App. 462, 81 Fed. Rep. 254, 26 C. C. A. 883; People, Ampe, v. Wayne County Circuit Judge, 14 Mich. 33.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a mandamus to require the relator to vacate an order made by him. The petitioners were appointed by the circuit court for the county of Saginaw, in chancery, receivers of the Union Street-Railway Company of Saginaw, Michigan, upon the application of the Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Company, complainants in a cross bill in a case which is reported in 78 N. W. 243. The receivers were directed to take control of the road, and operate the same. At this time there was in the employ of the road, as a street-car conductor, John C. Smith, and he continued to act in that capacity after the appointment of the receivers. About April 1 the receivers adopted the Mehling box system of collecting car fares from passengers. This box is a metal safe, of convenient size, carried by the conductor, into which the passenger is required to deposit his fare, at which time the conductor presses a button which rings a bell and registers the fare. At the end of the day the box, with the transfer tickets, is handed by the conductor into the office, and becomes his settlement with the company. The use of this box was distasteful to the conductor John C. Smith, who filed a petition in which he represented his long employment upon the road; the fact that he was required to carry one of these boxes; that he had no means of knowing they were accurate; that their use made him responsible to the company for plugged or counterfeit coins; that passengers objected to their use, and when the conductors, following the rules adopted by the company, required the passengers to deposit their fares in the boxes or leave the car, it gave rise to controversies which resulted in injury to the conductors; and that he had been injured by a passenger who objected to paying his fare. He also represented that when attempting to use the boxes of the company in good faith, according to the rules, he had been laid off from work for a number of days; and he asked for an order that the receivers might be required to pay him for the time so lost, and the use of the boxes be discontinued. The receivers answered the petition, and claimed the use of the boxes was a reasonable and proper regulation, and claimed that Mr. Smith persistently and purposely refused to properly use them,—and that after being warned that, if he did not properly use the boxes as directed, he would be laid off. Proof was offered before the court from which it pretty clearly appears that there would be no difficulty in operating the boxes if the conductors were so inclined, and that there was no practical difficulty in the way of their use, either on the part of the passengers or the conductors. The court made an order granting the prayer of the petition, not for the reasons set up therein, but, to state it in his own language, used at the time he granted the order: "It seems to me, in this matter, that the fact of the receivers publishing notices in the car that no conductor shall handle money, connecting that with the fact that he shall be liable and responsible for any plugged money or counterfeit money that is placed in these boxes; compelling the public to place the fares in these boxes, and for the further reason that it is objectionable to the public to be compelled to put the money in the boxes. For these reasons it seems to me that, coupling the advertisement with the request to the public, it means that the conductors are not to be trusted; that they are not to handle the money; that there is some honest person somewhere who can handle the money, and count it correctly, but that these men are liable not to do so. It is an insinuation of dishonesty. In my opinion, it is saying to the public, 'We have men in our employ whom we cannot trust, whom we are unable to trust, and I warn you that here is a man who is liable to appropriate to his own use money that he may collect that belongs to this railroad.' It tends to ostracize from society people who are so engaged,—so employed. Children talk of it on the street. People discuss it,—that they are not proper persons to associate with; they cannot be trusted in handling five-cent pieces. I think this box is not a proper regulation; that it is not a thing to be used in the manner in which it is used; and an order may be made discontinuing the use of it."

We think the conclusion reached by the learned judge is wholly unwarranted by the facts. Conductors of street cars deal with a great number of persons, some of whom are entering and leaving the cars frequently. It often happens that change must be made, and there are opportunities for mistakes. It is not unreasonable to assume that like persons in all callings, some of the employees of street-car companies will yield to temptation, when presented. Everyone at all familiar with business upon a large scale knows that it is desirable to have it so systematized that mistakes or fraud in its conduct shall not occur. Officials, both of the state and nation, and officers charged with the management of banks, railroads, and other corporations, are surrounded by checks and safeguards calculated to do away with the possibilities of frauds or mistakes. The cash register is to be found in most places of business. Upon the elevated roads in the large cities, the passenger pays his fare before he enters upon the platform, over which he must pass to get admission to his train. Everyone recognizes the checks and safeguards, as proper to be used, and no one has a right to regard them as an imputation upon the honesty of any individual using them. Their use is simply a recognition of what we all know to be a fact, with humanity constituted as it is,—that, in the conduct of a large business by many persons, there is a liability to make mistakes, and a possibility of the commission of frauds. The Great Teacher, in that prayer which is the model of all prayers, prayed, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." It can readily be seen how the unintelligent or dishonest might object to these checks and safeguards, but it is difficult to understand how the honest and intelligent should object to any practical method which would reduce the probability of mistakes, or the opportunities for the commission of fraud, to the minimum.

It is urged on the part of the relator that, as the receiver is an officer of the court, the control of the court over him is plenary, that whatever he does is done under the direction of the court, and that he is bound to observe the order of the court; citing 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6941. It is true that receivers are officers of court. It is also true that less discretion is given to passive receivers, whose duty consists simply of taking possession of property, and converting it into money, and distributing it, than is allowed to an active receiver, who is required to manage a going concern like a system of street railways or a railroad. Such an officer, to be successful, must possess large executive ability, and must be clothed with considerable discretion. High, Receivers, § 392. He may do such things, in the ordinary course of business, as to him, in good faith, seem necessary to render the business of the road profitable and successful. He is not only the arm of the court, but he represents, in a sense, the creditors and the stockholders of the road. If they had the time to do so, very few courts possess the necessary knowledge to enable them to successfully manage a system of street railways. It is said in Continental Trust Co. v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 59 Fed. Rep. 514: "The receiver is chosen, on account of his experience and sound judgment, to operate the road for the benefit of the creditors and all concerned. While he is the officer of the court, and subject to the orders and directions of the latter, yet his instructions are always general in their character. He is expected to look after the details of the business, and to apply to the court from time to time, when special instructions seem necessary. The very nature of his relations to the court, and his duties to the creditors, entitle him to the largest degree of discretion possible in the discharge of his duties. The court is constituted of several judges, and the railroad being operated extends through several judicial districts, so that it is difficult to secure uniformity in the administration of the property when an attempt is made to retain control of the details of the management in the court. It is therefore the settled practice, both as a matter of comity between the judges, and as a matter of necessity to the proper and safe administration of the trust, to impose, as far as possible, the management of the property upon the receiver, and to remit the supervision of his management to the court in which he was appointed, and in which the primary jurisdiction attached. In view of this well-defined policy, it must be apparent that in the operation of a railroad extending from Toledo to St. Louis the court must necessarily rely upon the receiver, and hold him responsible for details. His discretion in such management will not be interfered with, except where some abuse and wrong is manifest. In Taylor v. Sweet, 40 Mich. 786, Judge Cooley, speaking for the supreme court of Michigan, in reference to the employment of help in the management of business confided to a receiver in that case, said: 'The receiver, however, has ample power to employ them, and any other persons whose services he may need; and we think a court, which can know much less about the needs of the business than the receiver, ought not to interfere with his discretion unless some abuse is alleged and shown.' In Kerr on Receivers the following principle is given in paragraph 175: 'If he is empowered by the court to continue the management of the business over which he is appointed, he may employ such persons as may be necessary for the purpose, and the court will not interfere with his discretion as regards such employment, unless some abuse is shown.' These principles of law were declared in a case where a receiver was managing the business of a partnership. With how much greater force and pertinence do they apply to a receiver charged with looking after the intricate business of a great railroad 450 miles in length, requiring familiarity with detail and expert knowledge which can only be acquired through long training and experience! A controversy recently arose between the engineers, firemen, and trainmen on the East Tennessee, Virginia, & Georgia Railroad, and the receivers in charge of that extended system, running through several states, as to an order of the latter concerning the wages of employees. The receivers were appointed in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Tennessee. During the controversy, and while the chiefs of the organization of engineers and firemen were in Knoxville, negotiating with Receiver Fink on the subject, the former made representations as to the nature of the contention between them to Circuit Judge Lurton, then in Knoxville. The latter declined to entertain jurisdiction of the controversy, and remitted the question to the receivers; saying their decision would be final, unless palpable wrong and injustice were done. This is the only proper practice to pursue in these controversies. Courts are not constituted to manage and operate railroads. The judges, learned in the law though they may be, are not experienced in large business undertakings. They are not trained in those departments of railroad management which relate to the wages of employees, to the numbers necessary for the maintenance of the roadbed, and for the safe operation of trains, to the tariffs for freight, and the purchases of supplies. Even if capable of mastering such details, their time will not permit. They are occupied in determining the legal rights of parties in litigated cases, and though in these days of large ventures and improvident railroad enterprises the courts are called upon, through receivers, to temporarily manage them pending litigation necessary to a foreclosure sale, yet, as before stated, they assume this burden because it cannot be evaded; but they manage them through receivers selected for their experience and demonstrated ability, and they rely upon their experience and judgment to wisely and economically administer the trust." See also 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 870; Cordrey v. Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. 1 Woods, at page 386; Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co. 62 Iowa, 728.

41 L. R. A.

Applying these principles to the case in hand, what is the situation, and what should be the result? The receivers are in the management of a great property. They adopted a device which in their judgment is calculated to help make the management of the road successful and profitable. Their judgment is challenged by one of their employees. He appeals to the court. The receivers are supposedly appointed because of their responsibility and ability. The act of the receivers is a detail in the management of the road. The act done is not shown to be an abuse of discretion on the part of the receivers. If the court is to substitute its judgment for the judgment of the receiver in a detail of management like this, where will its duty end? Shall the court enter into the consideration of the entire organization of the road, and determine whether one man shall be discharged, and another employed? Will it enter into the inquiry as to the quality of the coal used in the power house, or the brand of oil used as a lubricator? Will it entertain a complaint of an employee that he should be furnished with a pointed shovel in his work, instead of the one he is now required to use? We think the learned judge entered upon an inquiry that properly belongs with the receivers, and not with the court. If they are not competent to deal with such a detail of the management of the road, they should be removed, and someone appointed who is competent.

The writ should issue as prayed.

The other Justices concur in the opinion of Moore, J.

Grant, Ch. J., concurring:

I fully concur in the opinion of my brother Moore. I desire to say, in addition, that I do not think Judge Snow had any authority to pass upon the question, for the reason that the identical question had before been passed upon by Judge Wilbur, in the case of Kitchen v. Wilbur. Mr. Kitchen was a passenger, refused to put his fare in the box, was removed from the car, and applied to Judge Wilbur for leave to sue the receivers. Judge Wilbur refused, and his order thereon was affirmed by this court. By act No. 75, Pub. Acts 1889, an additional circuit judge was provided for the Saginaw circuit. Section 8 of that act provides: "No order shall be stayed, nor shall any stay of proceedings or injunction be had or set aside or modified or dissolved, except by the judge trying the case or making the order, or granting the injunction, except that in case of the absence from the county, sickness or other cause disabling such judge to act, the other circuit judge shall have power to stay, modify, set aside, or dissolve such order or injunction. Neither judges shall grant any application which shall have been denied by the other." The sole question in that case, or in this, was the reasonableness of the regulation. I think that the order of Judge Wilbur under this statute was conclusive upon Judge Snow, and that he should for this reason have denied the order.

Long, J., concurs in the opinion of Grant, Ch. J.

Hooker, J., concurring:

I concur in the result reached by my brother

Moore in this case, for the reasons stated in his opinion, and for the further reason that the relation of the petitioner to this proceeding is not such as to give him a right to intervene for the purpose mentioned in his petition. He is an employee, merely; and if he was not satisfied to perform such labor as the receiver had to do, in such a manner as the receiver wanted it done, he was under no obligation to continue in his employ. The proceeding is one brought to enable the creditors of the street-railway company to realize from its assets, which may be supposed to be inadequate to pay its debts. If every man in the employ of the receiver who chanced to differ with him about the method of conducting the business may ask the intervention of the court to compel such changes as he may think advisable, the delay and expense to the receiver would be likely to exhaust the patience of creditors, and the property would be absorbed, to their exclusion. This petitioner is not a party to the record, nor is he a party in interest, in any sense which should permit him to intervene. The only ground upon which his intervention might be justified is the claim to compensation during the time he was laid off. As to that, we find nothing in the case which would justify the court in ordering the receiver to pay him for time that he was not at work, especially as his own conduct was just cause for his discharge, if any cause was necessary.

Grant, Ch. J., and Long, J., concur in the opinion of Hooker, J.

William L. CARPENTER, Exr., etc., of Herbert M. Snow, Deceased, Appt.,

Mary L. SNOW, Appellee,
and

Clara L. SNOW et al., by Guardian, Appts.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The intention to make no provision for a child already born need not be shown by the will itself, under How. Ann. Stat. § 5810, giving such child the right to share as in case of intestacy, if "it shall appear that such omission was not intentional, but was made by mistake or accident."
2. The intention of a testator that no provision should be made for a child afterwards born, which must "be apparent from the will," under How. Ann. Stat. § 5809, in order to prevent such child from taking as in case of intestacy, is not shown by a provision which gives all property of every kind and nature to testator's wife.

(July 12, 1898.)

CROSS-APPEALS by plaintiff and by the infant defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County construing the will of Herbert M. Snow, deceased, in favor of his widow to the exclusion of his children. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to effect of omission to provide for children in will, see Smith v. Olmstead (Cal.) 12 L. R. A. 46; Re Callaghan (Cal.) 39 L. R. A. 689. 41 L. R. A.

Mr. Whitney C. Beckwith for appellant Carpenter.

Messrs. William H. Hockaday and Matthew Finn, for infant appellants:

The question whether or not Clara was intentionally omitted, or omitted by accident or mistake, is clearly one of fact which she is entitled to have submitted to a jury.

Re Subbina, 94 Mich. 304.

The after-born children, Harry and Gertrude, take as heirs at law unless it be apparent from the will that it was the intention of the testator that no provision should be made for them.

Breece v. Stiles, 22 Wis. 120; Wasserman v. Chicago, R. & A. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 874; Lurie v. Radnitzer, 166 Ill. 609.

A presumption of an intention to disinherit after-born children does not arise from the disinheriting of those born prior to the making of the will.

Negus v. Negus, 46 Iowa, 490, 26 Am. Rep. 157.

There is no ambiguity on the face of this instrument, and in such case extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show an intent other than that expressed.

Kinney v. Kinney, 34 Mich. 250; Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Mich. 353; Forbes v. Darling, 94 Mich. 622; Wigram, Wills, intro. p. 9; Walston v. White, 5 Md. 297; Hawman v. Thomas, 44 Md. 80; Hammond v. Hammond, 55 Md. 575; Funk v. Davis, 103 Ind. 231; McCauley v. Buckner, 87 Ky. 191.

If the ambiguity occurs in the wording of a will, producing a palpable uncertainty on the face of the instrument, extrinsic evidence cannot remove the difficulty without putting new words in the mouth of the testator and in effect making a new will for him.

Senger v. Senger, 81 Va. 687.

When the provisions of a will are not ambiguous, parol testimony as to the understanding in which words were used by the person who drew the will is not admissible.

Defreese v. Lake, 109 Mich. 415, 32 L. R. A. 744.

In case of a supposed ambiguity appearing upon the face of the will, parol evidence is not admissible to supply, contradict, enlarge, or vary, the words of the will or to explain the intention of the testator.

Dickison v. Dickison, 86 Ill. App. 507; Blatchford v. Newberry, 99 Ill. 11; Kirkland v. Conway, 116 Ill. 438; Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives & Granting Annuities v. Bowerle, 143 Ill. 459; Hayward v. Loper, 147 Ill. 41.

Infant children, most of all, deserve a court's solicitude, for those of tender years at least can hardly be thought to have incurred the parent's just resentment, or to deservedly forfeit what naturally belongs to them; and being themselves unable to protect their own inheritance, the tribunal of justice should secure those rights for them where the rules of interpretation permit it.

Schouler, Wills, pp. 487, 488.

Our statute was undoubtedly designed to prevent a child from being a public charge, where the father by accident or mistake unintentionally or otherwise omits to make any provision whatever for such child.

Forbes v. Darling, 94 Mich. 621; 1 Bl. Com. p. 450; Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare, 145; Maugham v.

Mason, 1 Ves. & B. 410; 8 Lewin, Tr. 5th Eng. ed. 1221; 1 Jarman, Wills, Bigelow's ed. p. 565; 1 Perry, Tr. §§ 157, 161.

Messrs. Walker & Spalding, for Mary L. Snow, appellee:

At the common law the disposition of property made by will was controlling except only that if after the making of a will the testator married and a child was born the will was thereby revoked absolutely. But neither marriage alone nor the birth of issue alone after the making of a will revoked it.

1 Jarman, Wills, Bigelow's ed. pp. 110, 111.

The statutes are of the following general classes:

1. Those enacting that after-born issue unprovided for by will or otherwise take as in case of intestacy, without reference to the intent of the testator, however expressed or evidenced.

Pennsylvania. See Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483; Ala. Code 1886, § 1955. Texas. Sayler's Stat. § 4868.

2. Statutes providing that such issue so take if not provided for by will or otherwise and not mentioned in the will.

Ark. Digest 1884, § 6499; Mo. Stat. 1889, § 8887; 2 N. Y. Stat. 9th ed. 1879, § 49; N. H. Stat. § 10, p. 455.

If not provided for by settlement nor disinherited.

3 N. J. Stat. 1895, § 19, p. 3760.

3. Statutes providing that children unprovided for by will shall so take unless it appears that the omission was intentional and not by mistake or accident.

Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, § 21, p. 750; Me. Laws 1888, p. 608; R. I. Stat. § 22, pp. 666; Cal. Civil Code, § 1306.

4. Statutes providing that after-born children unprovided for take as in case of intestacy, unless it is apparent from the will that the testator intended that no provision should be made for them.

2 How. Anno. Stat. § 5809; Starr & C. Ill. Stat. § 10, p. 189; Wis. Rev. Stat. 1858, chap. 97, § 26; Neb. Stat. 1895, § 2662.

The provision of our statute being that the after-born children unprovided for in the will do not take any share in the estate where it appears from the will that the testator intended that no provision should be made for them, the question is whether, under this will, the intention not to provide so appears. The language of the will itself, without reference to any extrinsic fact, gives evidence of such intent.

The circumstances under which the will was made may be considered by the court in determining whether the intent to exclude the after-born is to be inferred from the language used in the will.

The will shows that the testator was married, and the presumption of the common law, which is unchanged by statute, is that a married testator makes his will in contemplation of the birth of children.

1 Jarman, Wills, p. 111.

This being the presumption, this absolute disposition of the property in favor of the wife to the exclusion of all others shows an intent to exclude the after-born.

Loring v. Marsh, 6 Wall. 337, 18 L. ed. 802; Heeb v. Heeb, 93 Iowa, 416.

41 L. R. A.

This is not a case of an ambiguity patent upon the face of the will. The uncertainty arises only in view of a fact not disclosed by the will itself, viz.: the birth of children after the will was made. A doubt raised by an extrinsic fact can unquestionably be dispelled by a consideration of those facts surrounding the execution of the will and effective in determining its provisions.

1 Jarman, Wills, pp. 400, 401; Wigram, Wills, p. 143; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, 8 L. ed. 323.

The cases directly bearing upon the question here involved are three in number, one supporting my position, two opposed to it. Each case arose upon a statute identical with our own.

Hawhe v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 165 Ill. 561; Breese v. Stilke, 22 Wis. 120; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wasserman, 22 Fed. Rep. 872.

In each of the two following cases under a will and on a state of facts very similar to that at bar, it was held that the language of the will taken together with the circumstances of its execution showed an intention to disinherit the children.

Buckley v. Gerrard, 123 Mass. 8; Peters v. Siders, 126 Mass. 135, 30 Am. Rep. 671.

The question whether the language meant the bequest to be in lieu of the right of dower or in lieu of all interests in the estate must be determined by the testator's intent, and the circumstances under which the will was made, were admissible upon that question.

Dakin v. Dakin, 97 Mich. 284; Reed v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 95 U. S. 23, 24 L. ed. 348.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding to construe a will made by Herbert M. Snow, who was married in 1883. July 8, 1884, Clara L. Snow was born. The will in question was made April 20, 1888. Harry A. Snow was born May 7, 1889, and Gertrude E. Snow was born April 28, 1892. All of these children were living when the death of Mr. Snow occurred, in October, 1897. Mr. Carpenter was named as executor in the will. Omitting the formal parts of the instrument, it reads as follows: "Second. After the payment of my debts and the expenses of administering my estate, I give, devise, and bequeath all my property, real and personal, and all the property of every kind and nature whatsoever, of which I may die possessed to my beloved wife, Mary L. Snow." As no provision was made in the will for Clara, who was born before the will was made, or for the two children born afterwards, the bill is filed to determine the respective rights of the widow and children. In the court below a decree was made holding the after-born children took no portion of the estate, and provided: "This decree is made without prejudice to the rights of the defendant Clara L. Snow to take proceedings at law to determine whether the omission to provide for her in said will was made intentionally, or by mistake, or by accident." Extraneous testimony was taken, which, if competent, shows that Mr. Snow intended to give all his property to his wife to the exclusion of his children, having confidence in her management of the property, and her sharing it with the children. While this testimony may be competent to show that the omission to provide for Clara was not intentional, we do not think it competent to show the testator did not intend to provide for his unborn children.

The provisions of the statute applying to the facts disclosed by this record, are as follows: How. Anno. Stat. § 5809, provides: "When any child shall be born after the making of his father's will, and no provision shall be made therein for him, such child shall have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, and the share of such child shall be assigned to him as provided by law in case of intestate estates, unless it shall be apparent from the will that it was the intention of the testator that no provision should be made for such child." Section 5810 provides: "When any testator shall omit to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, and it shall appear that such omission was not intentional, but was made by mistake or accident, such child, or the issue of such child, shall have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, to be assigned as provided in the preceding section." It will be noticed the language in the two sections with reference to showing the intention of the testator is not at all alike. In the last-named section it is not required the omission to provide must be shown by the will itself to be intentional. This section has been construed by this court in Re Slebbins, 94 Mich. 804, where it is held the question as to whether the omission to provide for a child in the will was intentional or otherwise is a question of fact which may be submitted to a jury. Section 5809 has never been construed by this court. The decisions of other courts cannot be harmonized. The case of Hawhe v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 185 Ill. 561, is in harmony with the decree made by the trial judge. The language of the statute would seem to be very plain. At the common law, marriage and the birth of children after the will was made would revoke the will. The legislature evidently had in mind that, if the father failed to make provision in his will for the unborn child, the law should make provision for it, unless the parent made it clear in the will itself that the omission to provide was intentional. How can it be said from the language used in this will that the father intended to cut off from inheriting his property two children who afterwards came to him, when no reference is made to them in the will, and neither of them was at that time conceived? A similar statute to this was construed in Bressee v. Stiles, 22 Wis. 120, where it was held the unborn children were to take the same share in the estate as if the parent had died intestate. A like statute was construed in Wasserman v. Chicago, B. & A. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 872. We cannot do better than to quote from the opinion of Justice Brewer: "In this case the primary question I am reluctantly compelled to decide in favor of the complainant, Wasserman. I say reluctantly, for when a man on the eve of death, having a child five years of age, and living with the wife to be delivered of a second child within twenty days, makes a will giving all his property to his wife, I think the common voice will say that he intended no wrong to either the born or unborn child, but trusted to his wife—their mother—to do justice by each, and believed that she, with the property in her hands, could handle it more advantageously for herself and children than if the interests in it were distributed. As a question of fact independent of statute, I have no doubt that Mr. Wasserman had no feeling either against the born or unborn child, but, having implicit faith in his wife, meant that she should take the entire property, and believed that out of that property and her future labors she would take care of his children. But the legal difficulty is this: The statute says that it must be 'apparent from the will' that the testator intended that the unborn child should not be specially provided for. How can any intention as to this child be gathered from the will alone? It simply gives everything to the wife; is silent as to children. If I could look beyond the will, my conclusion would be instant and unhesitating. Limited by the statute to the instrument itself, what can be gathered therefrom? It is simply a devise of all property to the wife. No reference is made to children, born or unborn. Can I infer from its silence an intention to disinherit? If so, the mere omission from a will would always stand as proof of an expressed intention. And whatever of apparent hardships there may be in the present case, a fixed and absolute rule prescribed by statute cannot, for such reason alone, be ignored. That the rule was intentionally thus prescribed is evident, not alone from the clear letter of the statute, but also from the history of this question at common law, and the various provisions of the statutes of other states. At common law the will of an unmarried man disposing of all his property was presumably revoked by his subsequent marriage and the birth of a child. This rule was borrowed from the civil law. Whether revocation would follow from subsequent marriage alone or birth of child alone was perhaps a doubtful question. In Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 506, it was held that both must concur, while in McCullum v. McKenzie, 26 Iowa, 510, the birth of a child alone was adjudged sufficient. See, generally, upon this question, 1 Redf. Wills, chap. 7; 1 Wms. Exrs. chaps. 8, 5; 4 Kent, Com. pp. 421-426. It was also, for a while, at least, disputed whether such revocation followed absolutely from subsequent marriage and birth of child, or was only to be presumed, and the presumption subject to be overthrown by evidence of the testator's intention. Lord Mansfield, in Brady v. Cubitt, 1 Dougl. 39, ruled that the presumption of revocation from the marriage and birth of issue, like all other presumptions, may be rebutted by every sort of evidence. See also [Johnston v. Johnston], 1 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 473. Such seems to have been generally the ruling of the ecclesiastical court. On the other hand, in Goodtitle v. Otway, 2 H. Bl. 522, Chief Justice Eyre held that 'in case of revocation by operation of law the law pronounces upon the ground of a presumptio juris et de jure that the party did intend to revoke, and that presumptio juris is so violent that it does not admit of circumstances to be set up in evidence to repel it.' And in the leading case of Marston v. Roe, Foz, 8 Ad. & El. 14, by all the judges in the exchequer chamber, it was finally decided that the revocation of the will took place in consequence of a rule or principle of law, independently altogether of any question of intention of the party himself. Such being the final solution of the question in the English courts it cannot be that the purpose of the statute in question was to open the door to any other evidence of intention than those expressly named. On this side of the waters the matter has generally been regulated by statute, with a prevailing tendency to declare that the after-born child takes the same share that it would have done if the father had died intestate; or, in other words that the will is absolutely revoked pro tanto, unless there is some provision made for such child, or an express intention that it should receive nothing. The statute of Wisconsin is identical with that of Nebraska, and in Breese v. Stiles, 22 Wis. 120, the inquiry as to the testator's intentions was declared to be limited to the language of the will, and, the will being silent, the after-born child inherited. See, among many cases, the following, which show how carefully the courts have enforced the rule of revocation pro tanto in the interest of the child: Waterman v. Hawkins, 63 Me. 156; Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483; Hollingsworth's Appeal, 51 Pa. 518. In the first the testator left certain real and personal estate to his widow during her life and widowhood, to revert to his heirs upon her death or marriage, and gave the rest to his father. A daughter born two months after his death was held unprovided for by the will, and recovered the share of the estate she would have taken if he had died intestate. In the second the testator gave his entire estate to his wife, saying in the will, 'Having the utmost confidence in her integrity, and believing that, should a child be born to us, she will do the utmost to rear it to the honor and glory of its parents,' and the same ruling was made. In the last case the will in terms committed any after-born child to the guardianship of his wife, adding, 'Which guardianship I intend and consider a suitable and proper provision for such child;' and still a similar decision was pronounced. Further citations would seem unprofitable. To sum the matter up, the common law courts of England finally reached the conclusion that the revocation was absolute upon the happening of marriage and birth of issue, and not dependent upon evidence of testator's intention. The general tendency of statute law in this country is in the same direction, and courts, as a rule, have carefully protected the rights of the after-born children. The language of the statute is plain and unambiguous. The will makes no provision for this child, does not mention or refer to her, and on its face manifests no intention that she should be unprovided for. Hence it must be held that she takes the same share in the estate which she would have taken had her father died intestate, to wit, one half." In passing this statute, the legislature required, if the father intended to disinherit the unborn child, he should indicate it in his will, and that it should not be left to extraneous testimony to show his intent.

The decree of the court below as to Harry Snow and Gertrude Snow is reversed, and a decree will be entered here giving to them the same interest they would have in the property if the father had died intestate. As to Clara L. Snow, the decree will be without prejudice to take proceedings at law to decide whether the omission to make provision for her was intentional. As all the parties were interested in the construction of this will, the costs should be paid out of the estate.

The other Justices concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

Julia G. HURT, Resp't.,

v.

George D. FORD et al., Appts.

(142 Mo. 283.)

1. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be made after the judgment is entered.
2. Judgment upon the pleadings may be entered after the verdict has been set aside on a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, which makes the necessary averments, but which cannot be sustained as a motion of the latter kind because it was not made until after the judgment was entered.
3. A conditional delivery of a promissory note to the payee or the agent of the payee cannot be made so as to make the subsequent signature of another person essential to its validity.

4. An oral promise by the payee of a note to save certain makers harmless is within the statute of frauds, Rev. Stat. 1893, § 5186.

5. A general denial is sufficient to raise a defense of the statute of frauds.

6. Refusal of an instruction presenting a question raised by the pleadings and the evidence is sufficient ground for setting aside a verdict.

(Barclay, Ch. J., and Macfarlane, J., dissent.)

(January 18, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of a promissory note. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to liability for signing an instrument on an oral condition as to the procurement of other signatures, see also Whitaker v. Richards (Pa.) 7 L. R. A. 749; State v. McGonigle (Mo.) 8 L. R. A. 41 L. R. A.

A. 735; Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Bacon (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 486, and note; King County v. Ferry (Wash.) 19 L. R. A. 500; and Carter v. Moulton (Kan.) 20 L. R. A. 800.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. John W. Beebe, I. N. Watson, and R. T. Railey, for appellants:

The court erred in rendering a judgment non obstante veredicto because the motion was filed out of time. It should have been made upon the rendition of the verdict and before the entry of judgment. At least it should have been made within four days after verdict.

2 Tidd, Pr. p. 920; 1 Freeman, Judgm. p. 7; State v. Commercial Bank, 6 Smedes & M. 218, 45 Am. Dec. 280; Schermerhorn v. Schermerhorn, 5 Wend. 514; Harrison v. Great Northern R. Co. 11 C. B. 541.

This motion is never resorted to in connection with a motion for a new trial.

2 Tidd, Pr. p. 920.

The theory for the motion for judgment, notwithstanding the verdict, was that upon the whole record the defendant never could make out a better case, either by replying or by new evidence, and so the court would let the verdict stand, and despite of it render judgment for plaintiff. Such judgment never was rendered, except in a very clear case; the court had to be satisfied that it was impossible for the defendant to make a better defense, either in respect of pleading or proof.

Pim v. Grazebrook, 3 Mann. & G. 863, 8 Dowl. & L. 454, 10 Jur. 250; Atkinson v. Davies, 11 Mees. & W. 236, 2 Dowl. N. S. 778, 12 L. J. Exch. N. S. 169; 2 Tidd, Pr. p. 922; Schermerhorn v. Schermerhorn, 5 Wend. 514; Bellows v. Shannon, 2 Hill, 86; 1 Bluck, Judgm. ed. 1891, § 16; Bouvier, Law Dict. Judgment.

The first count states an original promise.

Clark, Contr. 99; Thomas v. Cook, 8 Barn. & C. 728, Overruled by Green v. Cresswell, 10 Ad. & El. 453; Wildes v. Dudlow, L. R. 19 Eq. 198; Mountstephen v. Lakeman, L. R. 5 Q. B. 613; Yorkshire R. Wagon Co. v. Maclure, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 478; Guild v. Conrad [1894] 2 Q. B. 885; Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 161 et seq.; George v. Hoskins, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 63; Winn v. Hill-ger, 43 Mo. App. 143; Culkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 324, 24 Am. Rep. 593; Clifford v. Lohring, 69 Ill. 401; Crawford v. Edison, 45 Ohio St. 239; Kilbride v. Moss, 113 Cal. 432.

The second count states a good defense. A note may be placed in the hands of an agent or attorney as a technical escrow.

1 Shep. Touch. 59; Watkins v. Nash, L. R. 20 Eq. 262, 13 Moak, Eng. Rep. 781; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Iliff, 18 Ohio St. 235; Dietz v. Farish, 12 Jones & S. 19; Price v. Home Ins. Co. 54 Mo. App. 119; Bishop, Contr. § 356; Southern L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Cole, 4 Fla. 359; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327; Friendly v. Lee, 20 Or. 202; Humphreys v. Richmond & M. R. Co. 88 Va. 431; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the conditions on which the note was received.

Pym v. Campbell, 6 El. & Bl. 370; 6 English Ruling Cases, 168; Guardhouse v. Blackburn, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 115; Clark, Contr. p. 572; 1 Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. p. 159; Nash v. Fugate, 32 Gratt. 595; Be'l v. Ingestre, 12 Q. B. 316; 2 Whart. Ev. § 927; Lindsay v. Lacy, 17 C. B. N. S. 578; Wallis v. Littlell, 11 C. B. N. S. 369, 81 L. J. C. P. N. S. 100; McFarland v. Sikes, 54 Conn. 250; Juilliard v. Chaf-41 L. R. A.

fee, 92 N. Y. 529; Reynolds v. Robinson, 110 N. Y. 654.

Suppose Major Towers had knowledge, will anyone claim that that knowledge should be imputed to defendants?

Marshall County Supers. v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 782, 18 L. ed. 559; Creswell v. Lanahan, 101 U. S. 847, 25 L. ed. 853; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 88; Evans, Principal & Agent, pp. 90 et seq.

The contention that Major Towers could ratify his own unauthorized act is fully met by the following authorities:

Mechem, Agency, § 123, p. 85; Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357, 81 Am. Dec. 795; Penn v. Evans, 28 La. Ann. 576; Mound City Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Huth, 49 Ala. 530; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Dorsey v. Abrams, 85 Pa. 299, 27 Am. Rep. 657; Palmer v. Cheney, 35 Iowa, 281; Clark v. Clark, 59 Mo. App. 532.

The burden of proving ratification is upon the party asserting it.

Mechem, Agency, § 132; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

On petition for rehearing.

If the attorney of the payee could receive the note in escrow, his reception thereof was not a reception by the payee, and his delivery to the payee unauthorized and void.

Massmann v. Holscher, 49 Mo. 89; Millership v. Brookes, 5 Hurlst. & N. 796; Watkins v. Nash, L. R. 20 Eq. 262; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Iliff, 18 Ohio St. 235; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327; Dietz v. Farish, 12 Jones & S. 220; Friendly v. Lee, 20 Or. 202; Humphreys v. Richmond & M. R. Co. 88 Va. 431; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497; Price v. Home Ins. Co. 54 Mo. App. 119; Bishop, Contr. § 356; Tyler v. Cate, 29 Or. 515; Hansford v. Freeman, 99 Ga. 376.

When a surety signs a bond note, and leaves it in the hands of his principal therein to be delivered only on condition that it is to be signed by other sureties, and the principal delivers the bond or note, in violation of this agreement, to the obligee, and the obligee has no notice of such agreement, the surety will be bound.

North Atchison Bank v. Gay, 114 Mo. 208; State, Bothrick, v. Potter, 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440; State, Wight, v. Modrel, 69 Mo. 152; State, Brown, v. Baker, 64 Mo. 167, 27 Am. Rep. 214; State, Hewitt, v. Hewitt, 72 Mo. 604; Wolff v. Schaeffer, 74 Mo. 158.

Messrs. Peak & Ball, for respondent:

The jury should have been instructed that if the defendants saw this note after it was delivered to Yeager, paid interest upon it, and had it extended from year to year, and had an opportunity to examine and read it, then they were absolutely bound by notice of its contents and of the signatures.

Ellison v. Weathers, 78 Mo. 115; Snider v. Adams Exp. Co. 63 Mo. 376; Boatmen's Sav. Institute v. Forbes, 52 Mo. 201; Welsh v. Ferd Heim Brewing Co. 47 Mo. App. 603.

The delivery of a promissory note to the authorized agent of the payee is an absolute and unqualified delivery.

Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 670; Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 139; Massmann v. Holscher, 49 Mo. 87; Madison & I. Pl. Road Co. v. Stevens, 10 Ind. 1; Stewart v. Anderson, 59 Ind. 375;

Wight v. Shelby R. Co. 16 B. Mon. 4, 63 Am. Dec. 523; Clanin v. Esterly Harvesting Mach. Co. 118 Ind. 372, 3 L. R. A. 863; Duncan v. Pope, 47 Ga. 445; Scott v. State Bank, 9 Ark. 36; State, Bothrick, v. Potter, 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440.

Mr. C. O. Tichenor, also for respondent:

Defendants in effect are seeking by this defense to rescind the agreement by which they got the old note, and by which they got years of extension upon their debt to plaintiff.

Whittemore v. Obear, 58 Mo. 286; Whittemore v. Nickerson, 125 Mass. 498, 28 Am. Rep. 257; Jarrett v. Morton, 44 Mo. 277; Clough v. Holden, 115 Mo. 359.

They cannot rescind the contract without offering to restore whatever of advantage they have received under it.

Sanborn v. Batchelder, 51 N. H. 434; Hunt v. Silk, 5 East, 449; Clarkson v. Mitchell, 3 E. D. Smith, 272; Burge v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 105.

Being in default they are not in the position to defeat the contract by rescission.

Felix v. Bevington, 52 Mo. App. 406.

The exercise of the right to rescind must be promptly after the discovery of the fraud, or after a time when by reasonable diligence it might have been discovered.

Clough v. Holden, 115 Mo. 359; Estes v. Reynolds, 75 Mo. 565; Montgomery County v. Auchley, 103 Mo. 501; Lewis v. Brookdale Land Co. 124 Mo. 688; Cummins v. Lods, 1 McCrary, 338; Kingsley v. Wallis, 14 Me. 57.

If a note is procured by fraud there is no doubt such defense is available. If it is given upon contingencies not expressed in it, the failure of such contingencies cannot be set up as a defense to the note.

Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 139; Smith v. Thomas, 29 Mo. 307; Massmann v. Holscher, 49 Mo. 87; State, Bothrick, v. Potter, 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440; State, Brown, v. Baker, 64 Mo. 167, 27 Am. Rep. 214; Rodney v. Wilson, 67 Mo. 123, 29 Am. Rep. 499; Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 667; Gardner v. Mathews, 81 Mo. 627; State, Hewitt, v. Hewitt, 72 Mo. 603; State, Wight, v. Modrel, 69 Mo. 152; Whittemore v. Obear, 58 Mo. 286; Ayres v. Milroy, 53 Mo. 516; Smith v. Clark County, 54 Mo. 77; Wolff v. Schaeffer, 74 Mo. 154; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. § 81a; Moss v. Riddle, 5 Cranch, 351, 3 L. ed. 123; Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570; Cocks v. Barker, 49 N. Y. 110; Renard v. Sampson, 12 N. Y. 581; Halliday v. Hart, 30 N. Y. 474; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 55 Am. Dec. 330; Gilbert v. North American F. Ins. Co. 23 Wend. 43.

Yeager could not have acted as the attorney in this matter for defendants unless plaintiff consented.

Connor v. Black, 119 Mo. 134; Robinson v. Jarvis, 25 Mo. App. 426; De Steiger v. Hollingman, 17 Mo. App. 389, and cases cited.

Burgess, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit upon a negotiable promissory note for the sum of $8,500, dated on the 9th day of November, 1887, executed by defendants, and payable to the order of plaintiff on or before twelve months after its date. The material allegations of the petition upon which the case was tried are as follows: "Plaintiff, for her amended petition (leave of court having first been obtained), states that the said defendant Geo. D. Ford and the said defendant John R. Towers, under and by the name of J. R. Towers, on November 9, 1887, made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff herein their certain promissory note, wherein they promised, for value received, to pay to the order of Julia G. Hurt, the plaintiff herein, on or before twelve months after date, the sum of $3,500, at the National Bank of Kansas City, with interest from date thereof at the rate of ten per cent per annum, which said note is herewith filed, and made a part of this petition. Plaintiff states that on November 14, 1888, the said defendants paid the sum of $850 in full of interest to November 9, 1888, which said sum is credited upon the back of said note; that on November 9, 1889, the said defendants paid the interest in full on said note to said date, and the same is credited upon said note; that the plaintiff is now the owner and holder of said note." The answer, omitting the formal parts, is as follows: "Defendants, for their second amended answer to plaintiff's amended petition, admit they signed the note as set forth in plaintiff's petition; admit the same was delivered to plaintiff by one R. L. Yeager, as hereinafter set forth; admit defendants made payments as set forth in petition; and, for affirmative defenses to said note, defendants aver: First. That said note was signed by defendants solely for, and on account and in renewal of, a certain promissory note in words and figures following, viz.:

Kansas City, Mo., May 9th, 1883. No. 21,-950.

Six months after date, we promise to pay E. K. Thornton, cashier, or order, at the Bank of Kansas City, eight thousand and five hundred dollars, for value received, with interest from maturity at the rate of ten per cent per annum.

$3,500.

M. R. Hightower,
T. R. Towers,
Geo. D. Ford.

"Defendants further aver that the said promissory note last mentioned was given under and by virtue of the following agreement and arrangement, to wit: The said M. R. Hightower, principal in said last-mentioned note, made application to the plaintiff in the spring of 1883 for a loan of $3,500, to enable him to purchase a herd of cattle. Plaintiff, not then having the ready sum to make said loan, and being desirous to assist said Hightower, who was her brother-in-law, requested said Hightower to procure the defendants to sign a note, with said Hightower as principal, to the Bank of Kansas City, for $3,500, and then and there requested, authorized, and empowered said Hightower to state to the defendants, in order to induce them to become signers on said note, that she would take up said note when it should become due, and save defendants harmless from its payment. Defendants aver that in pursuance thereof (said request and authority) said Hightower requested defendants to sign said note, stating to them that plaintiff had requested him to say for her that if they would sign said note, and thus enable him to get the money from the bank, she would take up said note when due, and they should be held harmless from its payment. Defendants further aver that by reason of such statements and agreement, and relying on the same, they were induced to, and did, sign said note with said Hightower, and that plaintiff, in pursuance of said agreement above stated, and communicated to the defendants, came into possession of said note (the same being turned over to her as an asset of the estate of her deceased husband, and became her property), and by her act in that behalf defendants became and were released from all liability on said note, and the same became, as to them, null and void, and plaintiff is now estopped from maintaining any action upon the note given in renewal thereof. Wherefore defendants aver that the note described in plaintiff's petition was and is wholly without consideration, and plaintiff ought not to have and maintain her action upon the same. For a second defense, defendants aver that the note described in plaintiff's petition was not only without consideration, as alleged in this answer, but that it is and was of no validity in law, in that it was placed in the hands of one R. L. Yeager (who was at the time the duly authorized agent of the plaintiff), in escrow, with the direction that it was to be delivered by him to plaintiff, and have effect as a valid obligation only upon condition that one M. R. Hightower, for whose benefit the instrument was signed, should be procured, also, to sign the same, and said Yeager received said note charged with such directions and conditions. And defendants further aver that said Hightower was never procured to sign, and never did sign, said note, but without the knowledge of defendants, or either of them, the said Yeager delivered said note to the plaintiff; that, at the time the note in suit was placed in the hands of said Yeager, said Yeager turned over to one Towers the note first above described, and said Towers turned the same over to the defendants; that the knowledge that said Hightower had not signed said note came to the defendants since the commencement of this suit, and the payments thereon were made without the knowledge that the note had been delivered to said plaintiff by said Yeager contrary to said instructions given to him as aforesaid; and so defendants do herewith tender into court, for plaintiff, the promissory note first above described, and pray judgment. For a third defense, defendants aver that the note described in plaintiff's petition was and is not only without consideration, as first alleged in this answer, but that it was and is of no validity in law, for it was understood and agreed between defendants and one M. R. Hightower that said Hightower, for whose benefit the said notes were given, should also sign the note in suit, and in pursuance of said understanding said note, after it had been signed by the defendants, was handed by them to their agent, one Maj. Towers, with instructions for him to obtain said Hightower's signature upon the same before delivery thereof, but the said agent, not being able to find said Hightower, took the said note to the said R. L. Yeager, who at that time was the attorney and duly-authorized agent of the plaintiff, and delivered the same to him, at the same time disclosing to said Yeager the instructions he had received from defendants as aforesaid; and the said Yeager, thus having notice of the instructions so given to defendant's agent, received said note charged with said notice, and without further authority from the defendants, or either of them, delivered said note to plaintiff without obtaining the said Hightower to sign the same. And defendants aver that said Hightower was never procured to sign, and never did sign, said note. Defendants further aver that, at the time the note in suit was placed in the hands of said Yeager, said Yeager turned over to said Maj. Towers the note first described, and said Towers turned over the same to the defendants, who herewith tender into court, for plaintiff, the same. They further aver that the knowledge that said Hightower had not signed the note came to defendants since the commencement of this suit, and the payments thereon were made without the knowledge that said note had been delivered to plaintiff by said Yeager contrary to the notice and instructions given him as aforesaid." Plaintiff replied, denying all allegations in the answer, except as to facts alleged in the petition.

Plaintiff asked, and the court refused, the following instructions: "(8) The jury are instructed that, although the witness Towers delivered the note in suit to witness Yeager in violation of the instructions of defendants, and although he communicated his instructions to witness Yeager at the time of such delivery, yet, if the jury find and believe from the evidence that after said delivery, and after having knowledge that Hightower had not signed said note, defendants approved, and adopted as their own, the act of said Towers in making said delivery to said Yeager, the verdict should be for the plaintiff." "(10) The court instructs the jury that if they find from the evidence that the note in suit was delivered by W. A. Towers, as agent for the defendants, to R. L. Yeager, without imparting to him notice that he had been instructed by the defendants not to deliver the note to him until he had secured the name of Hightower thereon, then such delivery was valid and binding, and you must find for the plaintiff in the sum of $3,500, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from November 9, 1839; and this you must do although you may believe that defendants may have instructed him not to deliver said note until he had secured the name of Hightower on said note." The cause was tried with the aid of a jury, which returned a verdict for defendants. In due time, to wit, January 25, 1893, the plaintiff filed her motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment. Before that motion was disposed of, to wit, March 29, 1893, plaintiff filed her motion for judgment non obstante veredicto. On April 22, 1893, the court sustained the motion for a new trial upon the ground that it committed error in refusing instructions numbered 8 and 10 asked by plaintiff, and at the same time sustained her motion for a judgment on the pleadings, and rendered judgment in her favor for the amount due on the note, and interest. In due time, defendants filed their motion for a new trial, which being overruled they saved their exceptions, and bring the case to this court by appeal.

M. R. Hightower, mentioned in the answer, is the brother-in-law of the plaintiff, Julia G. Hurt; he having married her sister some time prior to the transactions out of which this litigation arose. In 1888 it became necessary for Hightower to borrow $8,500, and he applied to the plaintiff, who is the widow of James Hurt, deceased, and whose estate was then in process of settlement, for a loan of that sum. She did not have the money. She authorized him, however, to say to defendants that if they would become his sureties, so that he could borrow the money from some other source, she would take the note up at maturity. Upon this representation, defendants became Hightower's securities on a note to the Bank of Kansas City for the sum of $8,500, upon which he procured the money. The note was dated May 9, 1888, due in six months after date. When the note became due, plaintiff applied to R. L. Yeager and James Lincoln, who were executors of the will of said James Hurt, to take up the note. The executors then paid the note, and indorsed it to her without recourse. During the early part of November, 1888, it became necessary for Hightower to borrow the further sum of $8,000, which he obtained from the executors of the Hurt estate; giving as sureties George D. Ford, W. A. Towers, and Charles Gudgell. These two notes were turned over to the plaintiff by said executors as part of her distributive share of that estate. Interest was paid on both notes by Hightower until November 9, 1886, when he ceased to pay it any longer. Plaintiff then demanded the money on the notes, or the payment of the interest due, and new notes. One note for $8,000, dated November 9, 1887, and payable to plaintiff on or before twelve months after date, was drawn up, and signed by George D. Ford, W. A. Towers, and Charles Gudgell, and delivered to R. L. Yeager, attorney for plaintiff. At the same time Yeager assigned and delivered to the makers of that note the old note for $8,000, signed by Hightower, Ford, Gudgell, and W. A. Towers, dated November 11, 1893: At the same time the note in suit was drawn up, signed by the defendants, and delivered to R. L. Yeager, attorney for plaintiff, under the following circumstances: A note was executed by Hightower, Ford, and Towers. Immediately after the note was executed, Ford concluded that it would be preferable to have the note read "on or before;" and Maj. Towers was deputed to take the note, signed by Hightower and the defendants, to Mr. Yeager, plaintiff's attorney, and inquire if another signed, "on or before," would be accepted. Maj. Towers thereupon took the note, signed by Hightower and the defendants, to Yeager, and advised him of Ford's request that the note should be changed to "on or before." Yeager acceded to that request, and, returning the note to Maj. Towers, drew up another, reading "on or before," for the parties to execute. Maj. Towers then returned with the new note for execution. In the meantime Hightower had disappeared, and when Ford and Towers executed the note they turned it over to Maj. Towers, saying to him to go out and find Hightower, and get him to sign it, and not to deliver it to Yeager until he had obtained Hightower's signature. Maj. Towers, accompanied by Charles Gudgell, started out in search of Hightower; and, being unable to find him, Maj. Towers went to Yeager's office, and stated to him that his instructions were to get Hightower's name on the note before delivery, and that he had been hunting him, and could not find him, and asked Yeager to take the note, and get Hightower's name on it before delivering it to Mrs. Hurt. Yeager replied that he did not see what advantage it would be to have Hightower's name on the note, as he was "busted;" but Maj. Towers replied that, however that might be, his instructions were to obtain Hightower's name before delivery. Yeager accepted the note, and turned over to Maj. Towers the first note. Yeager did not get Hightower to sign the note. He turned it over to Mrs. Hurt without his signature. Defendants testified that they did not know that Hightower's signature had not been obtained until after this suit had been brought, although they supposed it had been. Towers kept the old note, and paid interest on the note in suit up to November, 9, 1899. There was, however, evidence tending to show that in December, 1890, Towers knew that the name of Hightower was not on the note. Upon the execution and delivery of the notes, all the interest due on the old notes was paid to plaintiff, and the old note, of which the one in suit is a renewal, delivered to defendants.

The first question for consideration on this appeal is with respect to the action of the court in rendering judgment for plaintiff on what is called the "motion non obstante veredicto." Such a motion can only be sustained when it appears from the record that the allegations in the answer constitute no defense to the action. 2 Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 997; Broom, Com. 4th ed. *209; 2 Tidd, Pr. p. 920; [Wilkes Broadbent], 1 Wils. 65. And even then such a judgment can only be rendered in a clear case on the application of plaintiff made after the verdict, and before entry of judgment on the verdict. 1 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 7. Tidd, in stating the distinction between a judgment non obstante veredicto and a repleader, thus defines the former: "Where the plea is good in form, though not in fact, or, in other words, if it contain a defective title or ground of defense, by which it is apparent to the court upon the defendant's own showing, that, in any way of putting it, he can have no merits, and the issue joined thereon be found for him, there, as the awarding of a repleader could not mend the case, the court, for the sake of the plaintiff, will at once give judgment non obstante veredicto; but where the defect is not so much in the title as in the manner of stating it, and the issue joined thereon is immaterial, so that the court know not for whom to give judgment, whether for the plaintiff or defendant, there for their own sake, they will award a repleader. A judgment, therefore, non obstante veredicto, is always upon the merits, and never granted but in a very clear case." 2 Tidd, Pr. p. 922; Lough v. Thornton, 17 Minn. 258 (Gil. 230); Bellows v. Shannon, 2 Hill, 86; Friendly v. Lee, 20 Or. 202. In this case the verdict and judgment thereon were rendered on the 21st day of January, 1893, while the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was not filed until March 29, 1893. In State v. Commercial Bank, 6 Smedes & M. 218, 45 Am. Dec. 280, the verdict and judgment were rendered on the 21st of November, 1845. On the 26th of the same month the district attorney moved to set aside the judgment, and for judgment non obstante veredicto, which was overruled. It was objected that the motion came too late after judgment was entered. The court said "that, like a motion in arrest of judgment, it must precede the entry of judgment; it being too late to arrest that which is already entered. This objection is quite technical, and yet it is in strict accordance with law. The objection is made, and there seems to be but one rule on the subject; and that is that such a motion must be made immediately after the verdict, and before judgment is rendered on the verdict." Moreover, when the motion was ruled on by the court, and judgment non obstante veredicto rendered, the verdict has been set aside, so that it could not then have been maintained unless it be treated as a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, which, under our system of practice, may be made at any time after the pleadings are made up, and before verdict, and after verdict set aside. The motion contained all averments necessary in a motion for judgment on the pleadings, and treating it as a motion for that purpose, as we think it should be, the question arises as to the sufficiency of defendant's answer; and, in passing upon this question, we think the same rule should be applied as in the case of a motion non obstante veredicto. But the sufficiency of the answer must be determined by the record, and not by the evidence. The answer admits that the note was delivered to one R. L. Yeager, as thereafter stated, and that payments were made on the note as set forth in the petition. It alleges that Yeager was plaintiff's agent and attorney, and that the note was delivered to him with directions not to deliver it to plaintiff until Hightower's signature was obtained thereto, which was never done. It will thus be seen that the answer not only admits the delivery of the note, in express terms, but it also admits the payment of interest on the note after its delivery, which is inconsistent with the contention that the note was never delivered. The question then is, Could the note be conditionally delivered to the plaintiff, or to her agent, Yeager, for her? Massmann v. Holscher, 49 Mo. 87, was a suit upon two promissory notes. One of the defendants answered, admitting the signing of the notes, and their delivery to plaintiff, to whom they were payable, and then alleged, among other things, that he signed and delivered the notes to plaintiff under an agreement and verbal understanding with him that the notes should be signed by one Hase, and, if not so signed, that they should be considered as inoperative and void. Hase never signed the notes. The court held (we quote from syllabus): "A promissory note may be delivered to a stranger, to be held by him as an escrow, to take effect on the happening of a future contingent event. But where it is held by the payee the doctrine of escrow cannot arise, and, no fraud being charged, proof of an oral agreement by which the note was to become legally binding, not from its delivery according to its tenor, but on the happening of a certain contingency, is inadmissible. Such testimony varies the effect of a written contract." So, in Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 139, it was expressly held that a note given upon contingencies not expressed upon its face was no valid defense to the note; that it could not be given to the payee as an escrow; that such delivery must be made to a third person, not the payee; that parol evidence is not admissible to vary the meaning of a note. This case was before this court again in 1878, and the same doctrine announced. Henshaw v. Dutton, 67 Mo. 666. The same question was before this court in Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 667; and it was again held that a note cannot be treated as an escrow after having been delivered to the payee, but, in order to have that effect, the delivery must be to a third person. See also the recent case of Garvey v. Marks, 134 Mo. 1. The same rule was announced in Harwood v. Brown, 23 Mo. App. 69, and in Thompson v. Irwin, 42 Mo. App. 403. The cases of Carter v. McClintock, 29 Mo. 464, and State, Bothrick, v. Potter, 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440, are not, we think, in conflict with what has been said. In the Carter Case the note was obtained by fraud, and it was held that, as delivery is necessary to the complete execution of a promissory note, if the payee obtain possession of it by fraud he cannot maintain an action thereon,—a ruling the correctness of which was fully recognized in Henshaw v. Dutton, 67 Mo. 666. In speaking of the Carter Case in State, Bothrick, v. Potter, 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440, all that is said is that that case "simply declares that no delivery of a note occurs where the payee surreptitiously obtains possession thereof, and that he cannot maintain an action thereon." There is no allegation in the answer in the case in hand that the note sued on was obtained by fraud; hence the Carter Case and the Potter Case have no bearing upon this case. The petition alleges that the defendants made, executed, and delivered the note to plaintiff, and its delivery is admitted by defendants in their answer; and, whatever the law may be elsewhere with respect to the delivery of such an instrument in escrow, it is well settled in this state that it cannot be done by delivery to the obligee, but may be to a third party. It follows that the second and third counts of defendants' answer set up no defense to plaintiff's cause of action.

In the first count of the answer it is alleged that plaintiff requested, authorized, and empowered Hightower to state to defendants, in order to induce them to become signers of the original note for $8,500, that she would take it up when due, and save them harmless; that, in pursuance of said directions, Hightower made the statements to them as directed by her; and that, relying upon said statements, they were induced to, and did, sign said note as the securities of Hightower. These allegations are denied by plaintiff in her replication to the answer. That the promise to save defendants harmless was simply an oral promise appears from the answer, and is undisputable; and that such a promise is within the statute of frauds (Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5186) was ruled by this court in Bissig v. Britton, 59 Mo. 206, 21 Am. Rep. 379. While that case is severely criticised in 1 Reed, Stat. Fr. § 144, and note U to that section, it was concurred in by a full bench; and its correctness has never been questioned by this court, in so far as we are advised. The question then is, As it appears upon the face of the answer that the contract was merely oral, and within the statute, was it necessary, in order for plaintiff to avail herself of the statute of frauds, that she should plead it specially, or was it raised by the general denial in the replication? The rule seems to be that when the contract is denied it is not necessary to insist upon the statute as a bar; that it is as fully raised by a general denial as by special plea. In Wildbahn v. Robidoux, 11 Mo. 660, it was said: Where the defendant, in his answer, denies the contract, "it is not necessary for him to insist upon the statute as a bar." Hook v. Turner, 22 Mo. 333. So, it has been said, it is as well raised by general denial "as any other answer could raise it." Wiswell v. Tefft, 5 Kan. 263; Bliss, Pl. p. 353; Allen v. Richard, 83 Mo. 55; Hackett v. Watts, 138 Mo. 502. In Springer v. Kleinsorge, 83 Mo. 156, in passing upon a similar question, it is said: "On such state of the pleadings, the plaintiff, as said by Ryland, J., in Hook v. Turner, 22 Mo. 333, 'must produce legal evidence of the existence of the agreement, which cannot be established by parol proof.' This logically results from the general denial authorized by the practice act. The general denial puts in issue every fact included within the allegations of the petition which the plaintiff must prove in order to a recovery. Northrup v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co. 47 Mo. 435-444, 4 Am. Rep. 837. In the action of replevin and of ejectment under a general denial the defendant may show that the claim of plaintiff is fraudulent and bad and thus avoid the plaintiff's title. Greenway v. James, 84 Mo. 328; Bobb v. Woodward, 42 Mo. 488; Mather v. Hutchinson, 25 Wis. 35, 36; Hayden v. Dunlap, 8 Bibb, 216. The answer in this case contains, first, a general denial of the allegation of the petition. It is true, it pleads other matters of special defense, but the new matter is in no wise inconsistent, in contemplation of the practice act, with the general denial. They can well exist together in point of fact and law. Nelson v. Brodhack, 44 Mo. 596, 100 Am. Dec. 328. This construction of the pleading in this case is in no wise in conflict with the cases of Gardner v. Armstrong, 81 Mo. 535; Rabsuhl v. Lack, 85 Mo. 316; and Graff v. Foster, 87 Mo. 512. In the first case cited the court simply holds that the petition was not demurrable for failing to recite that the contract was in writing. That was matter of defense to be raised by the answer. It does not say that the question would not be well raised, under our present practice act, by the general issue. So, in the case in 85 Mo. the answer admitted the indebtedness without pleading the statute. And in Graff v. Foster an examination will show that the answer did not deny the contract but merely put in issue the indebtedness. To deny the indebtedness is no denial of the existence of the contract, out of which the petition avers the indebtedness arose. Engler v. Bate, 19 Mo. 543." The effect of the denial by plaintiff, in her replication to defendants' answer, of all allegations therein, except as to the facts alleged in the petition, was to deny that she ever promised defendants, or agreed with them, that, if they would become the sureties of Hightower, she would save them harmless; and as the alleged contract was merely oral, as shown by the answer, the plea of the statute was as well raised by the denial as it would have been by special plea. The contract, if made, was clearly within the statute of frauds, and no bar to plaintiff's action.

Upon the facts disclosed by the record, instruction numbered 8 asked by plaintiff presented to the jury the question of ratification, which was raised by the pleadings, and which the evidence tended to prove; and in its refusal error was committed which justified the court in setting aside the verdict. As it is manifest from the record that defendants have no defense which could be made available by repleading, the judgment is affirmed.

All concur, except Barclay, Ch. J., and Macfarlane, J., who dissent.

Barclay, Ch. J., dissenting:

When this cause was in the first division, an opinion was filed (36 S. W. 671) which expresses our idea of the case. In view of the full statement of facts in the learned opinion of the majority of the court in banc, some parts of the divisional opinion need not now be repeated.

1. A number of minor points in regard to the procedure in the circuit court have been raised. We shall not touch upon them all, but discuss only those which seem to be finally material. As plaintiff had possession of the note, and filed it, the burden of proof at the trial was upon defendants to establish some one of their defenses. Though the Code of Procedure makes no mention of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, yet it obviously may be resorted to on a proper occasion. If neither the defendants' evidence at the trial nor their pleadings, disclosed any defense to the cause of action stated by plaintiff, it would not serve the ends of justice to grant a new trial; there being really nothing to try, according to the final opinion of the trial judge. In that event the court might properly give its view of the case on a motion such as that plaintiff filed (waiving now the question whether or not it was offered in due season). The filing occurred more than four days after the verdict, and the motion is attacked on that account. But, as we consider it untenable on its merits, we forbear ruling on the question of its timeliness. We also consider it immaterial to decide whether a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is available where a good affirmative defense appears in the answer, but is not supported by evidence tending to discharge the burden of proof as to that defense. We entertain no doubt that the testimony offered by defendants tended to prove at least one of the defenses set up in their answer. But, as we hold that the judgment should be reversed for a new trial, we prefer to refrain from any comment on the probative effect or weight of the evidence, further than the general statement just made.

2. The important and decisive question in the case raised by the answer is whether its allegations avoid the prima facie showing of the petition. The gist of the plaintiff's contention is that the answer admits the delivery of the note, and that the facts alleged in connection therewith are legally insufficient to avoid the liability created by the delivery. The defendants repeal that contention with vigor, and the discussion which that issue has elicited has been both entertaining and useful to the court. It will be noticed that the answer does not precisely admit an absolute delivery. It states that the note "was delivered to plaintiff by one R. L. Yeager, as hereinafter set forth." The answer then proceeds to set forth a conditional delivery to Mr. Yeager, and a failure of the condition, the facts of which are fully given: To simplify the case as now presented, we shall assume that the conditional delivery was made to plaintiff's agent (or in effect, to plaintiff herself), though there is some question as to whether the facts should be so interpreted. We consider that view of them, however, most favorable to plaintiff, and we will endeavor to apply upon that ground work the rule of law which we think controls this branch of the case. Plaintiff's learned counsel argue that no condition could be connected with the delivery of the paper to plaintiff's attorney. They assert that a note cannot be conditionally delivered to the payee or to the payee's agent. The principles which govern that subject are by no means universally settled. On the contrary, we find, not only conflicting opinions thereon in other states, but a want of harmony in the decisions in Missouri. The proposition contended for by plaintiff finds support in rulings (or at least remarks) in Massmann v. Holcher (1871) 49 Mo. 87; Henshaw v. Dutton (1875) 59 Mo. 189, and (1878) 67 Mo. 666; and Jones v. Shaw, 67 Mo. 667. While in Carter v. McClintock (1860) 29 Mo. 464, it was distinctly held that mere manual delivery of a note to the payee created no liability, where the intent to deliver was wanting. In that case the doctrine that a delivery of such paper may be conditional is conceded and acted upon. That decision was cited in State, Bothrick, v. Potter (1876) 63 Mo. 212, 21 Am. Rep. 440, a case which appears to assume the correctness of the proposition that delivery of a document may be conditional as between immediate parties. That judgment however asserts that the condition does not bind third persons who, without notice, acquire rights under the document, delivered in violation of the condition, in such circumstances as that case describes. That ruling has been often approved in subsequent cases, and is a leading one on the topic which it treats. The analogy afforded by the Missouri rulings on conditional delivery of chattels (before the enactment of Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5180) tends to sustain the doctrine announced in Carter v. McClintock (1860) 29 Mo. 464, as to controversies between contiguous parties to notes. See Dannefeller v. Weigel (1858) 37 Mo. 45; Little v. Page (1869) 44 Mo. 412; Oester v. Sittlington (1893) 115 Mo. 247. The principle of the Carter Case was also recognized in 41 L. R. A.

State, Moore, v. Sandusky (1870) 46 Mo. 377, followed by the second division in Gay v. Murphy (1896) 134 Mo. 98. Defendant's answer asserts that the note was to be signed by Mr. Hightower before final delivery, and that Mr. Yeager had full notice of that fact on receiving the paper as custodian. The true question in such cases is as to the intent of the parties touching the delivery. If the instrument, though complete in form, is incomplete in fact, for want of a further signature to be given it, and in that state (pending the last signature) it is placed in possession of the payee (having full knowledge of its incompleteness), with the mutual understanding that the missing signature is to be added before the note is to be regarded as delivered, the payee cannot afterwards treat it as delivered, without more, even at law, and still less in equity. Jordan v. Loftin (1843) 13 Ala. 547. To treat it as delivered in its incomplete condition would be a fraud of the simplest and most obvious character. This proposition does not infringe upon the valuable and general rule that protects writings from change by oral evidence. It is not even an exception to that rule. Until delivery is complete, the writing does not become operative as a contract between the parties. Rogers v. Carey (1871) 47 Mo. 282, 4 Am. Rep. 322. Bare possession of a document cannot be made a substitute for its delivery, which involves the expression (in some form) of an executed purpose to deliver. Huey v. Huey (1877) 65 Mo. 689; Scott v. Scott (1888) 95 Mo. 900. We are writing only of a case in which the issue arises between the immediate parties to such a transaction. That is the case in hand. We shall try to confine our comments within the field of legal view afforded by its record. Possession of a note by the payee may, unexplained, be competent evidence of its delivery. But the normal inference from such possession may be counteracted by proof that no delivery was intended in advance of some event which has not happened. Proof of such a state of facts does not contradict the instrument. It only shows that the last act necessary to give it life as a contract has not taken place. The paper remains but a paper while the intent essential to put legal vigor into its form is wanting. It is not needful to inquire whether possession of a note by the payee pending another signature (as alleged in the answer) constitutes a holding in escrow. The classification of the act is unimportant, as compared with its legal substance. Whatever name the act may bear cannot change the principles regulating its effect. We prefer at this time to avoid any attempt to define an "escrow." It appears to us that facts are stated in the answer which amount to a defense to the note in suit, for want of a full and legal delivery of it. We forbear any further discussion of the subject, in view of the thorough treatment it has recently had in the Supreme Court of the United States, in a learned judgment, which we fully accept. Burke v. Dulaney (1894) 158 U. S. 284, 38 L. ed. 700, since approved in Michels v. Olmstead (1895) 157 U. S. 198, 39 L. ed. 671. In addition to the valuable precedents cited in the Burke decision, we refer to a few others having a tendency to support the result we announced. Bell v. Ingestro (1848) 12 Q. B. 817; Sweet v. Stevens (1863) 7 R. L. 875; Michels v. Oimstead (1862) 14 Fed. Rep. 219; Westman v. Krumweide (1883) 30 Minn. 818; Merchants' Exch. Bank v. Luckow (1887) 37 Minn. 542; Belleville Sav. Bank v. Bornman (1888) 124 Ill. 200. The ruling in Burke v. Dulaney is sustained by the following standard text-books, besides those cited in that case: 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 843; Browne, Parol Ev. 1st ed. § 68; Byles, Bills, 13th ed. *103; 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 284; Leake, Contr. 1st ed. p. 187; Story, Notes, Thorndike's 7th ed. p. 67, note; Taylor, Ev. 8th ed. § 1037; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, 1st ed. § 34d. Whatever is said or intimated to the contrary in the Massmann, Henshaw, and Jones Cases should not be regarded as any longer authoritative.

8. Plaintiff insists that the first defense in the answer is insufficient, because the statute of frauds defeats it. Whether that statute, if available to plaintiff, would have that effect, is a proposition we do not take up. It is involved in some doubt, as the discussion in a modern text-book indicates. Reed, Stat. Fr. 1st ed. § 144. But it plainly appears from the answer in this case that the agreement on which the statute is supposed to bear was oral, and the statute is not set up in the reply as a defense to it. Hence that statute cannot be resorted to as a barrier to prevent the enforcement of the promise. Gardner v. Armstrong (1863) 31 Mo. 535; Gordon v. Madden (1884) 82 Mo. 193.

4. But the order granting a new trial to plaintiff was plainly right. The plaintiff's eighth refused request for an instruction properly submitted the issue of a ratification of the alleged unauthorized delivery of the note in the form it now has. We do not see that the refusal of that instruction was harmless, and are hence bound to assume that the trial court regarded it as prejudicial to plaintiff, since the verdict was set aside on that account. Rev. Stat. 1889, §§ 2100, 2240; Bunyan v. Citizens' R. Co. (1895) 127 Mo. 12. Notwithstanding the fact that the note may have been invalid between the first parties, for want of delivery without the signature of Hightower, it was competent for those who did sign it to make the delivery their own by duly ratifying it, as they might have made the delivery unconditional in the first place. Leaf v. Gibbs (1830) 4 Car. & P. 466; Perry v. Patterson (1844) 5 Humph. 133, 42 Am. Dec. 424; Robbins v. Phillips (1878) 68 Mo. 100.

We think the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. We respectfully dissent from any other judgment here.

Macfarlane, J., joins in this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA, & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Caroline REICH.

(.....N. J.)

*1. The plaintiff, a young child, was injured while upon a turntable of the defendant company. The turntable was located upon the private property of the defendant, near to a public street, and was entirely unprotected and unguarded. Children of all ages frequently congregated upon the defendant's premises to play upon the turntable. Held, that there was no liability on the part of the railroad company to answer for the plaintiff's injury.

2. A landowner is ordinarily under no obligation to a mere licensee or to a trespasser to keep his premises in a safe condition; and the fact that the licensee or the trespasser is an infant of tender years affords no reason for modifying this rule, and charging the landowner with a duty which does not otherwise exist.

3. When an owner of lands erects upon his premises, for their more beneficial user, a structure which happens to be attractive to children, he does not, by such action, extend an invitation to children to enter thereon.

(Dixon, Ludlow, Krueger, JJ., dissent.)

(June 24, 1896.)

*Headnotes by GUMMERE, J.

NOTE.—As to liability of railways for injuries to children trespassing on turntable, see also Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Robertson (Tex.) 14 L. R. A. 41 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Essex County Circuit Court to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Gummere, J.:

The defendant in error (who was the plaintiff below), on the 15th day of June, 1896, then being thirteen years of age, had her foot crushed while in the act of rescuing her brother, a child of six years of age, who was playing on a turntable of the defendant company. It appeared in the case that the brother of the plaintiff, in company with several other little children, went to the company's turntable to play, and that she, deeming her brother to be in peril, went to the turntable, while the same was motionless, for the purpose of taking her brother off; and that while she was in the act of stepping with him from the turntable, it was turned by one of the other children, and her foot was thereby caught, and crushed so badly that it had to be amputated. It further appeared that the turntable was located in an open field on the land of the company, within 90 feet of a public street, and was entirely unguarded and unprotected. It also appeared that a path led across this field, passing the turntable within a few feet, and this path was used by the public without any hindrance or objection on the part of the railroad company. It also appeared that the turntable was frequented by children of all ages, who congregated there for the purpose of playing upon it. The case was left to the jury on the theory that, if the turntable was a structure of a character to tempt children to meddle with it, and dangerous to them if they yielded to the temptation, the railroad company was chargeable with the duty of using reasonable care to protect them from harm, the negligent performance of which would render the company liable for injuries received. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

781, and note; also Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 724.

Messrs. Depue & Parker, for plaintiff in error:

The turntable was not so near Manor avenue as to endanger those using that highway with reasonable care.

Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Daneck v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 N. J. L. 415; Hounsell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. N. S. 729; Binks v. South Yorkshire R. & River Dun Co. 3 Best & S. 242; Harcastle v. South Yorkshire R. & River Dun Co. 4 Hurlst. & N. 67; Blyth v. Topham, Cro. Jac. 153, 1 Rolle, Abr. p. 88.

The limit of the doctrine of actionable negligence is that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining the loss.

Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 8; Lechman v. Hooper, 52 N. J. L. 253; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Knight, 58 N. J. L. 267.

Had the plaintiff been an adult she could not have maintained this action.

Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Collyer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 49 N. J. L. 59; Diebold v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 478; Phillips v. Burlington Library Co. 55 N. J. L. 807; Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. L. 870, 24 L. R. A. 581; Fitepatrick v. Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 Atl. 675.

A manufacturer or other owner is not bound to fence his dangerous machinery in favor of a simple licensee.

Mathers v. Benet, 51 N. J. L. 80; Holmes v. North Eastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Exch. 254; Bolch v. Smith, 7 Hurlst. & N. 736.

Is there any exception to this rule where the trespasser or licensee is a minor?

In two cases in this state the doctrine has been applied to its full extent, although the plaintiffs were infants.

Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Fitepatrick v. Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 Atl. 675.

In Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, it was held the plaintiff could not recover; so in Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220.

Liability in turntable cases has also been denied in—

Bates v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 90 Tenn. 36; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 76, 26 Am. Rep. 269.

In Caulley v. Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. 95 Pa. 398, 40 Am. Rep. 664, a boy seven years old was injured while playing on a flat car loaded with sand and standing upon a switch of defendant's road. It was held he could not recover.

Duff v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 91 Pa. 458, 36 Am. Rep. 675; Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251, 41 L. R. A.

The following are cases of alleged dangerous situations, other than turntables, in which the decisions have been favorable to the landowner.

McEachern v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 515; McGuinness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 233; Grindley v. McKechnie, 168 Mass. 494; Holbrook v. Aldrich, 168 Mass. 15, 36 L. R. A. 493; Morrissey v. Eastern R. Co. 126 Mass. 877, 30 Am. Rep. 686; Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. 142 Mass. 296; McCarty v. Fitchburg, R. Co. 154 Mass. 175; Clark v. Manchester, 62 N. H. 577; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555; Cusick v. Adams, 115 N. Y. 55; Greene v. Linton, 7 Misc. 272; Newdell v. Young, 80 Hun. 364; Collis v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 Hun. 504; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; Rodgers v. Lees, 140 Pa. 475, 12 L. R. A. 216; Springer v. Pyram, 187 Ind. 15; McCaull v. Bruner, 91 Iowa, 214; Carson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 96 Iowa, 583; Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422; Witte v. Stifel, 126 Mo. 295; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 847; Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L. R. A. 755; Butz v. Cavanaugh, 137 Mo. 503; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Charlebois v. Gogebic & M. River R. Co. 91 Mich. 59; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Henigh, 23 Kan. 847, 33 Am. Rep. 167; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bockoven, 53 Kan. 279; Haesley v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 233; Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 461; Callett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461; Slayton v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 40 Neb. 840; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467; Omaha v. Bowman, 52 Neb. 293, 40 L. R. A. 531; Kliz v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cunningham, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 65; Misner v. K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Dobbins (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. Rep. 861, Affirmed 41 S. W. Rep. 63; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345; Robinson v. Oregon, Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 7 Utah, 493, 13 L. R. A. 765; O'Connor v. Illinois C. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 339; Fredericks v. Illinois C. R. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1180; McAdory v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 94 Ala. 272.

In Australia a recent decision in the court of New South Wales is favorable to the landowner.

Patterson v. Woollahra, 16 New South Wales Law Rep. Cases at Law. 229. See also Slade v. Victorian R. Co. 15 Victorian Law Rep. 190.

The more recent English cases are to the same effect.

Singleton v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 7 C. B. N. S. 287; Hughes v. Macfie, 2 Hurlst. & C. 744; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239.

The rule imposing upon landowners a special duty to children cannot properly be extended beyond the reasons upon which the duty is claimed to rest. A minor going upon a stranger's land, with knowledge of the dangers to be encountered there, and not attracted by any childish curiosity, but influenced by other motives, can stand in no better position than an adult acting under similar circumstances.

Bridger v. Asheville & S. E. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24; Twist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 164; Newdell v. Young, 80 Hun. 364; Gibson v.

Leonard, 148 Ill. 162, 17 L. R. A. 588; Sterger v. Van Sicklen, 182 N. Y. 499, 16 L. R. A. 640.

Damages to be recovered must be the natural and proximate consequences arising from the wrong complained of, and not from the wrongful act of a third party remotely induced thereby. The intervention of the independent act of a third person between the wrong complained of and the injury sustained, which act was the immediate cause of the injury, is made the test of the remoteness of damage which forbids its recovery.

Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205, Affirmed on error 85 N. J. L. 574; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Salmon, 89 N. J. L. 299, 23 Am. Rep. 214; Wiley v. West Jersey R. Co. 44 N. J. L. 247; Warwick v. Hutchinson, 45 N. J. L. 61; Kuhn v. Jewett, 32 N. J. Eq. 647; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507; Bigelow, Lead. Cas. on Torts, p. 609; Rich v. Basterfield, 4 C. B. 788.

The intervention of the independent act of a third person between the wrong complained of and the injury sustained, which was the immediate cause of the injury, is made a test of that remoteness of damage which forbids its recovery.

Ashley v. Harrison, 1 Esp. 48; Milne v. Smith, 2 Dow, P. C. 390; Fitzsimons v. Inglis, 5 Taunt. 584; Hoey v. Felton, 11 C. B. N. S. 142; Daniels v. Potter, 4 Car. & P. 262; Had-dan v. Lott, 15 C. B. 411; Walker v. Goe, 4 Hurlst. & N. 850; Parkins v. Scott, 1 Hurlst. & C. 152; Crain v. Petrie, 6 Hill, 523, 41 Am. Dec. 765; Stevens v. Hartwell, 11 Met. 542; Toomey v. London, B. & S. Coast R. Co. 8 C. B. N. S. 145; Williams v. Jones, 3 Hurlst. & C. 256; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 289; Bank of Ireland v. Evans's Charities, 5 H. L. Cas. 889; Victorian R. Comrs. v. Coullas, 8 English Ruling Cases, 405.

Mr. Samuel Kalisch for defendant in error.

Gummere, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was tried below, and has been argued here by counsel on both sides, on the theory that the legal position of the parties, so far as their respective rights and duties are concerned, is the same as if the plaintiff had been injured while herself playing upon the defendant company's turntable, in ignorance of the danger to which she was subjecting herself; and that such ignorance was due to the fact that she was not of an age to understand or appreciate the peril. For the purpose of disposing of the case, therefore, it will be assumed that this is the true situation of the parties, although it may well be considered that the plaintiff, in doing what she did, took upon herself all the risk of danger which was incident to her undertaking. The underlying question, upon the solution of which our decision must rest, is whether the owner of land who constructs or places upon it anything which, though necessary for its proper enjoyment, happens to be of a character which is attractive to children, and at the same time dangerous to them if they yield to the attraction, thereby becomes chargeable with the duty of using reasonable care to keep them off his premises, or to protect them if they enter; for 41 L. R. A.

it must be admitted that, unless such user creates a duty on the part of the landowner to protect the child who comes upon his premises, the neglect of which produces injury to the child, no liability rests upon him for such injury. If there is no duty in the case, there can be no negligence. There cannot be such a thing as the negligent performance of a non-existent duty. It is universally acknowledged that no such duty rests upon the owner of lands with regard to adults, but in many of the decided cases a distinction is made between trespassers of mature years and children, and it is held that, as to the latter, the duty of protection exists. Most of the cases in which this doctrine has been enunciated have arisen on facts similar to those presented by the case now before us; that is, in cases where children have been injured while playing upon turntables located upon the private property of railroad companies. Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, is the first of this line of cases. Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393; Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 75 Ga. 637; and Barrett v. Southern P. Co. 91 Cal. 296, also support this doctrine, and, are, all of them, so-called "turntable cases." It is apparent, however, that, if the duty exists in the case of a railroad company having a dangerous attraction upon its land, it exists equally in the case of a private landowner, who, for the purpose of carrying on his business properly, maintains upon his premises an attraction of a character dangerous to children. And, in fact, numerous cases may be found in the books where "dangerous attractions" other than turntables, placed upon the premises of the individual owner, for their more complete beneficial user, have been held to charge him with the duty of protecting children who are allured thereby. Siddall v. Jansen, 168 Ill. 43, 39 L. R. A. 112; Berge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 607, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Whitley v. Whitman, 1 Head, 610; Powers v. Harlow, 58 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; and Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 688, 50 Am. Rep. 193, are cases of this character. But, although this doctrine has received the support of many courts of high distinction, it has been absolutely repudiated by other courts, whose decisions rank equally high. The cases of Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248; and Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, all declare that no distinction exists between adults and infants when entering uninvited upon lands of another, with relation to the duty which the owner or occupier of such lands owes to them. The same view is expressed by the supreme court of this state in the case of Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 40 Atl. 614, in an opinion by Magie, Ch. J., which has lately been promulgated, in which the whole subject is carefully and exhaustively considered. This court, however, has, up to the present time, never been called upon to decide the question, and we are free to adopt either the view taken by the United States Supreme Court in Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed 745, and the cases which have followed it, or that taken by the courts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and New York, as well as by our supreme court, according as the one or the other shall the more commend itself to us.

It must be conceded, I think, that the rule which imposes liability upon the landowner is a hard one, so far as he is concerned, in this respect; that, no matter how carefully he may endeavor to protect himself by discharging the duty which the law places upon him, the probability of his failure is great. When contemplating the alteration of his land from the condition in which nature left it for the purpose of obtaining a more beneficial user therefrom, he must first consider whether the alteration will render it attractive to children of tender years, and, if so, whether they will be subjected to danger if they succumb to the attraction. If he honestly concludes that the change will not operate to attract children, and that, therefore, although it may make his property dangerous, he is under no obligation to provide for their safety, or if he concludes that, although the alteration may render his property attractive to children, they will not incur danger by coming upon it, and for either of these reasons fails to take precautions for their safety, it will be for the jury to say whether he must answer for the result if injury to a child follows upon his omission; and their verdict will depend upon whether, in their opinion, he had reasonable ground for his conclusion. So, too, if he appreciates that the change which he proposes to make will render his premises dangerously attractive to children, and takes precautions to exclude them therefrom, it is still possible that they may elude his vigilance, and receive hurt while trespassing; and when that occurs it at once becomes a question for the jury to say whether or not the injury was the result of the want of due care on the part of the landowner in affording that protection which his duty required. What the conclusion of the jury would be in any given case, of course no one can tell. The fact, however, is suggestive that in every reported case, so far as I have examined them (and I have examined many), where this doctrine has been under consideration, it has always been the landowner, and never the injured child, who was trying to avoid the result of the verdict of the jury. It is only in those cases where the action of the jury has been controlled by the trial court that the injured child has sought a review. The probability that the landowner will not be able to avoid liability for injuries to children who come upon his lands without invitation, no matter how careful he may have been, while it affords no reason for denying the existence of the rule which holds him to responsibility, certainly requires that we should not accept it as sound, unless it rests upon a solid foundation. Some of the cases above cited, in which the liability of the landowner has been sustained, assume that the duty of protection rests upon him merely by reason of the inability of the child to care for its own safety, and discuss only the question whether the alleged duty has been negligently performed. Others of the cases consider the question of the existence of the duty, and sustain it on the ground that the landowner who places upon his land anything which is attractive to children, and at the same time dangerous to them if they yield to the attraction, is presumed to know that they are likely to be overcome by the temptation presented to them, and that, therefore, he is to be considered as having "allured" or impliedly invited them to come upon his premises, and submit themselves to the dangers there encountered.

The suggestion contained in the line of cases first adverted to, viz., that the duty of protection is cast upon the landowner solely by reason of the inability of the child to care for its own safety, seems to me to be unsound in principle. Primarily, the duty of affording protection to a child rests upon the parent, who is responsible for its being. If the parent neglects the duty which the law casts upon him, and permits his child to stray upon the land of another, and there incur peril, why should the duty of protection be shifted from the negligent parent to the owner of the land? It is usually the fact, in cases of this kind, that the landowner has no knowledge that children have come upon his premises, and are exposed to danger there, until after injury has actually occurred; while other persons, who are passing by, frequently observe the risk that is being run by childish intruders, but take no steps to bring it to an end. If the duty of protection, under such circumstances, is to be shifted from the parent to a third person, it would seem more consonant with reason to place it upon those who have knowledge of the existence of the danger and opportunity to terminate it, rather than upon the landowner, who is entirely ignorant of the entry of the children upon his premises. The mere fact that a child is unable to guard itself against peril, and that its parent fails to provide for its safety, does not, ipso facto, cast upon any third person the duty of affording it protection.

Nor am I able to appreciate the force of the reasoning upon which the conclusion is based that a landowner who puts upon his premises a structure which is attractive, and also dangerous, to children, is to be regarded as having by implication invited them to enter, or as having "allured" them into danger, and is, therefore, to be held to the same measure of responsibility as if he had expressly invited them to come upon his lands. No one, I presume, will contend that a landowner, who, in the beneficial user of his premises, places thereon something which attracts children into danger, really puts it there with the intention of extending an invitation to them, or of luring them into jeopardy. On the contrary, it will be admitted that the entry is ordinarily against the desire of the landowner, and that, if his permission was asked, it would be refused. But the argument is that the intent, although it does not exist in fact, nevertheless exists in law, because every man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. The fallacy of this argument is clearly shown in an interesting and instructive article on the liability of landowners to children entering without permission, by Hon. Jeremiah Smith, a former justice of the supreme court of New Hampshire, published in the Harvard Law Review in January and February, 1898. The author says: "The so-called presumption 'that every man intends the probable consequence of his acts' is not a rule of law 'further or otherwise than as it is a rule of common sense;' in other words, the 'presumption' is, at most, only a prima facie presumption, and may be strong, weak, or utterly inefficacious, according to the varying situations where the attempt is made to apply it. If the result in question is one which men are frequently prone to desire, and there is no assignable reason for the act except the single one of accomplishing that particular result, the inference that the result was intended is strong. If, on the other hand, the result is one which not one man in ten thousand desires, and there is another assignable reason for the act, and one, moreover, by which men are generally influenced, and which is amply sufficient to account for the act, the inference is, practically speaking, reduced to zero." If the landowner is to be held responsible for injuries resulting from an entry by a child upon his premises, merely because he has placed there something which presents a temptation to the child that it cannot (or, rather, does not) resist, although the entry is not only without his consent, but against his desire, why, in principle, is he not equally responsible for injuries received by an adult trespasser, who yields to the temptation presented by a dangerous attraction which is placed upon the land, particularly if such trespasser be so constituted mentally as not to appreciate the impropriety of his entry, or to understand the danger which he is incurring? The viciousness of the reasoning which fixes liability upon the landowner because the child is attracted in the assumption that what operates as a temptation to a person of immature mind is, in effect, an invitation. Such an assumption is not warranted. As was said by Holmes, J., in Holbrook v. Aldrich, 168 Mass. 16, 86 L. R. A. 493: "Temptation is not always invitation. As the common law is understood by the most competent authorities, it does not excuse a trespass because there is a temptation to commit it, or hold property owners bound to contemplate the infraction of property rights because the temptation to untrained minds to infringe them might have been foreseen." No good purpose will be effected by discussing here the various cases which have been supposed to sustain the doctrine first put forward in Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745. I refer to cases like Bird v. Holbrook, 4 Bing. 628, where the plaintiff was injured while trespassing upon the lands of the defendant by the discharge of a spring gun, which had been set by the defendant for the protection of his property against thieves; Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East, 277, where the plaintiff's dogs were caught and killed in traps set by the defendant upon his premises, and baited with decaying meat, for the purpose of entrapping his neighbor's dogs; and Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, where the plaintiff, a child, was injured while playing with a horse and cart which the defendant's servant had carelessly left standing unguarded in the public highway. That they are not, in fact, authority for any such doctrine is clearly shown by Peckham, J., in Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 801, 27 L. R. A. 724, and by Lathrop, J., in Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 849, 13 L. R. A. 248.

The general rule with regard to the duty which a landowner owes to persons coming upon his premises is that, where the entry is made by his invitation, either express or implied, he is required to use reasonable care to have his premises in a safe condition; but that, where the entry is made merely by his permission (and a fortiori, where it is an actual trespass), the landowner is under no obligation to keep his premises in a nonhazardous state; his only duty to a licensee or a trespasser is to abstain from acts wilfully injurious. And this rule has been frequently enforced by the courts of this state. Phillips v. Burlington Library Co. 55 N. J. L. 807; Mathews v. Bessel, 51 N. J. L. 80; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Fitzpatrick v. Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 Atl. 675; Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 40 Atl. 614. In the cases of Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 849, 13 L. R. A. 248; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 Mass. 801, 27 L. R. A. 724, and Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 40 Atl. 614 (in which, as has already been stated, the courts of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, and our own supreme court, have refused to adopt the rule of liability as declared in Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, and the cases which followed it), the basis of decision was the rule just adverted to. In the New York case the infant plaintiff was conceded to have been upon the defendant company's premises by its permission. In the Massachusetts and New Hampshire cases he was a mere trespasser. In each case the conclusion was that a licensee or a trespasser, who entered upon the lands of another, assumed all risk of danger which was incident to the condition of the premises; that the landowner was not responsible for injuries received by him unless they were intentionally inflicted; and that the fact of the licensee or trespasser being an infant of tender years afforded no reason for modifying the rule, and charging the landowner with a duty which did not otherwise exist. In Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Fitzpatrick v. Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. (N. J. L.) 39 Atl. 675; and Turess v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. (N. J. L.) 40 Atl. 614,—our supreme court took a similar view, holding in each case that the infancy of the plaintiff afforded no ground for a recovery against the landowner. In my judgment, the reasons upon which the doctrine of landowner's liability for injuries received by children entering upon his premises is rested do not justify such a material restriction upon the full and untrammelled enjoyment of real property. On the contrary, it seems to me that the doctrine of nonliability, promulgated by the line of cases last referred to, is more in accord with settled principles, and should therefore be adopted by this court. I conclude, therefore, that there was error in submitting to the jury the question whether, under the circumstances of this case, the defendant company was chargeable with the duty of providing for the safety of the plaintiff. The trial judge should have directed a verdict for the defendant.

The judgment below should be reversed.

Collins, J., concurring:

The trial judge expressly charged the jury that proprietors of land are "liable for injuries resulting to children, although trespassing at the time, when, from the peculiar nature and open and exposed position of some dangerous defect or agent, the owner should reasonably anticipate such an injury to flow therefrom as actually happens;" and, in effect, he also charged that if "the turntable was, from the construction and location, as to children of tender years, a dangerous, and at the same time an alluring, machine,—one which when seen would allure children to come upon it for the purpose of playing upon it,"—or if "it was located in such proximity to the public highway, or the locality was such a public one, that it might be reasonably anticipated that children would be allured to it," then a duty was due from the defendant "to exercise due care to protect children of tender age from injury." Exception was duly taken. The Chief Justice, in repudiating like assumptions in the Turess Case, now approved, gave conclusive reasons for holding them erroneous, and for those reasons I vote to reverse the judgment now before us. Mr. Justice Gummere correctly recites the untenable theory upon which this case was left to the jury, and nothing more is rightly now involved. The question of duty to children who, by license of the owner, are upon private property in proximity to an alluring danger, is not at present open for decision.

Dixon, Ludlow, and Krueger, JJ., dissent.

John WHALEN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CONSOLIDATED TRACTION COMPANY.

(.....N.J.....)

- *1. When a passenger in charge of a common carrier shows that he was injured through some defect in the appliances of the carrier, or through some act or omission of the carrier's servant, which might have been prevented by a high degree of care, the jury have the right to infer negligence attributable to the carrier, unless the carrier proves that due care was exercised.
2. The plaintiff testified that, while a passenger standing upon the running board of a crowded trolley car, he was thrown off the car by the conductor of the car stumbling against him as he passed along the board in the discharge of his duties, but that he did not know the cause of the stumble. Held, that on this state of the case a nonsuit was erroneous.

*Headnotes by DIXON, J.

NOTE.—As to presumption of negligence in case of injury to passenger, see note to Barnowski v. Nelson (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. beginning on page 36; also Budd v. United Carriage Co. (Or.) 27 L. R. A. 279, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.
41 L. R. A.

(June 20, 1896.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McEwan & McEwan and Frank N. Hardenbrook, for plaintiff in error:

The negligence of the defendant consisted:

(1) In permitting its cars to become overcrowded to such an extent as to render its passengers, by reason of such overcrowding, liable to increased danger; (2) in the conductor attempting to pass by and around the plaintiff while he occupied such a position upon the running board; (3) in interference of the conductor with the plaintiff while he occupied such a position on the running board; (4) if the conductor could have passed around plaintiff without endangering his safety, the conductor should have done so, and if he could not, then it was negligence to attempt it.

Lehr v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. 118 N. Y. 556; Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Walling, 97 Pa. 55, 39 Am. Rep. 796.

Standing on the front of a horse car when there is room inside is not of itself conclusive evidence that a person injured by the negligence of the driver was not in the exercise of due care.

Maguire v. Middlesex R. Co. 115 Mass. 239; Werle v. Long Island R. Co. 98 N. Y. 650.

Permission to occupy the platform is implied from the crowded condition of the interior of the car, and also from acceptance of fare with passenger in such a position.

Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 836; Mervin v. Manhattan R. Co. 48 Hun. 608, Affirmed without opinion in 118 N. Y. 659; Clark v. Eighth Ave. R. Co. 36 N. Y. 135, 93 Am. Dec. 495; Ginna v. Second Ave. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 596; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Ball, 53 N. J. L. 283; Watson v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 N. J. L. 125, 19 L. R. A. 487.

Messrs. Vredenburg & Garretson for defendant in error.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The circumstances presented by the plaintiff's evidence on the trial of this cause are as follows: On June 21, 1896, about 9:40 o'clock P. M., the plaintiff with his wife and four young children, boarded a trolley car of the defendant in Bayonne for the purpose of riding to Jersey City. The car was an open one, with a board running along the outside upon which the conductor walked to collect fares. When the car stopped to receive the plaintiff, it was crowded with passengers, not only within the car, but also on the running board outside. The plaintiff's wife and children secured places inside, but the plaintiff himself stood upon the board near the middle of the car, crowded in among other passengers, and holding on to an upright post of the car. When he had been in that position about fifteen minutes, the conductor, who had passed by him several times collecting fares, approached him again in going from front to rear on the board, and then occurred the accident for which the plaintiff sues, and which on the trial he thus described: "He [the conductor] was passing right around me, and somehow he stumbled,—I could not say how,—but he caught hold of me to save himself. He caught me by the shoulder, and threw me off the car. He tried to catch the upright, and lost his foot, and caught hold of me." Upon this evidence a judgment of nonsuit was entered, which the plaintiff seeks to have reversed.

It is clear that, although, by taking his stand upon the outside running board of the car, the plaintiff assumed the risk of such dangers as were obviously incident to that position, still the company, by accepting him there as a passenger, owed to him the duty arising out of that relation. City R. Co. v. Lee, 50 N. J. L. 485; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Ball, 53 N. J. L. 288; Watson v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 N. J. L. 125; Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336. Consequently, while one of the obvious dangers of his position was that resulting from the use of the board by the conductor, it would nevertheless be competent for the plaintiff to insist that in the manner of using it the conductor had been guilty of a breach of the defendant's duty towards him.

It is contended for the plaintiff that the company might be held responsible for not providing a car within which he might ride safely, or for not furnishing other means for the passage of the conductor in the discharge of his functions; but, even if it could be maintained that the company was under such obligations to the public, it was evident to the plaintiff, before he boarded the car, that with respect to that ride those duties could not be performed towards him, and for that ride he took the risk of their nonperformance, and absolved the company therefrom. Under the circumstances of this case, the only breach of duty chargeable against the defendant would lie in a lack of due care on the part of the conductor as he passed along the board and therefore we must consider whether the evidence was such as should have been submitted to the jury on the question of his negligence. The ordinary rule in actions for negligence is that plaintiff must produce some affirmative proof of the want of care on the part of the defendant; and, if his evidence is as consistent with care as with negligence in the defendant, he must fail. Cotton v. Wood, 8 C. B. N. S. 568; Hammack v. White, 11 C. B. N. S. 588; Weller v. McCormick, 47 N. J. L. 397, 54 Am. Rep. 175; Searles v. Manhattan R. Co. 101 N. Y. 661. But in actions for injuries suffered by passengers while in charge of common carriers the rule is somewhat different. The rule there applicable is modified by the doctrine which seems to have given rise to the almost absolute responsibility of the common carrier of goods,—the doctrine that the carrier's greater means of ascertaining and disclosing the cause of damage place upon him a greater duty of explanation. The rule supported by authority is that when a passenger shows that he was injured through some defect in the appliances of the carrier, or through some act or omission of the carrier's servant, which might have been prevented by due care, then the jury have the right to infer negligence, unless the carrier proves that due care was exercised. Thus in Christie v. Griggs, 2 Campb. 79, the plaintiff, a passenger in a stage coach, proved that the axle-tree broke; and Mansfield, Ch. J., deeming such proof prima facie evidence of negligence, called upon the defendant to show that the damage arose from mere accident. In Carpus v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Q. B. 747, where the train had left the track, Chief Justice Denman instructed the jury that, the exclusive management of the machinery and railway being in the hands of the defendants, it was presumable that the accident arose from their want of care, unless they gave some explanation of the cause by which it was produced, which explanation the plaintiff, not having the same means of knowledge, could not reasonably be expected to give. In Stokes v. Saltontail, 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115, where the plaintiff's wife had been injured by the upsetting of a stage coach in which she was a passenger, a charge to the jury that the fact that the coach was upset was prima facie evidence of carelessness, was approved. In Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 12 Am. Rep. 720, it was held that on trial of an action against a street-railway corporation for injuring a passenger, proof that the injury was caused by a car's running off the track at a place where the track and the car were under the exclusive control of the defendants was sufficient to charge them with negligence, in the absence of any evidence that the accident happened without their fault. The same application of the rule was made in Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 563, 47 Am. Rep. 75. In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. MacKinney, 124 Pa. 462, 2 L. R. A. 820, the plaintiff, while a passenger on one of the defendant's trains, was struck in the eye by some hard substance hurled from without, and the trial judge charged the rule of law applicable to the case to be that the mere happening of an injurious accident to a passenger while in the hands of a carrier will raise prima facie a presumption of negligence, and throw the onus of proving that it did not exist on the carrier. Of this charge the supreme court said, "It is an old and well-settled principle of law of very general application in cases of injury to passengers while in the course of transportation," but that it could be invoked only where there was some evidence tending to connect the carrier, or his servants, or some of the appliances of transportation, with the happening of the injury. See also 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 516. Under this rule we think the plaintiff's evidence presented a question for the jury. His injury was the direct result of the conductor's act in seizing him to save himself as he stumbled. The cause of his stumbling the plaintiff did not know, and could not reasonably be required to ascertain and disclose, while it probably was known to the conductor, the agent of the defendant. Bearing in mind that the care due from a common carrier and his servants towards passengers in their charge is a high degree of care (Readhead v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 379, 393; Caldwell v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 47 N. Y. 282; Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 12 Am. Rep. 720; City R. Co. v. Lee, 50 N. J. L.

435; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheimer, 59 N. J. L. 474). It is certainly not irrational to infer that the conductor, who had passed so often over the same place under apparently the same conditions without stumbling, on this occasion stumbled through a failure to exercise that high degree of care required of him. To preclude the jury from drawing such an inference, the defendant should have been called on to explain the true cause of the occurrence. The judgment of nonsuit must be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel.
Alonzo A. BURBY, Recept.,

v.

Lansing M. HOWLAND et al., Appts.

(155 N. Y. 270.)

The exclusion of the justices of the peace of a single town from the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction by Laws 1896, chap. 22, relieving them of the duty to enforce the criminal law, denying them compensation for such business, and virtually prohibiting all peace officers from obeying the writs of such justices in criminal cases, is a violation of Const. art. 6, which provides for justices of the peace without expressly saying what a justice of the peace shall be.

(O'Brien and Haight, JJ., and Parker, Ch. J., dissent.)

(March 8, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for Washington County awarding a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to audit relator's claim for services as justice of the peace. Affirmed.

Statement by Vann, J.:

The town of Ft. Edward, in Washington county, embraces a territory about 10 miles long and 8 or 4 miles wide, with a population of 6,000 people. It contains two villages, Ft. Edward, with a population of nearly 4,000, and embracing a territory of about 1 square mile, and Ft. Miller, a very small place, 8 or 9 miles from Ft. Edward. During the year 1896 it had four justices of the peace, of whom the relator was one, and five constables, and all these officers had duly qualified and were acting as such. In March of that year, pursuant to chapter 22 of the Laws of 1896, George Turner, one of said justices of the peace was elected police justice of said town, and Charles W. Dean, one of the constables, was elected police officer thereof, and both promptly assumed the duties of their respective offices, and continued to discharge the same during the remainder of the year. Between the 1st of June and the 15th of October, 1896, the relator, who was elected in March, 1894, performed services for said town as a justice of the peace in criminal actions and proceedings, and on the 12th of November following rendered a bill therefor, duly verified to the town board, which refused to audit any part thereof, for the reason, as certified by the officers composing the board, "that chapter 22 of the Laws of 1896 prohibits the audit and allowance of the same." It is not denied that the services were in fact rendered, or that the fees charged are at the rate allowed by law. Upon a petition showing these, with other facts, an application was made by the relator at a special term of the supreme court, on notice to the members of the board, for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel them to audit and allow his bill, and the court, after hearing both parties, granted the motion, and issued the writ. The order granting the application having been affirmed by the appellate division, the defendants appealed to this court:

Mr. Edgar T. Brackett, with Mr. George Scott, for appellants:

A statute will be declared unconstitutional only when it can be shown beyond reasonable doubt that it conflicts with the fundamental law; and until every reasonable mode of reconciliation of the statute with the Constitution has been resorted to, and reconciliation has been found impossible, the statute will be upheld.

People, Henderson, v. Westchester County, Supers. 147 N. Y. 1, 80 L. R. A. 74.

There is nowhere in the Constitution any attempt to prescribe the power, or jurisdiction, of justices of the peace, and limitations not there, either in express language, or by necessary implication, do not exist.

Hiller v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 70 N. Y. 223.

The ultimate result of the act is simply to revise, as to the town of Fort Edward, the duties resting upon justices of the peace, and where they are relieved from the obligations of certain duties, to relieve the town of the burden of paying them for services which they are not compelled to render.

There is nowhere in the Constitution anything prohibiting the legislature from so doing.

Sill v. Corning, 15 N. Y. 297; Brandon v. Avery, 22 N. Y. 469; People, Lynch, v. Duffy, 49 Hun, 276.

The Constitution contains express authority for the establishment of inferior local courts, limitations not being expressed or implied not existing.

People, Sinkler, v. Terry, 106 N. Y. 1; Brandon v. Avery, 22 N. Y. 469; Curtin v. Barton, 139 N. Y. 505.

Messrs. Lewis E. Carr and Edgar Hull, for respondent:

Where the auditing tribunal refuses to audit a proper charge against the division of the state that tribunal represents, the claimant may compel audit by mandamus.

NOTE.—For constitutional protection of terms of office, see also State, Gibson, v. Friedley (Ind.) 21 L. R. A. 634; Aikman v. Edwards (Kan.) 80 L. R. A. 149; and State, Yancey, v. Hyde (Ind.) 13 L. R. A. 79, 41 L. R. A.

People, Johnson, v. Delaware County Supers. 45 N. Y. 106; People, Myers, v. Barnes, 114 N. Y. 317; People, Thurston, v. Elmira Town Auditors, 82 N. Y. 83.

The act of 1896 offends the constitutional provision requiring that the subject of private or local bills shall be expressed in the title, because the title to this act is deceptive and misleading, and so within the mischief the constitutional provision was intended to prevent.

Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185; Astor v. Arcade R. Co. 118 N. Y. 93, 2 L. R. A. 789; People, Lee, v. Chautauqua County Supers. 48 N. Y. 10; People, McConvill, v. Hille, 35 N. Y. 449; Ferguson v. Ross, 126 N. Y. 459.

The act of 1896 is invalid because it in effect destroys a constitutional office. It aims to prohibit the justices of the peace of the town of Fort Edward from discharging their duty, and so, by indirection, brings about what the legislature had no power to do.

Geraty v. Reid, 78 N. Y. 64; People, Outwater, v. Green, 56 N. Y. 466; People, Bolton, v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 55; Black, Const. Law, 252; Kent, Com. p. 454; People, Henry, v. Nostrand, 46 N. Y. 875; Bouvier, Law Dict. title, Office; Reid v. Smoulter, 128 Pa. 324, 5 L. R. A. 517; People, McEwan, v. Keeler, 29 Hun. 175; State, Kennedy, v. Brunst, 26 Wis. 414, 7 Am. Rep. 64; Warner v. People, Conner, 2 Denio, 272, 43 Am. Dec. 740; Com., Hepburn, v. Mann, 5 Watts & S. 403.

The act is invalid because it creates in the town of Fort Edward a court, not local and of inferior jurisdiction, but equal to and co-ordinate with the courts recognized in the Constitution.

A justice's court in a town is not an inferior court.

It must be inferior to the court whose province it invades, and in whose jurisdiction it is created.

Waters v. Langdon, 40 Barb. 408; Geraty v. Reid, 78 N. Y. 64; Deposit v. Vail, 5 Hun. 810; Bocock v. Cochran, 82 Hun. 521; Ziegler v. Corwin, 12 App. Div. 60; Baird v. Helfer, 12 App. Div. 23; Pierson v. Fries, 3 App. Div. 418.

An inferior and local court which the legislature has power to create and establish has no power beyond its territorial limits, and its process cannot run into, or be executed in, adjacent territory.

Geraty v. Reid, 78 N. Y. 67; Waters v. Langdon, 40 Barb. 408; Pierson v. Fries, 3 App. Div. 418; Landers v. Staten Island R. Co. 53 N. Y. 450; Baird v. Helfer, 12 App. Div. 23; Ziegler v. Corwin, 12 App. Div. 60; People, Sinkler, v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1; Curtin v. Barton, 139 N. Y. 505.

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal is whether certain sections of chapter 22 of the Laws of 1896, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Better Administration of Justice in the Town of Fort Edward, in the County of Washington," are in conflict with the Constitution of the state. By its first twelve sections this statute provided for the election, at the annual town meeting in the year 1896, of a police justice, to hold office for two years, with a salary of $300 per year, and declared that "said office shall be one of the town offices of said town." He was given the same jurisdiction in all criminal cases and proceedings as is possessed by justices of the peace in said town, and it was made his duty "to hear, try, and determine all criminal cases and proceedings which a court of special sessions has power to hear, try, and determine." On or before the 5th day of each month he was required to pay over to the supervisors of the town, for the use of the poor thereof, all moneys received by him for costs, charges, fees, or fines in any proceedings before him for the month immediately preceding. The next six sections provided for the election at the same time, of a police officer, "as town officer of said town," at a salary of $30 per month, with all the powers, duties, and liabilities that constables of said town "have with regard to all criminal matters and all proceedings of a criminal nature." All fees received by him were to be paid over once a month to the supervisor for the use of the poor of the town, and both he and the police justice were required to be resident electors of the town. Sections 19 and 20 of said act are as follows:

"Sec. 19. The sheriff, under sheriff, deputy sheriffs, or constables elected or appointed in the county of Washington, or the village or town of Fort Edward, or any railroad officer or detective employed by any railroad company whose road extends into or runs through said county of Washington, shall not, as such, be compelled to serve within the town of Fort Edward, or village of Fort Edward, any summons, warrant, subpoena, commitment, order, notice, paper, or process whatever, issued or directed by the police justice of said town, or village, or any justice of the peace, residing or doing business therein, in execution of the laws of this state for the prevention of crime and the punishment of criminal offenders, or of the police laws or regulations of the state, or in any proceedings collateral to or connected with the execution of such general laws or regulations, or of the by-laws, rules, regulations, or ordinances of said town, or of said village aforesaid; nor shall the county of Washington, or any of the towns therein, or the village of Fort Edward, be chargeable with, or in any way liable to pay any such sheriff, under sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, or railroad officer or detective, any fees for services rendered, or disbursements paid or incurred, under or by virtue of such warrants, subpoenas, commitments, order, notice, paper, or process whatever.

"Sec. 20. No justice of the peace of the town of Fort Edward or police justice of said village shall be compelled to issue any summons, warrants, subpoenas, commitment, order, notice, paper, or process whatever, for any criminal offense, within said town, nor shall the county of Washington, or any town therein, or the village of Fort Edward, be chargeable with, or in any way liable to pay any such justice of the peace, or police justice of such village, any fees for any services rendered, or disbursements paid or incurred, under or by virtue of any such warrants, subpoenas, commitments, orders, notices, papers, or process whatever."

The object of this act, as claimed by the appellants, is "the abolition of fees and the consequent saving to the taxpayers" of the town of Ft. Edward; but, as claimed by the respondents, it is the abolition pro tanto, and by an indirect method, of the office of justice of the peace in said town. The main question presented for decision is whether the sections quoted above from the act of 1896 are in violation of article 6 of the Constitution of this state. That article establishes the judiciary of the state, the same as previous articles had established the legislative and executive departments of government. By its 17th section it provides that "the electors of the several towns shall, at their annual town meetings, . . . elect justices of the peace, whose term of office shall be four years. . . . Justices of the peace and judges or justices of inferior courts not of record, and their clerks, may be removed for cause, after due notice and an opportunity of being heard by such courts as are or may be prescribed by law. Justices of the peace and district court justices may be elected in the different cities of this state in such manner, and with such powers, and for such terms, respectively, as are or shall be prescribed by law." It is provided by § 20 of the same article that "no judicial officer, except justices of the peace, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office;" by § 22, that "justices of the peace and" certain other local judicial officers "in office when this article takes effect, shall hold their offices until the expiration of their respective terms;" and by § 28 that "courts of special sessions shall have such jurisdiction of offenses of the grade of misdemeanors as may be prescribed by law." These provisions, except § 22, are not new, as they are continued from the Constitution of 1846, which was not abolished, but was revised by the convention of 1894 and the subsequent action of the people. See Const. 1777, § 28; Const. 1821, art. 4, § 7; Const. 1846, art. 6, §§ 11, 17; 1 Rev. Stat. p. 110.

The office of justice of the peace came down to us from remote times. It existed in England before the discovery of America, and it has existed here practically during our entire history, both colonial and state, at first with criminal jurisdiction only, but for more than two centuries past with civil jurisdiction also. 1 Col. Laws, 226 (act May 6, 1691); 2 Col. Laws, 964 (act Dec. 16, 1787); 3 Col. Laws, 1011 (act Dec. 7, 1754); 4 Col. Laws, 296 (act Dec. 16, 1758); 5 Col. Laws, 209 (act Feb. 16, 1771); Law Dict. title Justice of the Peace (Tomlins, Burrill, Black, and Anderson). It exists in every state of the Union, and is regarded as of great importance to the people at large, as it opens the doors of justice near their own homes, and not only affords a cheap and speedy remedy for minor grievances as to rights of property, but also renders substantial aid in the prevention and punishment of crime. The office as it now exists in towns was established by the Constitution, which does not, in express terms, say what a justice of the peace shall be. As, however, the office was well known when the Constitution was adopted, it is presumed that the framers thereof and the people meant to establish it as an office with such civil and criminal jurisdiction, within the limitations of that instrument, as the legislature saw fit to confer upon it. As it has always had criminal jurisdiction, and was an existing office with such jurisdiction when each Constitution was adopted, it is at least doubtful whether the legislature has any power to deprive it of criminal jurisdiction altogether, since that would tend to partially abolish the office as it had been known for time out of mind. A constitutional office cannot be abolished by legislation having that result as a direct object, although it has been held that, under the provision of the Constitution authorizing the legislature to create cities and villages, it may abolish a town altogether, even if the effect is to deprive a justice of the peace of his office. Gertum v. Kings County Supers. 109 N. Y. 170. The court, however, was careful to bound such legislation by the limitation of good faith and a proper constitutional object. Thus, Chief Judge Ruger, in delivering the opinion, said: "It is undoubtedly beyond the power of the legislature, by direct legislation, to abolish the office of justice of the peace in towns, or shorten their terms of office, so long as the town exists; but they have an unquestioned right to alter and change the limits of their jurisdiction, or abolish the town organization altogether, provided it be done in good faith, and for proper constitutional objects. The whole force and effect of the provision in relation to justices is satisfied by enforcing it, so long as there is a town organization in existence, authorized under the Constitution to elect justices of the peace, and requiring the performance of their functions in the government of the town."

Not only is the office itself placed beyond the reach of hostile legislation, but also the term thereof, the method of filling it, and, by implication, the method of removing an incumbent. As was well said by the learned appellate division in deciding this case [17 App. Div. 169], "when the Constitution has fixed the term of office, and prescribed the cause for which and the method by which an incumbent of such office may be removed, such cause and method are exclusive, and it is beyond the power of the legislature to remove or suspend him from office for any other cause, or in any other method. Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 475, 34 L. R. A. 408; Lowe v. Com. 3 Met. (Ky.) 237; Black, Const. Law, 255." The Constitution does not prescribe the powers or duties of justices of the peace in towns, but leaves that to be done by general laws, which, hitherto, have been uniform, applying alike to all justices of the peace in towns throughout the state. Their civil jurisdiction is prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, and includes most common law actions where the sum claimed does not exceed $200. Sections 2861-2864. Their criminal jurisdiction as committing magistrates, covers crimes of all grades, and, as justices holding courts of special sessions, crimes of the grade of misdemeanor. Code Crim. Proc. §§ 56, 62, 147, 156. A justice of the peace in towns, therefore, may be defined as a constitutional judge, elected by the people for a fixed term, protected from removal except by a judicial tribunal, on notice and for cause, with civil jurisdiction in most actions where the sum claimed does not exceed $200, and with criminal jurisdiction to apprehend and commit for all crimes, and to try and convict in cases of misdemeanor. Does this define the position held by the relator, as hampered and limited by the act of 1896? What does that act attempt to do with justices of the peace in the town of Ft. Edward? While it does not directly or in terms take away from them the jurisdiction conferred by law upon such officers throughout the state, the effect is the same, so far as criminal jurisdiction is concerned, as if the office were absolutely abolished. Warner v. People, Conner, 2 Denio, 272, 281, 43 Am. Dec. 740. In three respects, each of which is essential to effective jurisdiction, the office is attacked: (1) By expressly removing the duty to enforce the criminal law, either as a magistrate or as a court; (2) by virtually prohibiting all peace officers from serving process or executing commitments; (3) by taking away all compensation for services rendered in criminal matters. This is done by legislation, which discriminates in these respects against justices of the peace in one town in the entire state, and cuts down the power of this constitutional office in that town alone, leaving it unaffected elsewhere. Thus a judicial officer, named in the Constitution, elected for a term fixed by the Constitution, with jurisdiction to act conferred by general laws, and by those laws entitled to fees for his services, while not in theory deprived of the power to act, is practically prevented from acting by a special statute, the direct object of which is to accomplish that result. Can the legislature leave these officers with jurisdiction to act, and yet not only relieve them of the duty of acting, but virtually render judicial action impossible by preventing all executive officers from serving their process, and by depriving them of all compensation for acting? Is not this an interference with the office itself? If a substantial part of the power of four justices of the peace out of several thousand in the state is taken away from them, are they still justices of the peace within the meaning of the Constitution? Does not the prohibition against taking fees operate as a substantial abolition of criminal jurisdiction, and to that extent as an abolition of the office itself? Rid v. Smoulter, 128 Pa. 324, 5 L. R. A. 517. Does not the taking away of the duty to act have the same effect? Does not the withdrawal of compensation to peace officers for acting, as well as the abolition of their duty to act, render justices of the peace powerless to discharge their duties, and to that extent abolish the office? While bare jurisdiction may exist, will it be exercised when it is no longer a duty, and, if exercised, it must be without compensation? Com., Hepburn, v. Mann, 5 Watts & S. 408, 409. Can it be exercised when the peace officers are bound and hamstrung? A judicial officer cannot serve his own papers, and if he is deprived of the right to compel executive officers to serve them, does he continue to be a judicial officer? Even if criminal process were issued by a justice of the peace in the town of Ft. Edward, no officer could be compelled to serve it, and, after a lawful judgment of conviction, the commitment of the offender might be of no avail for the want of someone to execute it. The hands of a constitutional judge are thus tied as completely as legislation can tie them, so far as the administration of the criminal law is concerned. The Constitution created courts of special sessions, and the legislature, by general laws, defined the criminal jurisdiction of those courts, authorized justices of the peace to hold them, and prescribed the compensation they were to receive therefor; yet an act, applicable only to a single town in the state, virtually deprives these constitutional justices of the power to hold these constitutional courts, and takes from them the compensation to which, otherwise, they would be entitled by law. While the legislature has power to increase or diminish the jurisdiction of these officers generally, can it confer full judicial power upon all, and yet not only take away judicial duty from some, but even render judicial action by them practically impossible, without affecting the office itself? If this can be done as to criminal actions, why can it not be done as to civil actions also, and thus leave justices of the peace officers in name only?

It is conceded that the legislature cannot abolish the office directly, and, if not, can they do so indirectly? Is there any difference between abolishing an office altogether, and practically preventing the incumbent from discharging the functions thereof? "Every positive direction contains an implication against anything contrary to it, or which would frustrate or disappoint the purpose of that provision." People, Wood, v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 543. As was said by Judge Allen in an important case, "an act violating the true intent and meaning of the instrument, although not within the letter, is as much within the purview and effect of a prohibition as if within the strict letter; and an act in evasion of the terms of the Constitution, as properly interpreted and understood, and frustrating its general and clearly expressed or necessarily implied purpose, is as clearly void as if in express terms forbidden." People, Bolton, v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 60, 55. When the main purpose of a statute, or of part of a statute, is to evade the Constitution by effecting indirectly that which cannot be done directly, the act is to that extent void, because it violates the spirit of the fundamental law. Otherwise, the Constitution would furnish frail protection to the citizen, for it would be at the mercy of ingenious efforts to circumvent its object and to defeat its commands. The main purpose of §§ 19 and 20 of the act under consideration was to so circumscribe justices of the peace in one town of the state as to prevent them from performing important official functions, and to divert the business confided to them by general laws to a new officer created by special act for the express purpose of doing that business. Thus it is made the duty of the new police justice to hear and determine all criminal cases which courts of special sessions have power to hear and determine, and the justices of the peace of the town, although still authorized to hold those courts, are relieved of that duty, deprived of compensation if they discharge it, and are prevented from discharging it through inability to compel peace officers to obey their commands. The necessary effect of such legislation indicates its object, which was to silence the justices of the peace and transfer their duties to the police justice. We think it is not in the power of the legislature to enact that justices of the peace in the state of New York shall have certain powers and duties, except in the town of Ft. Edward, and that there only they shall not have those duties, and, if they voluntarily attempt to discharge them, shall have no power to enforce their judgments. If this can be done as to one judicial officer named in the Constitution, it can be done as to another, and the duties imposed generally upon justices of the supreme court throughout the state cannot only be altogether withdrawn as to certain justices, but the power to discharge them withdrawn also. The Code of Criminal Procedure declares that justices of the supreme court, justices of the peace, and certain other judicial officers shall be magistrates, and important criminal powers are expressly conferred upon them, and, by implication, it is made their duty to exercise those powers in a proper case. Code Crim. Proc. §§ 147, 156. The legislature can, of course, amend and change that statute, by adding to or taking from those powers and duties; but can it so amend it as to declare that it shall not be the duty of justices of the supreme court residing in a certain district to act as magistrates, and that, if they do so act, peace officers shall not be compelled to serve their warrants or enforce their commitments? Without directly taking away the power, can the duty be withdrawn and the power so undermined as to make it practically useless, and the office still be left intact?

The object of a written Constitution is to regulate, define, and limit the powers of government by assigning to the executive, legislative, and judicial branches distinct and independent powers. The safety of free government rests upon the independence of each branch, and the even balance of power between the three. Unite any two of them, and they will absorb the third, with absolute power as a result. Weaken any one of them, by making it unduly dependent upon another, and a tendency towards the same evil follows. It is not merely for convenience in the transaction of business that they are kept separate by the Constitution, but for the preservation of liberty itself, which is ended by the union of the three functions in one man, or in one body of men. It is a fundamental principle of the organic law that each department should be free from interference, in the discharge of its peculiar duties, by either of the others. Nothing is more essential to free government than the independence of its judges, for the property and the life of every citizen may become subject to their control, and may need the protection of their power. Not a contract is made except in reliance upon their ability to afford redress if it is violated. Men part with property upon the promise of their fellows, walk the streets by day, and sleep in peace at night, in the confidence that the silent and unseen power of the judiciary is always ready to protect their rights. Any legislation that hampers judicial action, or interferes with the discharge of judicial functions, is in conflict with the principles of the Constitution. Whenever a judge, however humble, is authorized by law to hold a criminal court, established by the Constitution, and to require executive officers to serve his warrants and enforce his judgments, the legislature cannot leave him the power to act, and withdraw from him the power of compelling obedience to his lawful mandates, without affecting his independence and depriving him of the essential powers of a judge.

-41 L. R. A.

On the 26th of June, 1896, the relator, upon complaint being made before him, issued a warrant, and the offender was arrested, and tried and sentenced to imprisonment. Thereupon the justice issued the usual commitment to a peace officer to take the person convicted to the county jail. But, according to § 19 of the act under consideration, he could not require that officer to obey the order, and the command of a judge to enforce a valid judgment became no more than a mere request to do so. He was thus obliged to coax those whom, if he was still a judge, he had the right to command, and the enforcement of a lawful judgment depended upon the good will of a constable. In other words, a judge acting according to law in every respect, was by this legislation made dependent upon the favor of an executive officer in order to have his lawful commands obeyed. Is any argument necessary, under these circumstances, to show that the independence of the judge was destroyed? The lawful command of a judge is the command of the people of the state of New York, in their organized capacity under the Constitution, and the legislature has no power to say, directly or indirectly, that such a command shall not be obeyed. While, in many cases it can take away the jurisdiction of the judge altogether, it cannot leave him clothed with full power to render judgment, and then prevent him from causing that judgment to be enforced, by saying to peace officers that they need not obey his lawful commands unless they choose to do so. If such legislation is sustained, the independence of the judiciary and the freedom of the law will depend upon the generosity of the legislature.

While we hesitate, as every court should, to set aside a solemn act of legislation, yet it is our high prerogative to defend the Constitution, and to protect the humblest judge from interference with his judicial functions in violation of its command. That duty we now discharge by adjudging that §§ 19 and 20 of chapter 22 of the Laws of 1896 are unconstitutional and void.

The order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

O'Brien, J., dissenting:

The courts below have held that §§ 19 and 20 of chapter 22 of the laws of 1896 are in conflict with the Constitution, and therefore null and void. That is the only question presented by the appeal. The act is entitled "An Act to Provide for the Better Administration of Justice in the Town of Fort Edward in the County of Washington." There are two records and two appeals, involving the same question. They were heard and decided below as one case, and may now be discussed and reviewed in the same way. The relator Ryan is a constable of the town of Ft. Edward, and also a deputy sheriff. In December, 1896, he presented to the board of supervisors of Washington county a bill of $12.90 for fees charged by him in the arrest and detention of two parties charged with crime in the town of Ft. Edward. The board rejected the claim, and refused to allow the same, on the ground that, by the terms of the two sections of the act above mentioned, it was not a legal charge against the county or the town. The relator Burby is one of the justices of the peace of the town of Ft. Edward, elected in March, 1894, to fill a vacancy in an unexpired term ending the last of December, 1896. He presented to the town board, in the month of November, 1896, a bill of $24.75 for fees in proceedings before him as justice in certain criminal cases, which the board refused to allow, on the ground that, by the terms of the two sections above referred to, the claim was not a legal charge against the town. On looking into the bill it will be seen that a large part of it consists of items for fees and services in the arrest and examination of persons charged with being what are there styled "state tramps." The courts below have held that both the justice and the constable were entitled to peremptory writs of mandamus requiring the boards to audit and allow the bills, although the sections of the statute above referred to declare that they are not legal charges against the town or the county. The 19th section enacts that no constable or deputy sheriff shall be required to serve any criminal process in the town, and that neither the town nor the county should be in any way chargeable for such services, or bound to pay the same. The 20th section provides that no justice of the peace should be required to issue any criminal process in cases within the town, and that neither the town nor county should be chargeable with any fees or services rendered by a justice of the peace in criminal cases. All that the legislation in question did was to relieve the justice and the constable from all obligation to perform any duties in criminal cases arising in the town, and, having relieved them from the duties, deprived them of the right to charge the town or the county with fees for services which it was not their duty to perform.

The courts below have held that the legislature has no power to do this, since the Constitution stands in the way. On looking into the opinion of the learned judge at special term, and then into that of the learned judge who spoke for the appellate division, it is quite difficult to identify the particular constitutional provision which they supposed had been violated by the legislature in this case. The learned judge at special term was apparently of the opinion that the two sections violated that provision which forbids the legislature from passing any private or local bill decreasing the fees or allowances of public officers, while the learned judge at the appellate division virtually held that the sections were void because they practically abolished the ancient and constitutional office of justice of the peace in the particular town in question. The act in question contains twenty three sections, and in order to properly consider the questions presented by this appeal, the general scope and purpose of the act, as a whole, must be kept in view. It provides for the election of a police justice in the town, to be paid a salary of $800 per year, and confers upon him the same jurisdiction in criminal cases as the justices of the peace of the town. It provides that the fees charged and received by him in criminal cases shall be paid over to the supervisor, and not applied to his own use. It then provides for the annual election of a police officer at a fixed compensation, with power to serve all criminal process, and requires him to serve all process issued by the police justice in criminal cases, and that the costs and fees therefor chargeable by law shall not be retained for his own use, but must be paid over to the supervisor. It appears, therefore, that this rural town, with a population of 6,000 people all told, and a territory 10 miles in length and 3 or 4 miles wide, was provided with adequate machinery for administering the criminal law and preserving the public peace. The legislature decided that both economy and efficiency would be promoted by concentrating the duties of examining magistrate and conservators of the peace in this town in two persons, and relieving the justices of the peace and constables from all duties in that regard.

That it was not a wanton or arbitrary interference with the local affairs of the town appears from a very significant affidavit by the supervisor of the town and chairman of the board of supervisors of the county, which appears in the record and is not denied or questioned. The origin and purpose of this legislation is there clearly stated. It is shown that the statute was passed at the request and solicitation of a large majority of the people of the town, not only for the purpose of better conserving the cause of law and order, but of reducing the burden of taxation, by putting an end to the ill-considered and ill-advised action of justices of the peace and constables in soliciting and procuring tramps and vagrants to be arrested and committed for maintenance to the county jail for the sole purpose of enabling the justices and constables to present bills for services against the town or county, and that this practice had become such a grievous abuse that upon more than one occasion the supreme court had instructed the grand juries to inquire into the same. Moreover, he states that, after the act became a law, and at a public meeting of the voters of the town, a resolution was unanimously passed thanking the senator and assemblyman representing the town in the legislature for their aid in procuring the enactment of the law. All this, however, counts for nothing, unless the legislature had power to pass the bill and to enact the sections in question. It only shows that the will of the people, however flagrant may be the abuse which they attack, or however laudable the reform which they advocate, must be subordinated to the restraints of the fundamental law. It appears that the justices of the peace and the constables, like the silversmiths of Ephesus, were not satisfied with the new law. It damaged their business and reduced the opportunities for making money, and they appealed to the courts for protection, and thus far they have had it, since it has virtually been held that, after a justice of the peace or a constable has been once installed in office, the law-making power of the state is powerless to deprive them of the opportunity of earning fees from the town or county in looking after tramps and vagrants, and acting occasionally in the early stages of other cases of a criminal character. In this case the justice and constable volunteered to perform services which it was not their duty to perform, and yet, in defiance of the express mandate of the legislature, and of the will of the town and county, they have been awarded compensation to the same extent and in the same way as if the legislature had never passed the act in question. The claims of these two parties, when united, were less than $88, though the costs awarded upon the application for the mandamus were $50; and it must be quite clear that the only importance that the case could ever assume is due to the fact that the parties and the courts below regarded it as involving an important question of constitutional law. This brings us to the inquiry as to what provision of the Constitution has been violated by the legislature in the passage of this act.

1. It does not increase or decrease the fees or allowances of any public officer. The fees of a justice of the peace or a constable are just the same now in the town of Ft. Edward as they were before the passage of the act. They have not been increased or diminished. The only change made is with respect to the persons entitled to receive them, and the uses to which such fees may be applied. The relators are affected by the act only in one respect, and that is that they cannot charge fees to the town or county when they volunteer to perform services in criminal cases but the fees are still the same. The volume of the relators' business may have been diminished by this legislature, but the fees of justices of the peace and constables have not. If we inquire with respect to the amounts which a justice of the peace or constable may charge for any given service in the town of Ft. Edward in criminal cases now, and find that they are the same as before the passage of the act, it must follow that the bill did not increase or decrease fees. The police justice and police officer created by the act are entitled to charge the same fees allowed before, and no more, but they must be paid to the supervisor, for the benefit of the town, since these two officers are compensated by fixed salaries.

2. There is nothing in the body of the act not germane to the title. The two sections in question simply provide that justices or constables are relieved from all duties, and therefore may not charge fees, to the town or county in criminal cases. That such provisions may properly be inserted in a private or local bill, with such a title as that now before us, is too plain for argument.

3. The legislature had power to create the police court in the town under that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the creation of inferior local courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction. Const. art. 6, § 18.

4. The act does not in any sense or in any degree abolish the office of justice of the peace. The act does not touch the power, jurisdiction, or authority of the justice in the slightest particular. He may now do everything that he could have done before the act was passed. He can exercise every power now that he could then. In ancient times the office was an honorary one purely. There were no fees attached to it, and no civil jurisdiction. All that is found in statutes, and I suppose no one will deny that the legislature may repeal or modify the statutes. The Constitution, while recognizing the office of justice of the peace, does not deal at all with either the jurisdiction or the fees. All that is left to the legislature, and it may increase or diminish either the one or the other, or both, at pleasure. This statute, therefore, does not in the slightest degree abolish, or attempt or even tend to abolish, the office of justice of the peace, unless, indeed, we hold that the office consists of what may be made out of it under the most favorable circumstances. The business of hunting down tramps and vagrants in the rural districts, in what are called "hard times," is capable of being developed into a very high state of perfection, and if the justice and constable have a sort of vested right in what can be earned in that way, in the nature of property, beyond the power of the legislature, there must be certain guaranties in the Constitution that have never been discovered before.

When we consider the origin and history of the ancient and honorable office of justice of the peace, it occurs to me that it is now very much belittled, if not disgraced, by the contention that it is destroyed whenever the legislature attempts to interfere with the opportunities of the person who happens to hold it for the time being of making money out of it. When this case is stripped of all irrelevant argument and illustration, the only objection that can be urged against the statute in question is that, and nothing more. The legislature has relieved the justice of a very small part of his duties, and has enacted that, if he still insisted on performing them, it should be without fees against the town or county, as his predecessors in England did centuries ago. That this was not only a constitutional, but, under the circumstances, a just and reasonable, exercise of power, I cannot doubt. It is a mistake to suppose that the legislature is prohibited from abolishing the office of justice of the peace. In point of fact, numerous statutes have been passed abolishing the office, and they have been held to be constitutional. Curtin v. Barton, 189 N. Y. 518. There is scarcely a city in the state where the office of justice of the peace did not once exist, but has been abolished by some form of legislation. The only provision of the Constitution upon the subject is to be found in article 6, § 17, which simply provides that the electors of the several towns shall, at their annual town meetings, or at such other time and in such manner as the legislature may direct, elect justices of the peace, whose term of office shall be four years. There is nothing whatever in the statute in question which in the slightest degree interferes with the right of the electors of the town to elect justices of the peace at town meetings, or that changes the tenure of the office. The electors must still elect justices of the peace in the same way and for the same term. They may not have quite so much criminal business to do hereafter, as they have had heretofore, but surely that is no reason for pronouncing a solemn act of the legislature void. Indeed, when all the reasons for holding the statute invalid are fully weighed and measured, it is quite difficult to treat or consider them all seriously. It is claimed that this legislation was enacted for the purpose of insidiously undermining the office of justice of the peace in this particular town. There is nothing on the face of the bill that gives the slightest color to this assertion, and surely we ought not to attribute to the legislators a purpose or motive in the enactment of a law that is not disclosed by the statute itself. Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan, 128 N. Y. 345, 14 L. R. A. 481. The only purpose that the legislature had in the enactment of the statute was to relieve the taxpayers from claims upon the treasury of the town or county for services in colorable proceedings against tramps, vagrants, and petty criminals,—a business which, it seems, had been developed and enlarged to such an extent as to become an abuse and a scandal. This was the moving cause of the legislation, according to the uncontradicted affidavit of the town authorities themselves, and they add that the statute, in its actual operation, has accomplished the purpose by correcting the abuses. The motive and purpose of the enactment was, therefore, not only legal, but laudable.

But this court has nothing to do with the motives of the legislature. It is not for the courts to attribute improper motives to the legislature, any more than it is for the legislature to attribute improper motives to the courts for their judicial action. The question is one of power and nothing else. When that simple inquiry is divested of all sentimental considerations, and the question divorced from the vigorous rhetoric and specious argument in which it is beclouded, the proper solution depends upon the correctness of a few propositions that seem to me so plain that every professional mind must accept them: (1) The legislature had the power to provide for the election of a police justice and a police officer in a town containing a considerable village, to fix their salaries, and confer upon them the powers of a justice of the peace and constable in criminal cases. That was the main purpose of the bill, and no one seriously questions the validity of the law in that respect. (2) Having gone so far, did the legislature have the power to relieve the people of the town from all legal obligation to pay fees for services in criminal cases, or compensation to local officers, other than the sum fixed and designated as salaries? That is the power which it has exercised in the two sections of this statute which it is claimed are invalid, and I am not aware of any suggestion at the argument, or in the printed brief, that casts the slightest doubt upon the existence of this power in a lawmaking body which is supreme, except so far as restrained by the Constitution. (3) May the legislature, when providing for the administration of criminal justice in a town by a police justice and police constable, divest or relieve justices of the peace from all legal obligation or duty to entertain complaints or issue process in criminal cases? Inasmuch as every duty that can be performed by a justice of the peace in criminal cases is imposed by some statute or law enacted by the legislature, the conclusion would seem to be irresistible that the power which enacted the law may repeal it or modify it, and the same power that imposed the duty can withdraw it. If the legislature may lawfully exercise the powers specified in these three propositions, then there can be no fair question with respect to the validity of the statute. That it does possess such power cannot, I think, be doubted; and to hold that the legislation in question abolishes the office of justice of peace is little less than asserting that an office is abolished whenever its pecuniary attractions are diminished by law. The particular justice who instituted this proceeding possessed, after the passage of this statute, every right and power as an officer that he possessed before, except the right to charge fees to the town or county in criminal cases; and to say that a statute which affects him to that extent only is void seems to me to be a proposition that cannot be seriously discussed, and I have discussed it only because able and eminent counsel who has presented the other view of the case has evidently the utmost confidence in the correctness of his position, and, moreover, has impressed the court with the same view.

Suppose we hold this law to be constitutional and valid; will the office of justice of the peace in the town of Ft. Edward be then abolished? Of course, if the office of the relator in this case will be abolished, so will that of all the other justices in the town in like manner, and the result must be, if the relator's contention is correct, that hereafter there can be no justices of the peace, in the constitutional sense, in the town. If that be so, it must follow that the right to charge fees to the town and county in criminal cases is an essential part of the office itself, annexed to it by the Constitution in perpetuity, and beyond the power of the legislature to change. I doubt if anyone would seriously urge such a proposition, and yet it is what the relator's contention must really mean when analyzed. That office is abolished, or it is not abolished, by this legislation, since it is impossible to conceive of any middle state between regular official existence and that statutory death which it is claimed that the legislature has inflicted upon these town officers in violation of the Constitution. But the truth is, as everyone must know, that no law providing for the election of justices of the peace has been interfered with in the slightest degree. They will still continue to be elected just the same as if the act had never been passed, and they will still possess the same powers, and be authorized to do precisely the same things, that they always did, except to draw fees from the town or county for services that they are not required to perform. The town has elected another officer, at a fixed salary, to do the things that the relator has volunteered to do; so that, from whatever point we start, we come back again to the inquiry whether the legislature has power to reduce the business of a justice of the peace by relieving him from all duties in criminal matters, and the town or county from all obligation to pay him, should be elect to do the things which he is no longer required to do. When powers or duties are created solely by statute, it would seem to be a plain and reasonable proposition that the same authority that originally granted the power or imposed the duty may recall it, and relieve the officer from all obligation with respect to the duty thus imposed. The officer certainly can have no vested right in the exercise of a statutory power or the performance of a statutory duty.

It requires no argument to show that the people of a town, through an act of the legislature, may reduce the expenses of local government, and lighten the burden of local taxation; but, in order to do that, they must necessarily reduce the business or fees of the officers to whom the taxes are paid. The act in question does that, and nothing more; and, if the legislature has offended the Constitution, that is the head and front of the offending. I cannot bring myself to believe that this court is warranted in declaring such a statute, or any part of it, void. So much legislation of this character has been enacted that I fear such a decision would form a precedent that might be very troublesome hereafter. There is scarcely a volume of the session laws in which legislation of this character may not be found. The sheriffs and county clerks are certainly constitutional officers, in at least the same sense as a justice of the peace is. They were all formerly, and most of them still are, compensated by fees; but no one can doubt that this whole subject is within the scope of legislative power. The fees may be abolished, and a salary, great or small, substituted in their place; and no one would claim that the office was abolished because its money value had been diminished. Can there be any doubt as to the power of the legislature to provide that fees in criminal cases shall be paid over to the town by the justice of the peace for the benefit of the poor, and a nominal salary substituted in their place? This would reduce his income in the same sense that the act in question does, but, unless the justice had a vested right to all fees prescribed when he went into office, the legislation would be valid.

But, whatever may be said about the justice, clearly the constable was not a constitutional officer, and he cannot complain, even if his office was abolished, though it certainly was not. The legislature could certainly dispense with his services as a peace officer if it thought proper, and provide that, in case he elected voluntarily to perform services that he was not bound to perform, then no fees should be chargeable for such services to the town or county. It has so declared in a separate and distinct section of the act, and how any provision of the Constitution was violated by such a law it is certainly very difficult to see. The power and duty of the judiciary, when called upon to deal with the question of the validity of a statute, was well expressed by Judge Andrews in this court in these weighty words: "Only when required by the most cogent reasons, nor, indeed, unless compelled by unanswerable grounds, will a court declare a statute to be unconstitutional." People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 18, 5 L. R. A. 559. There has been, I think, a wide departure from this rule in dealing with the statute in question. The services of both the justice and constable having been performed long after the act in question took effect, their claims were not valid charges against the town or county, and the respective boards to which they were presented for audit and allowance properly rejected them. The order of the appellate division and that of the special term, awarding the mandamus to the relators, should be reversed.
41 L. R. A.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight, J., concur.

JEWELERS' MERCANTILE AGENCY, Limited, Resp't.

v.

JEWELERS' WEEKLY PUBLISHING COMPANY et al., Appts.

(155 N. Y. 241.)

1. A statutory copyright operates to defeat a party of the common-law right.
2. A book is published so as to defeat what is known as the common-law copyright or right of first publication, if it is put within reach of the general public so that all may have access to it, no matter what limitations be put upon the use of it by the individual subscriber or lessee.
3. A lease of the reference books of a mercantile agency to subscribers, retaining title and providing that the books shall be returned when the subscription expires, constitutes a publication which will defeat a common-law copyright.

(March 8, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for New York County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from infringing plaintiff's copyright. Reversed.

Statement by Parker, Ch. J.:

The judgment appealed from enjoined the defendant from making any use of the plaintiff's reference books or confidential sheets, and from copying, appropriating, printing, publishing, or using in any way, information taken therefrom, or furnishing such information to others. The plaintiff, a domestic corporation, has, ever since its incorporation, in 1883, been engaged in the business of a mercantile agency, which consisted in obtaining information regarding the business, street addresses, kinds and extent of business, commercial standing and mercantile credit of individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in the jewelry trade in the United States and Canada. This information is printed twice a year in the form of a reference book. A duplicate of smaller form is also printed. The plaintiff also issues weekly a confidential sheet of changes and corrections. These books and confidential sheets are furnished and lent to subscribers subscribing therefor, upon a contract which reads as follows:

NOTE.—As to the common-law rights in literary property, see also note to Simmons Hardware Co. v. Waibel (S. D.) 11 L. R. A. 267.

The undersigned employs the Jewelers' Mercantile Agency, Limited, from —, 189—, to —, 189—, to aid in answering inquiries by verbal or written reports, reference books, and correction sheets, as to the responsibility, character, and standing of persons and firms in the jewelry and kindred trades, within the United States and Canada; said inquiries not to exceed one hundred and to be made within the period of this contract. For such aid and service, including the loan of —, 189—, and —, 189—, volumes of reference book the undersigned will pay to said company $75 at the commencement of this subscription, and for each inquiry exceeding the one hundred, 30 cents on demand. All information which may have been or may be obtained by agents of said company, who are appointed our sub-agents, and communicated to us, shall be strictly confidential between the parties hereto, and the sub-agent's name or names are not to be disclosed by said company to the subscriber or other person, and the communicated information is not to be disclosed to the person or persons reported on. No information is guaranteed as to correctness, and the said company is not responsible for act or negligence of the subagent or agents. Title to the reference books to remain in said company, and books are to be returned upon expiration of subscription. On return of amount of unexpired term of subscription, said company reserves the right to terminate this contract, and the reference books are then to be returned to it.

Dated —, 189—.

Signature: —

(The conditions of this subscription are absolute, and no verbal or other understanding will be considered or allowed by the company.)

The plaintiff's reference book in the larger form bears upon the cover thereof, distinctly printed, the statement: "This is the property of the Jewelers' Mercantile Agency, Limited. Confidential Reference Book." And within, conspicuously printed, appears the following: "This book is the property of the Jewelers' Mercantile Agency, Limited, and is held by —, under agreement of —, eighteen —, with them." It does not appear that the reference book was confined exclusively to the jewelry trade, nor does it appear but that anyone could obtain a copy of the same by subscribing for it according to the terms of such contract. The defendant is also a domestic corporation, organized in January, 1891. It took the business which had before been carried on by the defendant Rothschild, and earlier by both Rothschild and Ulmann. The defendant took and appropriated from the plaintiff's reference book certain material information therein contained, and made use of it in a publication of its own, which came into competition with the plaintiff's publication.

41 L. R. A.

It also appeared that on the 28th day of June, 1890, the plaintiff, in pursuance of the copyright laws of the United States, deposited in the copyright office, with the librarian of Congress, the title of the plaintiff's book of July, 1890. And on the 28th day of June, 1890, the plaintiff, in further pursuance of said copyright law, deposited in the office of the librarian of Congress two copies of said reference book. And the said plaintiff printed on the page following the title page in the said book of July, 1890, the following notice: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1890, by the Jewelers' Mercantile Agency, Limited, in the office of the librarian of Congress at Washington." The plaintiff, however, insists the copyright failed because of its omission to make publication of the reference book, and stands upon its common law right that there has never been such a publication as to entitle the general public to the use of the book. The acts which defendant urges amounted to a publication were the delivery of the book to such subscribers as cared for it, and were willing to become parties to the contract, supra, and the deposit of two of the books in the library of Congress.

Messrs. Sondheim & Sondheim and Wheeler H. Peckham, for appellants:

The plaintiff has lost any literary property it ever had in its reference book of July, 1890, it having published the said book and having dedicated the information contained therein to the public in various ways.

Plaintiff deposited in the library of Congress two copies of its reference book of July, 1890. This was as complete, formal, and solemn a dedication of the said book to the public as it was possible for the plaintiff to make.

14 Enc. Britannica, 535; People, American Geographical Soc., v. New York Taz Comrs. 11 Hun. 505.

The mere fact that the delivery of copies of a book to a public officer was under special limitations would not prevent the delivery from constituting a publication, provided the delivery insured the public or an indefinite portion of it should, without further action on the part of an author, have access to it.

Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 657, 32 L. ed. 559; Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 510; Dalglish v. Jarvie, 2 Macn. & G. 231.

In the absence of restrictions as to copying, there can be no doubt that the deposit of a picture in a place to which the public have free access is a publication of the same.

Pierce & B. Mfg. Co. v. Werckmeister, 38 U. S. App. 399, 72 Fed. Rep. 58, 18 C. C. A. 481.

The plaintiff could have adopted no better way to dedicate his books to the public than by depositing them in the great public library of the United States, where they will remain for all time to come, open to the free and unrestricted inspection of the public.

Rees v. Pelzer, 75 Ill. 475; Merrell v. Tice, 104 U. S. 561, 26 L. ed. 855.

To constitute a publication it is necessary that the work be exposed for sale or offered gratuitously to the general public, so that any person may have an opportunity of enjoying that for which a copyright is intended to be secured.

plainants on the extent or number of persons to whom the book might be distributed under the conditions which they had provided. Though adapted specially for persons engaged in the trades of which we have spoken, yet even these are indefinite in number, and there is no evidence that the circulation was intended to be limited to them. In any view, it might be difficult to sustain this proposition, because, as the statute now stands, an author is compelled to complete his title to his copyright before publication, so there is at least one point of time, although it may be a very minute one, when the author, who has entitled himself to a copyright, is also entitled to look to the statutes of the United States for protection notwithstanding he has not published. . . . However, we do not rest the case on this point, because we are satisfied that there has been a publication. . . . So far as concerns the interests of the public and the general policy of the copyright statutes, this case stands in all respects practically the same as though the complainants' publication had been sold by unrestricted titles; and there is no substantial reason why, if the complainants had not obtained copyrights, they should now be protected against infringers." We find ourselves in agreement with the learned judge, not only in the conclusion reached, but also in the argument which led to it, and, before referring to authorities upon that subject, it should be observed that it does not appear from this record but that every person in the United States was at liberty to become a subscriber of the plaintiff, and, as such, entitled to a reference book. Plaintiff's position, therefore, in effect is that a distinction should be drawn between selling or giving a book away and leasing it; that to offer to sell a book to the public or give it to public libraries, where all the public may have access to it, is to publish it; but to lease it to such of the public as care for it is not to publish it. The latter is certainly an effective method of putting the contents of the book in the possession of such portions of the public as desire it. By this method a party parts with the secret in such a way that the public may know it, provided the individuals composing such public are willing to become subscribers, and lease the book. And, if leasing books to the public generally does not constitute a publication of them, then an author or publisher would have but to extend the period of leasing from 1 year to 99 or 999 years, as is the case in certain leaseings of railroads, in order to secure almost as many lessees as there would be purchasers if the books were offered for sale. The buyer of the average book would be quite content with a restrictive title, which, nevertheless, assures him the possession of a book for either of the periods mentioned. It has not hitherto been understood to be the law that the common law right could be so utilized as to secure to an author or publisher a continuing revenue from the public for a much longer period of time than Congress has been willing to grant to him the exclusive right to publish.

We shall now briefly refer to what has been said on the subject which seems to have persuaded counsel that the judgment in this case can be supported. In the first place, if 41 L. R. A.

must be conceded it has not been said, except in Ladd's Case, 75 Fed. Rep. 705, that leasing a book under an agreement not to show it to anyone constitutes a publication of it; and this is so, probably, because it was not until a comparatively recent period that an attempt seems to have been made to obtain for a book subscribers who should agree that they would neither show nor loan it to others. So, when Coppinger & Scruton and Drone & Shortis, in their works on the subject of Copyright, assert that, "to constitute publication it is necessary that the work shall be exposed for sale or offered gratuitously to the general public, so that any person may have an opportunity of enjoying that for which the copyright is intended to be secured," they did not intend to imply that the leasing of a book for a year or a term of years to any and all persons who would accept it on such terms would not constitute a publication. They did not have such a situation in mind. The consideration and discussion of the principles established by such cases as they succeeded in finding in England and this country, bearing upon the question of publication, did not suggest to them the possibility of such a claim being made. It will be observed that the general rule which we have quoted from Coppinger asserts, first, that to expose for sale is to constitute publication. It is not necessary that the book be actually sold; it is sufficient if it be offered to the public. The act of publication is the act of the author, and cannot be dependent upon the act of the purchaser. The actual sale of a copy is evidence that it has been offered to the public, but that fact may also be shown by other evidence. It then asserts that, if a book be offered gratuitously to the general public, it will constitute publication. This may be done by presenting it to public libraries, and this is so because the author or publisher, by that act, puts it in such a place that all the public may see it if they choose. The reason why exposing for sale or offering gratuitously to the general public constitutes publication is stated in the last part of the rule as follows: "So that any person may have an opportunity of enjoying that for which the copyright is intended to be secured." And this reason, which lies at the foundation of all decisions upon this subject, is applicable to this situation. All persons were given the opportunity of enjoying this book upon the plaintiff's terms. Several cases have arisen where the courts have held that the private circulation of pictures, manuscripts, or printed books did not constitute a publication, such as Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652; also Bartlett v. Cristenden, 4 McLean, 800, where the plaintiff, a teacher of bookkeeping, for the convenience of his pupils, wrote his system of instructions on separate cards, which they were permitted to keep for their convenience. So a gratuitous circulation of copies of a work among friends and acquaintances has been held not to amount to a publication. Dr. Paley's Case, cited in 2 Ves. & B. 23, was one where a bookseller was restrained from publishing manuscripts left by Dr. Paley for the use of his own parishioners only. Coppinger, in his work on Copyright, at page 117, after considering the last case cited and others, reached the following conclusion: "The distinction is in the limit of the circulation. If limited to friends and acquaintances, it would not be a publication; but, if general, and not so limited, it would be." In this case the circulation was not limited to friends and acquaintances, or even to a class. The limitation was upon the character of the use which a subscriber could make of it. It was the privilege of any and all persons who desired to become subscribers to obtain possession and use of the reference books. The fact that the publisher of the book undertook to place restrictions on the use which individual purchasers could make of it, the effect of which might be to increase, rather than diminish, the public demand for the book, does not constitute such a limitation as takes away from the act of the plaintiff its real character, which is that of publication.

In Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 32 L. ed. 547, Myers was a reporter of the supreme court of the state of Illinois, and, desiring to secure a copyright for such portions of the reports as he was entitled to have copyrighted, undertook to provide the three conditions prescribed by the copyright statute, namely, a deposit, before publication, of a printed copy of the title of the book, the giving of information of the copyright by the insertion of a notice thereof on the title page or the next page, and by depositing a copy of the book within three months after the publication. It was insisted, as to one of the volumes, that Myers had not deposited a copy of the book within three months after the publication as the statute then required. It was shown that under the statutes of the state of Illinois a reporter of decisions was required to supply to the secretary of state a certain number of copies of the reports for the purposes expressly provided by law. This statute Myers complied with more than three months before he deposited in the clerk's office a volume of the reports containing the insertion of the notice giving the information of a copyright. It did not appear that these books were ever distributed from the secretary of state's office, but the court held that the delivery of the copies for the use of the state was a publication of the volumes, and therefore his copyright should fail. Myers did not expose the books for sale in the usual way. He was required by the statute to make delivery of them at the time he did, but that fact was held not to prevent publication, and the reason for it may be found scattered through the cases bearing upon that subject in the fact that by the delivery, whatever the occasion for it, the public, or an indefinite portion of it, were assured of access to the book without further action on the part of the author.

The case of Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N. Y. 532, 7 Am. Rep. 480, is not in conflict with the views we have expressed. In that case the plaintiff procured an assignment of a play, which secured to him the author's right of its first printing and publication. Before printing it, he put the play upon the stage, and thus the defendant was able to obtain and print it before the plaintiff did. Judgment was obtained preventing the defendant from selling, the court holding that the representation of a dramatic composition upon the stage is not such a dedication of it to the public as will authorize others to print and publish it without the author's permission. On his way to this conclusion Judge Allen said: "The rights of an author of a drama in his composition are twofold. He is entitled to the profit arising from its performance, and also from the sale of the manuscript, or the printing and publishing it," and its representation on the stage "does not give to the hearer any title to the manuscript, or a copy of it, or a right to the use of a copy."

In Kiernan v. Manhattan Quotation Teleg. Co. 50 How. Pr. 194, it was held that the transmission of news over telegraphic instruments does not constitute a general publication, the argument being that the case was analogous in principle to the writing and delivery of letters, the writer having such interest therein as will authorize him, in certain cases, to restrain their publication. Is there any difference, said the court, because he (the plaintiff) writes to his customers by telegraph?

The learned counsel for the respondent, apparently not unmindful that to sustain his contention requires the court to take a very long step in advance of any hitherto taken upon this question, urges the very large pecuniary interest involved for the plaintiff, and insists that courts of equity should find a way to protect property rights such as plaintiff claims, even if there are no precedents for doing so; and refers to the remarks of the court in Piper v. Hoard, 107 N. Y. 73, in which the court said: "If the most that can be said is that the case is novel, and is not brought plainly within the limits of some adjudged case, we think such fact not enough to call for a reversal of this judgment." If the plaintiff's interests are of so important a character, and the public interest would be best subserved were the law such as plaintiff insists it to be, then is presented a proper subject for legislative action. But our examination leads us to the conclusion that the present state of the law is that, if a book be put within reach of the general public, so that all may have access to it, no matter what limitations may be put upon the use of it by the individual subscriber or lessee, it is published, and what is known as the common-law copyright, or right of first publication, is gone. So far as is disclosed by this record, the plaintiff was in that situation at the time of the commencement of this action.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

Gray, O'Brien, and Haight, JJ., concur; and Bartlett, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur for reversal upon special ground, as follows: We concur in the result upon the ground that the plaintiff, by depositing two copies of its reference book in the office of the librarian of Congress, published the same, even if it obtained no copyright; that, if it did obtain a copyright, it thereby waived its common-law right of literary property in said book, and its statutory rights under Federal legislation can be protected only in the Federal courts.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

C. T. CLEVELAND, Appt.,

v.

S. A. McCANNA, Resp.

(7 N. D. 455.)

* 1. The official acts of a de facto officer cannot be collaterally attacked.

2. Mutual judgments cannot be set off one against the other in such a manner as to defeat the exemption laws; and when, on an application of a judgment debtor to have a judgment owned by him and against his creditor set off against the judgment owned by such creditor, and against him, such judgment creditor files a verified schedule of his personal property, showing that the whole thereof, including such judgment, is less in value than the amount allowed by law as exempt, such set-off should be refused.

(May 10, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Grand Forks County setting off upon a judgment in favor of appellant for damages for wrongful seizure of exempt property a judgment against him for the price of goods alleged to have been sold and delivered. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Burke Corbet, for appellant:

The pretended action commenced, and the pretended judgment rendered, by W. A. Winslow as justice, was without jurisdiction and void.

The city justice of the city of Larimore in 1894 had no jurisdiction to bring an action or render judgment for $200 damages, $20 attorney's fees, and $13 costs.

U. S. Rev. Stat. 1907, vested all judicial authority in four kinds or classes of courts. Any act of the territorial legislature attempting to create another class or kind of court or to vest any judicial power in any other court, board, or officer was void.

Spencer v. Sully County, 4 Dak. 474; Rupert v. Alturas County Comrs. 2 Idaho. 21; Hedges v. Lewis & Clarke County Comrs. 4 Mont. 280; Ferris v. Higley, 20 Wall. 375, 22 L. ed. 333.

If the territorial laws creating city justices and police justices were valid as territorial laws, the law as to city justices of the peace was repugnant to the state Constitution, and did not survive the admission of the state.

Const. § 112.

Const. §§ 112 and 113, did not contemplate the continuance of the territorial justice of the peace or police justice in any event longer than necessary to enable the legislature to pass laws for the election of the justices of the peace provided for in § 112, or the police magistrate provided for in § 113.

Even if the territorial laws could survive throughout 1894, and authorize the election of city justices and the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon him by chapters 33 and 73 of 1889, the jurisdiction would be only to the amount of $100.

The amount claimed in the summons, if too great, is fatal to the jurisdiction of the court, and cannot be cured by any subsequent act.

Plunket v. Evans, 2 S. D. 434; Warder, B. & G. Co. v. Raymond, 7 S. D. 451.

A judgment for damages for the wrongful taking or conversion of exempt personal property is exempt to the judgment creditor from setting off claims or judgments against him in favor of the judgment creditor.

Ellis v. Pratt City, 111 Ala. 629, 36 L. R. A. 264; Houghton v. Lee, 50 Cal. 101; Hall v. Fulghum, 86 Tenn. 451; White v. Fulghum, 87 Tenn. 231; Crawford v. Carroll, 93 Tenn. 661, 26 L. R. A. 415; Reynolds v. Haines, 83 Iowa, 342, 13 L. R. A. 719; Kaiser v. Seaton, 63 Iowa 463; Stebbins v. Peeler, 29 Vt. 289; Mitchell v. Milhoan 11 Kan. 617; Cooney v. Cooney, 65 Barb. 524; Smyth, Homesteads & Exemptions, § 103; Waples, Homesteads & Exemptions, p. 609.

A judgment recovered for the negligent killing of animals exempt from execution is also exempt.

Crawford v. Carroll, 93 Tenn. 661, 26 L. R. A. 415; Duff v. Wells, 7 Helsk. 17; Reynolds v. Haines, 83 Iowa, 342, 13 L. R. A. 719; Kaiser v. Seaton, 62 Iowa, 463; Cullen v. Harris, 111 Mich. 20; Collier v. Murphy, 90 Tenn. 300; Millington v. Laurer, 89 Iowa, 322; Howard v. Tandy, 79 Tex. 450; Below v. Robbins, 76 Wis. 600, 8 L. R. A. 467; Tillotson v. Wolcott, 49 N. Y. 188; Mallory v. Norton, 21 Barb. 424; Temple v. Scott, 8 Minn. 419; Puget Sound Dressed Beef & Pkg. Co. v. Jeffs, 11 Wash. 466, 27 L. R. A. 808; Cullers v. May, 81 Tex. 110; Deering v. Ruffner, 82 Neb. 845; Mudge v. Lanning, 68 Iowa, 641; Cameron v. Fay, 55 Tex. 62; Beckman v. Manlove, 18 Cal. 359; Butner v. Bowser, 104 Ind. 255.

The fact that the owner of the property so seized may not be able to give bond, and avail himself of the more expeditious remedy of suing out such process as will place him in possession of the property, and that instead thereof he sues for damages, and obtains judgment, which is paid, should not operate in the latter case to practically deprive him of the results of the suit and the benefits of the exemption.

Howard v. Tandy, 79 Tex. 450; Below v. Robbins, 76 Wis. 600, 8 L. R. A. 467.

Exemplary damages should not be given as a mere punishment to the wrongdoer, but only for full compensation for the wrong done, including, not only determinate, but indeterminate or estimated, damages.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 450, 451, and note.

Under Comp. Laws, § 5128, Rev. Codes, § 5518, a judgment creditor may hold his judgment to the amount of $1,500 exempt from attachment, execution, or set-off, regardless of the cause of action on which it was rendered.

Atkinson v. Pittman, 47 Ark. 464; Curley v. Thomas, 74 N. C. 51; Thompson, Home-

* Headnotes by BARTHOLOMEW, J.

NOTE.—As to set-off of judgments, see also Benson v. Haywood (Iowa) 23 L. R. A. 335, and note, and Roberts v. Mitchell (Tenn.) 20 L. R. A. 705, 41 L. R. A.

steads & Exemption, §§ 892, 894; Wilson v. McElroy, 83 Pa. 82; Collett v. Jones, 7 B. Mon. 586.

Statutes of exemptions are to be liberally construed.

Butner v. Bousser, 104 Ind. 255; Puett v. Beard, 86 Ind. 172, 44 Am. Rep. 280; Carpenter v. Cool, 115 Ind. 184; Burdge v. Bolin, 106 Ind. 175, 55 Am. Rep. 724; Taylor v. Dueterberg, 109 Ind. 165; Barnard v. Brown, 112 Ind. 53; Dumbould v. Rowley, 118 Ind. 858; Collier v. Murphy, 90 Tenn. 800.

Messrs. O. A. Wilcox, Bangs & Fisk, and Cochrane & Feetham for respondent.

Bartholomew, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In March, 1894, the respondent, McCanna, obtained a judgment against the appellant, Cleveland, before the city justice of the city of Larimore, in Grand Forks county, for the sum of $200 and costs, amounting in all to $235. An abstract of said judgment was duly filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of said county, and the judgment was properly entered and docketed in that court, and is still in force and entirely unpaid. On April 24 following, appellant commenced the action against respondent in which this proceeding is entitled, and sought to recover $3,000, actual and exemplary damages, for the alleged wrongful and unlawful seizure and conversion by respondent of certain enumerated personal property belonging to appellant, which it was claimed constituted appellant's absolute and alternative exemptions. On the trial of this action, the jury found the value of such personal property to be $367.25, and a general verdict was returned for appellant for $717; and subsequently judgment was entered thereon, which, with costs and interest, amounted to $849.90. This judgment was subsequently reduced by the court to $620.74, for which sum it is still in force and unpaid. An execution was issued thereon in January, 1897. Thereupon the respondent applied for and obtained an order on appellant to show cause why the judgment in respondent's favor and against appellant, should not be set off pro tanto, against the judgment in favor of appellant, and against respondent. The application for the order was supported by an affidavit setting forth the rendition of the judgments as herein stated. On the return day, the respondent, in support of his motion, introduced the pleadings in both cases and the affidavit on which the order was issued. Appellant introduced testimony showing that the property for the conversion of which he recovered judgment was property that was exempt from seizure or sale under legal process, and also a verified schedule of his property showing that the value of the whole thereof, including the judgment against respondent, was less than the amount exempted by law, and claimed to hold such judgment as exempt from application on his own debts. The court, after a full hearing, granted the motion to set off, and made the proper order therefor. The appeal is from such order.

It is first urged that the judgment rendered by the city justice of the city of Larimore against appellant was and is a nullity, for the reason that no such officer as a city justice of the peace is known or authorized under our Constitution and laws. The office of the justice of the peace is recognized, and, as such, the officer was claiming to act. This contention cannot prevail. It is conceded that such justice was a de facto officer, performing all the functions of a justice of the peace. This attack is purely collateral. It is well settled that the validity of the acts of a de facto officer cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding.

But the second point raised is of more importance. Our statute declares (Rev. Codes, § 5499): "Mutual final judgments may be set off pro tanto the one against the other by the court upon proper application and notice." Such was the rule in equity, independent of any statute. 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 446, and cases in note 3. The power is no broader under the statute. But this power will never be exercised where the set-off would deprive a party of his legal rights. Id. p. 448, note 3. It is claimed that the allowance of the set-off in this case would deprive appellant of his legal right to his exemptions. There is a special reason alleged in this case why appellant's judgment against respondent should be protected from such set-off. It is urged that this judgment was obtained: for the wrongful conversion of exempt property, and for that reason it stands in lieu of the property, and is equally exempt; and the cases so hold. Crawford v. Curroll, 93 Tenn. 661, 26 L. R. A. 415; Kaiser v. Seaton, 62 Iowa. 468; Cullen v. Harris, 111 Mich. 20. But we think that holding more applicable in states where certain specific articles are exempt by statute, as is the case in the states from whence these authorities are cited. In this state, we think, the ruling should be placed upon a broader ground. Our Constitution provides (§ 208): "The right of the debtor to enjoy the comforts and necessities of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws exempting from forced sale to all heads of families a homestead, the value of which shall be limited and defined by law, and a reasonable amount of personal property; the kind and value shall be fixed by law." In pursuance of this constitutional requirement, our legislature has declared by § 5516 et seq., Rev. Codes, that to each head of a family there shall be exempt from seizure certain articles which the statute terms "absolute exemptions," and which include all wearing apparel of the debtor and his family, and provisions and fuel for one year. The statute then provides that, in addition to these absolute exemptions, the debtor may select from any personal property that he possesses other property not to exceed $1,500 in value. To effect this, the debtor must present to the officer holding the process a verified schedule of all his personalty. The law then provides for an appraisal. If the appraised value exceeds $1,500, the debtor may select from the list any property he desires, but not exceeding in value $1,500, according to the appraisal. If the appraisal be $1,500 or less, of course the debtor takes it all. It follows logically that, if we are to give full effect to the exemption law, a debtor has an absolute right to select as a part of his exemptions a judgment that he may own, and it is entirely immaterial upon what the judgment may be based. It is property in his hands, and it rests exclusively with himself to say what property, within the limit, he will elect to hold as exempt. Likewise, he might, before his claim was reduced to judgment, have elected to hold that claim as a part of his exemptions. Hence the judgment simply represents exempt property in another form, and all the authorities hold that a judgment that represents the proceeds of exempt property cannot be set off on a judgment against such judgment creditor. The case of Butner v. Bousier, 104 Ind. 255, was decided under a statute the same in character as ours, and is exactly in point; and the general principle is sustained by the authorities cited supra, and by 1 Freeman, Executions, § 235, and cases there cited. And see Ellis v. Pratt City, 111 Ala. 629, 83 L. R. A. 264; Duff v. Wells, 7 Heisk. 17; Reynolds v. Haines, 88 Iowa, 342, 13 L. R. A. 719; Millington v. Laurer, 89 Iowa, 322; Howard v. Tandy, 79 Tex. 450; Below v. Robbins, 76 Wis. 600, 8 L. R. A. 467. The only cases that we have found holding a contrary doctrine are Mallory v. Norton, 21 Barb. 424, Temple v. Scott, 8 Minn. 419 (Gil 806), and Knabb v. Drake, 28 Pa. 489, 62 Am. Dec. 352. The case in 21 Barb. is entirely destroyed by Tillotson v. Wolcott, 48 N. Y. 188. The cases from Minnesota and Pennsylvania are based upon the alleged principle that exemption laws, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed, —a principle now almost universally discarded.

It is true that the procedure under our exemption statute refers more particularly to seizures under attachments and executions, but that is because it is by means of those writs that property is usually seized. But it would be an exceedingly narrow view of the law that would deny exemptions where it was sought to take property by other means. This court is unqualifiedly committed to a liberal construction of exemption statutes. Red River Valley Bank v. Freeman, 1 N. D. 196. In that case we expressly held that the fact that the machinery of the law did not contemplate the exact case there under consideration could not defeat a claim for exemptions. We must make the same ruling here. In response to the order to show cause, the appellant presented a verified schedule of all his personal property, and claimed his judgment against respondent as exempt. His entire personalty outside of that judgment amounted, according to the schedule, to $27. If there was a doubt as to the correctness of that schedule, the court had full power to investigate the matter. But its correctness was not questioned and the claim for exemptions should have been allowed.

The order appealed from is reversed.

All concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Ohio, Plff. in Err.,

John POWELL.

(58 Ohio St. 321.)

- *1. Section 7032a, Rev. Stat., making it, among other things, an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment for anyone on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, to play baseball or exhibit "any baseball playing," neither requires nor prohibits any religious observance, and does not therefore violate the right of conscience in matters of religion, secured to the individual by the 7th section of our bill of rights.
- 2. It is competent to the general assembly, in the exercise of its legislative power, to adopt all such wholesome laws as may be necessary to promote the peace, health, and well-being of society. Laws fixing regularly recurring days of rest from all secular pursuits, such as our Sunday laws, are of this character, and do not violate the personal liberty of the individual, secured by the 1st section of our bill of rights.

(April 19, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by the prosecuting attorney to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Cuyahoga County reversing a judgment of the Police Court of the City of Cleveland

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For constitutionality of Sunday laws, see note to Judefind v. State (Md.) 22 L. R. A. 721; also People v. Havner (N. Y.) 81 L. R. A. 689; Ex parte 41 L. R. A.

convicting defendant of violating the Sunday law by playing baseball on that day. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. L. Strimple, Harvey R. Keeler, and Charles W. Snider, for plaintiff in error:

Sunday is the creature and offspring of the police power of the state, and the validity of the law creating it is neither strengthened nor weakened by the fact that the day of rest it enjoins is the Christian Sabbath.

Blackstone, in his Commentaries, defines the police power to be: "The due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the inhabitants of the state, like members of a well governed family, are bound to conform their general behavior to the rules of propriety, good neighborhood, and good manners, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective stations."

Judge Cooley says, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, 2d ed. p. 572, that "the police power of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its whole system of internal regulation, by which it is sought, not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizen with citizen those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others."

Jentzsch (Cal.) 32 L. R. A. 664, and Eden v. People (Ill.) 32 L. R. A. 660.

The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives.

Const. 1851, art. 2, § 1.

That includes all legislative power which the object and purposes of the state government may require; and we must look to other provisions of the Constitution to see how far, and to what extent, legislative discretion is qualified or restricted.

Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 591.

The repugnancy which must cause the law to fall must be necessary and obvious; if by any fair course of reasoning the law and the Constitution can be reconciled, the law must stand.

Case v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607.

No such prohibition or limitation can be found in the Constitution. Sunday regulation is clearly within the Constitution.

People v. Hawnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L. R. A. 689; Roberts v. Barnes, 127 Mo. 405; Lindemuller v. People, 38 Barb. 548; State v. Granneman, 132 Mo. 326; Gunn v. State, 89 Ga. 341; State v. O'Rourke, 85 Neb. 614, 17 L. R. A. 830; State v. Fernandez, 39 La. Ann. 538; Cincinnati v. Rice, 15 Ohio, 225; Sellers v. Dugan, 18 Ohio, 489; Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387; Specht v. Com. 8 Pa. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518; Charleston v. Benjamin, 2 Strobb. L. 508; McGatrick v. Watson, 4 Ohio St. 568.

Playing baseball on Sunday comes within the definition of sporting and renders the persons engaged therein liable to the punishment provided for in § 241, Neb. Code.

State v. O'Rourke, 85 Neb. 614, 17 L. R. A. 830.

Mr. J. E. Ingersoll also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Solders, Hogsett, & Tilden, for defendant in error:

The statute is in the nature of an ex post facto law, in that it makes punishable an act done, which when done is innocent, not prohibited, not criminal.

1 Chitty's Bl. Com. p. 31.

It was impossible that the party could foresee that the action, innocent when it was done, could afterwards be converted into a crime by subsequent law (or as said in § 7092 A, by complaint), and he therefore have no cause to abstain from it.

Any baseball playing on the first day of the week would become an offense, depending entirely upon the views of the various localities and counties of the state—lawful if the liberal sentiment of the community will tolerate it, and unlawful if the religious sentiment of the community disapproves it. It is in the nature of an act depending entirely upon the popular will, and not upon the will of the sovereign power in declaring the act to be an offense.

The absolute and equal freedom of all persons at birth is a fundamental principle of American institutions, proclaimed with independence and incapable of abrogation.

Anderson v. Poindexter, 6 Ohio St. 622.

Those who have advocated Sunday laws, so called, have shown an inclination to treat constitutional limitations lightly.

41 L. R. A.

2 Story, Constr. § 1847.

The Constitution of the state is higher authority than any law. In any case of conflict the fundamental law must govern, and the act in conflict with it must be treated as of no legal validity.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 48; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 81.

That is not legislation which prescribes a rule of conduct contrary to the general law, and orders it to be enforced. Such power simulates itself closely to despotic rule.

The first Sunday law was in the time of Constantine, March 7, A. D. 321.

By the law of the year 386 those older laws effected by the Emperor Constantine were more rigorously enforced, and in general civil transactions of every kind on Sunday were strictly forbidden.

Neander, Church History, p. 300.

In 401, A. D., the bishops passed a resolution and petitioned the Emperor, praying that the public shows might be transferred from the Christian Sunday and from the feast days to some other days of the week.

Soon after this petition, in 425 A. D., the desired Sunday law was procured and the reason attached, to wit: "In order that the devotion of the faithful might be free from any disturbance."

The first Brownist Sunday law, so called, was passed in England in 1623, but this act did not say a word about work, but proclaimed that the holy keeping of the Lord's day was "profaned by people going to bear-baiting, bull baiting, interludes, common plays, and other unlawful exercises and practices;" and with such play (not work) it proceeded to interfere.

A century and a half elapsed after this first Brownist Sunday law, so called, before any work (that is, one's ordinary calling, with the exceptions of works of necessity and charity) was forbidden on Sunday.

All legislation from the earliest dawn of civilization is based upon (however much sought to be denied in our time) the historic truth that Sunday laws represent and embody union of church and state.

Weldon v. Colquitt, 62 Ga. 449; Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Greene, 406, 43 Am. Dec. 387; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Johnston v. Com. 22 Pa. 102; Stockden v. State, 18 Ark. 186; State v. Amba, 20 Mo. 214; State v. O'Rourke, 35 Neb. 614, 17 L. R. A. 830; Corey v. Bath, 35 N. H. 530; Varney v. French, 19 N. H. 235; Moore v. Hagan, 2 Duv. 437; Davis v. Somerville, 128 Mass. 594, 35 Am. Rep. 899; George v. George, 47 N. H. 27; Com. v. Dupuy, Brightly (Pa.) 44.

The word "desecrate" is from sacerare, to consecrate; sacer, sacred. To debase of sacred character; to divert from sacred purposes; to violate the sanctity of; to profane; to put to unworthy use. It means the opposite of consecrate.

Consecration is: To appropriate to sacred uses; to set apart, dedicate, or devote to the service or worship of God.

This indicates beyond all question that the main idea underlying such legislation is the religious view maintained as to how the day shall be utilized.

Civil government is civil and has nothing to do by legislation with religious observances on any day, or with aiding any religious sect in enforcing their views as to how the day shall be observed.

Matthew xxii., 21.

The law cannot deprive any man of the right to abstain from religious exercises or religious observances on the first day or any other day of the week.

No law can be maintained making an act done on the first days of the week an offense which may be done on other days of the week without being an offense, unless the act is a transgression of the natural rights of another, and results in injury of which the law takes cognizance.

The majority can decide no such question without serious disturbance and violation of individual rights.

Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 476.

The language of most Sunday laws is so general as to strongly support the idea that spiritual betterment of the abstainer from physical work is what the state is aiming at, although it is sought to justify Sunday legislation on other grounds, that is, sanitary benefits.

Kennell v. Ridler, 5 Barn. & C. 406.

If the action of the people engaged in innocent acts prohibited in the section referred to is not an injury to civil rights, and not a trespass upon the rights of others, in other words, not a nuisance, as recognized by the law, the people have a right to so conduct themselves, and their prohibition is an interference with personal liberty.

The word "sporting" in the main comprehends amusements of the people, worldly action, and this term, years ago in England, received what odium still attaches to the word by reason of the worldliness of the participants therein, and hence Sunday legislation prohibited the same.

State v. O'Rourke, 85 Neb. 614, 17 L. R. A. 830; State v. Williams, 85 Mo. App. 545; St. Louis Agri. & Mechanical Assn. v. Delano, 37 Mo. App. 284, 108 Mo. 217.

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John Powell, with others was prosecuted in the police court of the city of Cleveland, on an information charging him, in one count, with having on Sunday, May 16, 1897, participated in playing baseball, and, in a second count, with having exhibited a game of baseball playing, on certain grounds in the city, a charge for admittance having been made. The case was tried to a jury on a plea of not guilty. He was found guilty on both counts, and after a motion for a new trial made and overruled, was sentenced to pay a fine and costs of prosecution. The case was then taken to the court of common pleas on error, where the judgment was reversed, and the defendant discharged, on the ground that the section of the Revised Statutes (7032a) under which the conviction was had is unconstitutional. This section, among other things, makes it an offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for anyone on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, to participate in, or exhibit to the public in any "buildlog" or on any "ground" in this state, "any baseball playing." A bill of exceptions was taken by the prosecuting attorney to the ruling of the judge, and, on application, leave was given by this court to file the same. The question presented by the bill is the validity of our Sunday laws. After so many years of acquiescence in their adoption, and, I might say, of almost unquestioned validity, these laws are now assailed on the ground that they violate the guaranties of personal and religious liberty contained in the 1st and 7th sections of our bill of rights. These questions may be better considered in their reverse order.

The 7th section secures to every citizen of the state the fullest liberty of conscience in matters of religion. No one can be compelled to support or observe any form of worship against his consent. If the observance of Sunday as a day of rest and abstinence from all secular pursuits had for its object the enforcement of a religious requirement, there are few lawyers or judges that would undertake to sustain the statute as a valid enactment. It would clearly contravene the section of the bill of rights just referred to. But that they are secular in purpose, and not made to enforce any particular form of religious observance, is sustained by a consensus of opinion in the decisions of the courts of this country, rarely found upon any other subject. Indeed, there is not to be found a decision of a court of last resort to the contrary, except that of the state of California, which has since been overruled by the same court. Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502, overruled in Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 679. And though the day adopted for the observance of rest may coincide with the religious persuasion of a large part of the people, but not with all, this is not regarded as infringing upon the rights of the latter, since no religious observance of any kind is enjoined. Those who desire can devote the day to religious observances. Others may do as they see fit, so that they do not engage in such secular pursuits as, in accordance with the policy of the law, are prohibited. The policy of Sunday laws is based upon the observed fact, derived from long experience and the custom of all nations, that periods of rest from ordinary pursuits are requisite to the well being, morally and physically, of a people. If there were no such regularly recurring periods, there is reason to believe that the masses would become morbid in body and mind, crime would multiply, and degeneracy likely ensue. Rest recuperates the mind and body, gives new life and hope to the people, and cheerfulness and health attend renewed labor; and, as has been well observed, more, under these circumstances, can be accomplished in six days than would otherwise be accomplished in seven. This is the foundation and policy of all statutes regulating the observance of a day of rest; and whether the day selected is one consonant to the religious views of a portion of the people or not does not affect the validity of the regulation, where no religious observance is enjoined. Religious liberty does not consist in the right of any sect to oppose its views to the policy of a government. Such a claim would end in simple intolerance of all not in accord with the sentiments of the particular sect. Those who, as a matter of religious faith, observe the seventh day of the week, are not prohibited from doing so; but they cannot insist that others shall do so, nor refuse to observe the day fixed by the state for secular reasons. There are sects who believe in polygamy, and adopt it as a part of their religion. But, however conscientious they may be in entertaining such notions, if one of them should come into Ohio, and bring with him his wives, his religious scruples would not protect him on an indictment for bigamy.

The question, however, is not an open one in this state. In Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387, decided in 1853, the whole subject was fully considered. While holding that the making of a contract is not within the meaning of the term "common labor," the statute, as thus construed, was sustained as a secular regulation, that in no way interferes with any one's rights of conscience. Thurman, J., in delivering the opinion, said that "acts evil in their nature, or dangerous to the public welfare, may be forbidden and punished, though sanctioned by one religion and prohibited by another; but this creates no preference whatever, for they would be equally forbidden and punished if all religions permitted them. Thus, no plea of religion could shield a murderer, ravisher, or bigamist; for community would be at the mercy of superstition, if such crimes as these could be committed with impunity, because sanctioned by some religious delusion." "We are, then," he said, "to regard the statute under consideration as a mere municipal or police regulation, whose validity is neither strengthened nor weakened by the fact that the day of rest it enjoins is the Sabbath day. Wisdom requires that men should refrain from labor at least one day in seven, and the advantages of having the day of rest fixed, and so fixed as to happen at regularly recurring intervals, are too obvious to be overlooked. It was within the constitutional competency of the general assembly to require the cessation of labor, and to name the day of rest. It did so by the act referred to, and, in accordance with the feelings of a majority of the people, the Christian Sabbath was very properly selected. But, regarded merely as an exertion of legislative authority, the act would have had neither more nor less validity had any other day been adopted." He then cites a number of cases, particularly Specht v. Com. 8 Pa. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518, and Charleston v. Benjamin, 2 Strobb. L. 508, which fully support his opinion as to the secular character of Sunday laws and the policy on which they rest. Among the cases that may be cited sustaining the enactment of Sunday laws, in addition to those already referred to, are the following: Watts v. Van Ness, 1 Hill, 76; Shover v. State, 10 Ark. 259; State v. Amba, 20 Mo. 214; Hall v. State, 3 Ga. 18; Boie v. State, 7 Gill, 326; Jones v. People, 14 Ill. 196; Story v. Elliot, 3 Cow. 27, 18 Am. Dec. 423; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; People v. Hannon, 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L. R. A. 689; Hennington v. State, 90 Ga. 396, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 413, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166. They are also fully collected and well considered in the opinion of Fisher, J., in State v. Goode, 5 Ohio, N. P. 179. And it is proper to call attention to the able dissenting opinion of Field, J., in Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 518, since the decision of the majority in this case was overruled by an unanimous decision in the subsequent case of Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 679; and the law of that state "for the better observance of the Sabbath," sustained, though the same constitutional objections were urged against it that are made in this case, the provisions of their bill of rights being in this regard substantially the same as our own.

But it is further claimed that the statute violates the guaranty of personal liberty contained in the 1st section of the bill of rights. This, though one of the great maxims of our form of government has never been regarded as limiting the power of the legislature in the enactment of such good and wholesome laws as are required to secure the peace, health, and good order of society. The learned Sedgwick in his work on Statutory and Constitutional Construction (p. 153), commenting on the provisions usually contained in the bill of rights of our American constitutions, says: "They are of no little value as safeguards against error and injustice; but I think they must be regarded rather as guides for the political conscience of the legislature than as texts of judicial duty. Important as they are, still they are expressed in such general terms as necessarily to admit of great and prominent exceptions. As to the enjoyment of life and liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness, all these rights are daily interfered with by the legislature, without scruple, for the common welfare. I suppose it must be admitted that, in a judicial sense, these clauses could not easily be made available." Liberty, as understood in this country, is not license, but liberty regulated by law. The personal liberty of every man is subject to such reasonable regulations as, in the wisdom of the legislature, are regarded necessary to promote, not only the peace and good order of society, but its well-being. This objection to the law is well answered in the clear and forcible language of Justice Field, in the dissenting opinion before referred to. "If," he says, "it be admitted that the legislature possesses the right to restrain each one in his freedom of conduct only so far as is necessary to secure protection to all others, from every species of danger to person, health, and property, no inference can be drawn against the validity of the act under consideration. The character and mode of protection, and what is dangerous to the person or to health and property, must necessarily be left to its determination and in the 1st section of the Constitution no inhibition to the exercise of its power in this respect can be found. The prohibition of secular business on Sunday is advocated on the ground that by it the general welfare is advanced, labor protected, and the moral and physical well-being of society promoted. The legislature has so considered it, and the judiciary cannot say that the legislature was mistaken, and therefore the act is unconstitutional, without passing out of its legitimate sphere, and assuming a right to supervise the exercise of legislative discretion in matters of mere expediency," and which he proceeds to say cannot be done.

We have carefully considered the able argument of counsel for the judge whose ruling is under review. The gist of his argument is that the purpose of the act is to enforce the observance of Sunday as a religious requirement and calls attention to the claims and views of those most zealous in its enforcement. No doubt, many who advocate Sunday observance, particularly the Christian ministry, do so from the persuasion that our Sunday laws are designed as religious observances only, and insist that they should be more rigidly enforced, that the people may be more accessible to the influences of the Christian pulpit. However desirable this may be from the Christian standpoint, it is certain that it is not in the power of the legislature to accomplish this by any direct legislation, so long as religious liberty is guaranteed, as it is in our bill of rights. This was settled by the case of Bloom v. Richards, 9 Ohio St. 387. The fact, however, that such views are entertained of the purpose of the law, and may have controlled the votes of many who supported it in the legislature, cannot affect its real character and proper construction. The purpose and object of the law are to be determined by the language applicable to its subject-matter. Speaking to the same point, Baldwin, J., in Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 685, said: "The act itself, in the body of it, explains in what manner the day was to be observed, and shows that the object of it was only to require duties purely civic or secular." A law enacted for sufficient reasons of a secular nature, as the public health, cannot be held invalid because there is a variety of religious notions upon the subject. Nor can the state be prevented from adopting certain civil regulations, recommended by a wise public policy, simply because found to be in accord with the teaching of some religion. There is probably no religious observance that could not be enforced as a secular duty, without violating the guaranty of religious liberty, where there are sufficient secular reasons for doing so, independent of what is ordained as a matter of religion. In general, where there are secular and religious reasons for the same observance or law, the observance or law may be adopted as a civil regulation by the legislature for the attainment of the secular purposes; and, when enforced for these purposes alone, no one can complain of it simply because the observance or law finds support in the precepts of some religion. It is enjoined for secular, and not religious, reasons. It might be questioned whether the Jewish Sabbath was prescribed purely as a religious observance, and without any regard to the temporal welfare of the people. It must be remembered that the Jewish government was in the nature of a theocracy, and its precepts were given without much regard to what was of a spiritual nature, and what was secular and related to the temporal government of the people alone.

Exceptions sustained.

George POLLEY et al., Admsrs., etc., of Morgan Polley, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.
Elizabeth A. HICKS.

(68 Ohio St. 218.)

A delivery to a donee of a deposit book issued by a savings bank, containing entries of deposits to the credit of the donor, with the intention to give the donee the deposits represented by the book, and accompanied with appropriate words of gift, is a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid gift of such deposits, without assignment or transfer in writing.

(March 29, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cuyahoga County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money which plaintiff alleged belonged to her by gift of a bank book by decedent. Affirmed.

Statement by Williams, J.:

Suit was brought in the court of common pleas of Cuyahoga county by Elizabeth A. Hicks against George Polley and John A. Hicks, as administrators of the estate of Morgan Polley, deceased, and individually, to recover $1,816.50, which the plaintiff, in her petition, alleges became her property by gift from Morgan Polley, and was, after his decease, obtained and converted by the defendants to their own use. The gift, it is alleged, was made by the delivery to the plaintiff of a bank book issued by a Cleveland savings bank, showing deposits to the credit of the donor in the amount sued for. Issue was joined by George Polley upon the allegations of the gift, and a trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, which was affirmed by the circuit court. George Polley prosecutes error here. Some questions are made concerning the state of the record, and a defect of parties, but we do not deem it necessary to report those questions. The facts constituting the alleged gift are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry C. Ranney, with Mr. Charles G. Canfield, for plaintiffs in error:

The gift was not completed by the parties; it was not executed and was revoked at the death of the donor.

Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462, 54 Am. Rep. 819; Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc. 31 Ohio St. 457, 27 Am. Rep. 521; Starr v. Starr, 9 Ohio St. 75.

Possession and dominion of the property given must vest in the donee, either by express act of the parties, or by unquestioned written title; otherwise, the death of the donor invalidates the gift.

Flanders v. Blandy, 45 Ohio St. 108.

Messrs. Johnson & Hackney for defendant in error.

Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—For delivery of bank book as gift of money in bank, see Jones v. Weakley (Ala.) 19 L. R. A. 700.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts which the evidence fairly tends to prove, and which, therefore, in view of the verdict and judgment, must be regarded as having been established to the satisfaction of the jury and the court whose duty it was to pass upon its weight, are substantially as follows: Morgan Polley died intestate in the city of Cleveland December 2, 1892, and the defendants below were appointed administrators of his estate. A few days before his death, Morgan Polley, having then in his possession a bank book issued to him by a Cleveland savings bank, showing deposits by him to the amount of $1,600 and over, delivered the book to the plaintiff: accompanying the delivery with the declaration that he gave her the book, and the money it represented, as her property. This was done with the intention to thereby make an absolute gift of the book and money to the plaintiff. At that time Morgan Polley was ill of the malady of which he afterwards died; was conscious of his approaching death, and of sound mind. His apparent motive in making the gift was that an engagement of marriage existed between him and the plaintiff, and she was constant in her care of him during his illness. She accepted the gift when it was made, received the bank book into her possession, and retained its actual custody until some time after the death of Morgan Polley, when, without her consent, the defendants obtained possession of it; and George Polley, on its presentation to the bank, received the whole amount appearing to be due upon it, and claims the right to hold and administer the money as assets of Morgan Polley's estate.

The deposit book, under the regulations of the bank, was of such character that the amount on deposit, or any part of it, could be drawn upon the presentation of the book at the bank by the holder, without check or order from the depositor, and it could not be drawn without the production of the book; and any payment made upon a book of that kind was entered on it by the bank, when made, so that it always showed the actual amount which the bank owed upon it. If there was a sufficient delivery to effectuate the intended gift, there was present every element of a valid donatio causa mortis, as well as of a gift inter vivos. In support of their contention that the delivery was insufficient, counsel for the plaintiff in error cite the cases of Hamor v. Moore, 8 Ohio St. 239; Starr v. Starr, 9 Ohio St. 75; Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc. 81 Ohio St. 457, 27 Am. Rep. 521; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462, 54 Am. Rep. 819, and Flanders v. Blandy, 45 Ohio St. 108. But the question we have here is different from that involved in any of those cases. In the last two of them there was no actual delivery to the donee of the subject of the alleged gift,—in one case, government bonds, and in the other, choses in action due the donor. In Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc., the gift was of the drawer's check, payable to the donee, which was never accepted by the drawee, and was revoked before its presentation. It was subject to revocation, and there was no liability of the drawee upon it. In the first two of the cases referred to, the things delivered were the donor's own promissory notes, payable to the donees. They were sought to be made available as a gift of the money which the donors promised to pay; but, the promises being without consideration, they amounted to no more than mere promises to give the money, and could not be enforced. In the case before us, the deposit book which Morgan Polley gave to the plaintiff was issued to him by the savings bank as evidence of its indebtedness to him, and was the only evidence thereof furnished in such cases. And, as no part of the deposit could be withdrawn without presentation of the book, upon which, at the time, the entries of the withdrawals are made by the bank, this book, at the time of its delivery to the plaintiff, showed the exact amount which the bank then owed upon it, and was complete evidence of the bank's obligation to pay that amount to the depositor, or whoever should become its lawful owner when duly presented at the bank. The question, then, which this case presents, is whether there can be a valid gift, inter vivos or causa mortis, of a chose in action by its delivery to the donee, without assignment in writing by the donor. We are not aware of any reported decision of this court in which the question has been considered. Elsewhere such gifts are sustained by the great weight of authority, and almost with unanimity. In Thornton on Gifts & Advancements (§ 273), that author says, "It may be stated that any written obligation is the subject of gift, without indorsement or assignment." Not only notes, bonds, mortgages, etc., but "all evidence of indebtedness which may be regarded as representing the debt, whether with or without indorsement, are the subject of a donatio mortis causa, and, of course, of inter vivos." And that doctrine is maintained, as the author shows, in a large number of the American states, and by the English courts. In 2 Redf. Wills, ed. 1866, *812, 813, it is laid down as the established rule that "notes and bills not negotiated so as to pass by delivery, and also promissory notes not negotiable, bonds, mortgages, policies of insurance, and all other evidences of indebtedness which may be regarded as representing the debt, may, by a parol gift, and the delivery of the paper by which the debt is evidenced, either with or without written assignment or indorsement, constitute a good gift mortis causa." There seems never to have been serious doubt of the validity of parol gifts of specialties negotiable by delivery, nor much controversy that a valid gift could be made by the delivery of instruments payable to bearer; but it was held in some early English cases that as delivery, without indorsement, of notes payable to order, and of non negotiable obligations, passed only the equitable title, a valid gift could not be made by such delivery. This holding rested upon the theory that it was necessary to resort to equity to compel the donor or his representative to transfer the legal title, and that equity would not lend assistance to compel the completion of a mere voluntary gift. This reason ceased to be of force when the donee became entitled to use the name of the donor or his personal representative in a suit to enforce collection of the instrument, and since all suits at law, as well as in equity, may be brought in the name of the real party in interest, the rule may be regarded as obsolete. As said in Thornton, Gifts & Advancements, § 270: "The old rule that impeded the holding of such gifts as valid because the donee could not maintain an action thereon, is swept away by the more enlightened rule, which compels the personal representative of the donor, upon being indemnified for whatever costs he may be compelled to pay, to permit the action to be brought in his name, or by the equitable rule enforced by statutes or codes that the real party in interest may bring an action upon a note he holds, whether it was indorsed to him or not." The right to give is as clearly incident to the right of property as the right to sell, and choses in action are as much within the scope of this principle as lands and chattels; and hence a delivery, by way of gift, of an instrument evidencing a debt, without written indorsement by the donor, as effectually transfers the beneficial interest in the property to the donee as would such delivery by way of assignment for value. It was said by the master of the rolls in Veal v. Veal, 27 Beav. 303, that it was a "much more healthy state of the law that the validity of such a gift should not depend on whether the testator [donor] had written his name on the back of the bill or not, if it be clear that he intended to give them." The indorsement of the donor's name on the instrument is merely evidence of his intention to make a gift, which may be proved aside from such indorsement. In Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261-263, 35 Am. Dec. 319, the supreme court of Massachusetts, in answering an objection that no valid gift of a chose in action could be made without written assignment, said that "as a good and effectual equitable assignment of a chose in action may be made by parol, and as courts of law take notice of, and give effect to, such assignments, there seems to be no good foundation for this objection. It is true that the cases, which are numerous, in which such equitable assignments have been supported, are founded on assignments for a valuable consideration; but there is little, if any, distinction in this respect, between contracts and gifts inter vivos; the latter, indeed, when made perfect by delivery of the things given, are executed contracts. 2 Kent, Com. 3d ed. p. 438. By delivery and acceptance the title passes, the gift becomes perfect and is irrevocable. There is, therefore, no good reason why property thus acquired should not be protected as fully and effectually as property acquired by purchase. And so we think that a gift of a chose in action, provided no claims of creditors interfere to affect its validity, ought to stand on the same footing as a sale." And this is the rule which prevails in the Federal courts, and in all of the states in which the question has arisen; and it has been before the court of last resort in many of them. Thornton, Gifts & Advancements, § 271.

In recent well-considered cases the rule has been applied to sustain gifts made by the delivery, without written transfer, of books of deposit issued by savings banks, in cases not distinguishable in any important feature from that now under consideration. In Camp's Appeal, 36 Conn. 88, 4 Am. Rep. 39, it is held 41 L. R. A.

that "a delivery to a donee of a savings bank book, containing entries of deposits to the credit of the donor, with the intention to give to the donee the deposits represented by the book, is a good delivery to constitute a complete gift of such deposits;" that "a delivery of a chose in action that would be sufficient to vest an equitable title in a purchaser, is a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid gift of such chose in action, without a transfer of the legal title;" and that, under statutes which provide "that the assignee of any chose in action may sue upon it in his own name, a delivery of such a chose in action would vest in the donee a legal title." In a case of the same kind in New York (Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572, 577, 11 L. R. A. 684), it is said the gift was consummated by the delivery of the savings bank book, "and no other formality was needed to constitute the actual delivery of the bank deposit needful to vest the possession and title in the donee." Pierce v. Boston Five Cents Sav. Bank, 129 Mass. 425, 37 Am. Rep. 871; Tillinghast v. Wheaton, 8 R. I. 536, 94 Am. Dec. 126, and Hill v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 364, 18 Am. Rep. 231, are cases of the same kind, and in which the courts hold as above stated.

We think, on principle and authority, the gift to the plaintiff was legally consummated, and the judgment in her favor should be affirmed. Judgment accordingly.

B. F. HELMAN, Admr., etc., of Sherman Weaver, Deceased, Plff. in Err., PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY.

(58 Ohio St. 400.)

"In the trial of an action brought by an administrator to recover damages, under §§ 6134 and 6135, Rev. Stat., it is competent for the defendant to introduce as evidence what the deceased said while in his right mind after the injury, tending to show that the injury was caused by his own fault, negligence, or carelessness.

(May 10, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Miami County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Burket, J.:

Sherman Weaver, having a wife and three small children, and being a yard brakeman in the employ of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company, received injuries while in the discharge of his duties as such brakeman, at Bradford Junction, in this state, on the 29th day of August, 1894, and died, as a result of such injury, four days thereafter. B. F. Helman was duly appointed administrator of his estate, and sued the railway company for damages, under §§ 6184 and 6185, Rev. Stat., and in his petition averred that the deceased was properly riding a cut of cars onto a certain track; that his superior was negligent in allowing another cut of cars to follow so closely as to overtake and bump against his cut of cars, thereby throwing him off, and causing the cars following to run over him; that his superior did not use ordinary care in the management of the cuts of cars; and that the brake on the cut of cars following his was defective, so that the brakeman upon that car could not properly check up the cut of cars so as to prevent the two cuts coming together. The administrator also averred that, under the laws of Ohio, the said Sherman Weaver would have been entitled to recover against said defendant for his injuries so sustained had death not resulted therefrom. The railway company admitted that it was a corporation; that the deceased had been in its employ; that he was hurt and died at the dates stated; and denied all the other averments of the petition; and averred that the injuries of deceased were caused wholly by his own carelessness and negligence. This was denied by the reply. The widow having received and accepted payment out of the relief department, the action proceeded as an action for the recovery of damages sustained by the children only. The railway company offered evidence tending to prove that on the second day after the injury, and while Mr. Weaver was in good mental condition, he stated in a conversation then had with a Mr. Heaton that at the time of the accident he was standing on the foot-board of the car talking to and watching another employee, who was riding a cut of cars on a parallel track, and that, while so talking and watching the other employee, the cut of cars following him struck his cut, and upset him. Objection being made to this evidence, the court sustained the objection, and refused to admit the evidence to be introduced to the jury to which the railway company excepted, and stated to the court what the witness would testify to if permitted to proceed. A verdict was returned in favor of the administrator. A motion was made for a new trial upon the ground, among others, that the court erred in ruling out said evidence. The motion was overruled, and exceptions taken, and judgment rendered on the verdict. The circuit court reversed the judgment upon the sole ground that the court of common pleas erred in rejecting said evidence. Thereupon the administrator filed his petition in error in this court, seeking to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and asking that the common pleas be affirmed.

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to the effect of contributory negligence of person for whose death an action is brought, see also Meyer v. King (Miss.) 35 L. R. A. 474.

Messrs. H. H. Williams and M. K. Gantz for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Frank Chance and Charles Darlington for defendant in error.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts showing that the death was caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and that the act, neglect, or default was such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, should appear in the petition; and it is not necessary to aver that, if death had not ensued, the deceased would have been entitled to recover damages against the defendant in respect to his injuries so sustained; but such averment can do no harm. The principal questions to be tried are whether death was caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and, if so, if such act, neglect, or default, was such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action, and recover damages in respect thereof. If death was not caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, or, being so caused, the act, neglect, or default was such as would not have entitled the party injured to recover damages if living, the action by the administrator must fail. That death was caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and that the act, neglect, or default was such as would have entitled deceased to recover damages in respect thereof, are conditions upon which the action provided for in §§ 6184 and 6185, Rev. Stat., are given; and the facts constituting these conditions must be averred in the petition, and established on the trial by competent evidence. If facts are averred in the petition which would entitle the deceased, if living, to recover damages for the injuries by him sustained, and facts are averred in the answer, or denials therein made, which, if true, would prevent a recovery on his part if living, the whole evidence taken together must be of sufficient weight to establish affirmatively the facts constituting the conditions upon which the statute gives the right of action, the burden being on the plaintiff. Wolf v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 55 Ohio St. 517, 36 L. R. A. 872. The defendant therefore has the right to introduce any evidence which tends to weaken or disprove the facts necessary to be established to make out the plaintiff's cause, i. e., the facts constituting the conditions upon which the action is given by the statute. If death had not ensued, the deceased could not recover damages for his injuries, if it should be established on the trial that his injuries were caused by his own carelessness or negligence; and his statements after the injury, and while in his right mind, tending to show that the injury was caused by his own negligence and carelessness, would be good evidence against him in an action brought in his own behalf during his lifetime. Would it be evidence against his administrator in an action under the statute in behalf of the beneficiaries?

It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that there is no privity between the deceased and his administrator and beneficiaries, and that the action by the administrator is a new and independent action, given by the statute, not connected with, nor dependent upon, the right of action of the deceased. This contention is not tenable. The statute must be construed in connection with the common law as it existed at and before its passage. While at common law the party injured by the negligence of another had a right of action against such party for damages, such right of action does not survive, but abates at his death. The effect of the statute is to pick up this abated right of action of the deceased, and permit it to be prosecuted by the administrator, for the benefit of the next of kin. It is not a new right of action that is prosecuted by the administrator, but it is the same right of action which the deceased had until his death. Upon the death of the injured party, the right of action, by the force of the statute, passes by succession to the administrator for the benefit of the next of kin. This succession more clearly appears when considered with reference to the defendant. By his wrongful act he caused an injury which caused a pecuniary loss to both the injured party and to his next of kin. The right of action to recover damages in respect to such act rests in the injured party alone so long as he lives, and should he be compensated in his lifetime no action can be maintained by his administrator or next of kin for damages, even though it should be clear that the next of kin sustained a great pecuniary loss by reason of the wrongful act. In such cases the pecuniary loss sustained by the next of kin is deemed compensated by the increase of the estate of the deceased. Should the defendant fail to make compensation to the injured party during his lifetime, the liability to make compensation for the pecuniary injury resulting from the wrongful act, instead of abating as at common law, is, by force of the statute, kept alive; and the administrator succeeds to the right to bring an action upon such liability to recover damages in the nature of compensation, for the pecuniary loss sustained by the next of kin by reason of such wrongful act.

The liability of the defendant to the party injured, and the liability over to the administrator for the benefit of the next of kin, is for the same wrongful act, and is the same liability; and such liability does not exist in favor of the injured party and his next of kin at the same time, but in succession. There is no new liability created by the statute upon death of the injured party, but the right of succession in the administrator to recover upon the liability already existing is created. So that, when viewed from the standpoint of either the administrator or of the party causing the injury by his wrongful act, there is succession in the right of recovery, which succession is created by force of the statute. And, where there is succession in rights, there is privity between the parties. It therefore follows that the administrator and the beneficiaries stand in privity with the deceased, and that such damages as may be recovered by the administrator are part and parcel of the damages which the deceased had a right to recover during his lifetime. This being so, the administrator, in his action in behalf of the beneficiaries, is bound by the acts and words of the deceased. Whatever he did or said while in his right mind tending to show that the injury was caused by his own fault, neglect, or carelessness is competent evidence against the plaintiff, and in behalf of the defendant. The evidence offered by the railway company, and rejected by the court, was competent and material, and its rejection was prejudicial. The circuit court was right in reversing the judgment and remanding the cause for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

McNAIRY COUNTY, Appl.,

v.

Ellen McCOIN et al.

(.....Tenn.....)

An action by a county for indemnity out of the funds belonging to a lunatic may be brought against the lunatic and her guardian, when, by the latter's neglect, the county has been compelled to provide for her as a pauper.

(May 7, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for McNairy County sustaining a demurrer to the bill in a suit brought to recover compensation for supplies furnished to defendant McCoin who was a lunatic. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wood & Barnhill, for appellant:

The ward or her guardian is liable as upon an implied contract for necessities furnished to an insane ward.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 185, note 2;

NOTE.—As to liability to reimburse county for support furnished to supposed pauper, see also Albany v. McNamara (N. Y.) 6 L. R. A. 212.

41 L. R. A.

Bishop, Contr. § 85; Sawyer v. Lufkin, 56 Me. 308; Reando v. Misplay, 80 Mo. 251, 59 Am. Rep. 13; Nichol v. Steger, 6 Lea, 393.

The McNairy County Asylum for the poor is not purely and exclusively a charity. Shannon's Code, § 2692, subsec. 1, 2.

But however that may be, a county may recover of a guardian of a lunatic ward for necessities furnished and supplied to such ward as an inmate of its poorhouse, or may recover of the ward's estate, and that upon an implied contract.

Goodale v. Lawrence, 88 N. Y. 513, 42 Am. Rep. 259; Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 203; Templeton v. Stratton, 128 Mass. 137; Arlington v. Lyons, 131 Mass. 328; Werte v. Blair County, 66 Pa. 18; Jasper County v. Osborn, 59 Iowa, 203; McCook County v. Kammos, 7 S. D. 558, 31 L. R. A. 461; Howard v. Whetstone Twp. 10 Ohio, 365; Springfield Twp. v. Demott, 13 Ohio, 104; Ashland County Comrs. v. Richland County Infirmary, 7 Ohio St. 65, 70 Am. Dec. 49; Muskingum County Infirmary v. Toledo, 15 Ohio St. 409; Marion County Infirmary v. Westfield Twp. 21 Ohio St. 374; Montgomery County Comrs. v. Ristine, 124 Ind. 242, 8 L. R. A. 461.

Mr. J. C. Houston for appellee.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill was filed by McNairy county to recover the sum of $300 for the board and maintenance of a lunatic. The lunatic and her guardian are both made parties defendant. It is alleged in the bill: That some time prior to the year 1891 the said lunatic, Ellen McCoin, left the custody of her regular guardian in Hardeman county, and came to McNairy county. That she remained there for some time, in a very destitute condition,—without friends, and without means of support. That her regular guardian continued to neglect her, and that it was absolutely necessary for the preservation of her life that necessary food, clothing, and medical attention be furnished her. That under these circumstances, in June, 1891, she was admitted by the commissioners of the McNairy county asylum for the poor as an inmate. The authorities of McNairy county at that time were not aware that the lunatic had a guardian in Hardeman county, or that he had any funds in his hands belonging to his ward. The county first became apprised of these facts in 1896, and thereupon made demand of said guardian for compensation for the expense incurred in the board and maintenance of said lunatic. The guardian declined to make compensation, or to remove her, and she is still an inmate of said institution. It is charged that said guardian has in hands the sum of $560, funds belonging to said lunatic ward, and the bill prays that an order be made on him for the payment of said account out of said funds. A demurrer was interposed on behalf of the guardian and his ward, assigning as grounds thereof: First, that said lunatic ward had been admitted to said asylum without a contract, either express or implied, with the guardian of said ward; second, because said county asylum is a charitable institution, and said necessities were furnished said lunatic gratuitously, and constitute no charge against her or her said guardian. The chancellor sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the bill. The county of McNairy appealed, and has assigned errors.

It is insisted in support of the action of the chancellor that, the county asylum of McNairy county having been established under the general laws of the state, the court will take judicial notice that it is purely a charitable or eleemosynary institution, with no authority of law for charging inmates for accommodations furnished them. It is said, moreover, that there was no contract in this case, either express or implied, and, the accommodations having been furnished voluntarily, the county cannot recover; and the principle is invoked that, if services are rendered gratuitously, compensation cannot afterwards be claimed. It appears from the record that the McNairy county asylum was established in pursuance of the statute, which provides, viz.: "There shall be provided at the expense of every county of the state, an asylum for the poor thereof, consisting of a parcel of land of such size and of buildings thereon of such dimensions and construction as the county court may consider necessary and proper, a majority of the justices being present." Shannon's Code, § 2678. "The commissioners shall examine all applicants for admission into the asylum, and admit or reject any applicant as they may think right," etc. Id. § 2690. "No person shall be admitted into the asylum who has not been an inhabitant of the county by actual residence in it for one whole year next preceding his application." Id. § 2691. "In the management of the asylum, the commissioners shall have power, viz.: (1) To prescribe rules and regulations for the management of the farm and for the treatment of the inmates of the asylum and modify and change them at pleasure. (2) To prescribe the manner in which said inmates shall live, sleep, be clothed and labor, if any of them are able to labor." It will be observed that in the sections quoted, which are the only provisions of the statute relating to this subject, there is no express authority for the commissioners to demand compensation for the care and treatment of paupers, but the institution is established as a charity, for the benefit of those who are incapable of taking care of themselves. It is insisted, however, that the lunatic ward and her guardian are liable for necessities furnished one who at the time was not a pauper, but had simply been neglected by her guardian. Mr. Bishop, in his work on Contracts (§ 232), lays down the general rule on this subject, viz.: "In any case of insanity, one who, whether by formal agreement with the insane person or not, in good faith furnishes him with 'necessaries'—being things required for his sustenance or comfort, and suitable to his means, condition, and habits of life,—can, if he is not otherwise supplied, recover of him, on a promise which the law will imply, what they are reasonably worth. Were the law 'not so, the insane might perish.' Even expenditures and services for the protection of his estate may be included in this class." But while stating this general principle, applicable to individuals who have furnished necessities to the insane, the author lays down a wholly different rule in cases where the benefit has been conferred by the county. "If a statute," says the author, "has imposed on a town or county the duty of rendering support to paupers, . . . after it has furnished the support in a particular instance, thus discharging its own obligation, it can recover therefor nothing of any other body or person. The common illustration is where the pauper is found afterward in possession of property, or his estate is so, upon his death; and it is held that, in the absence of fraud, there is no implied promise whereon to base an action for pay. Another form of reasoning, tending to the same result, is to regard the relief as an executed gift; which, therefore, cannot be reclaimed." Bishop, Contr. § 209. We fail to perceive any sound reason for the distinction taken between the two cases. In the case of Goodale v. Lawrence, 88 N. Y. 513, 42 Am. Rep. 259, it was insisted by counsel that, while an action may be maintained by a citizen for supplies furnished to a wife under such circumstances, no such action can be maintained by overseers of the poor. Said Justice Tracy: "No good reason can be assigned for such a distinction. If a citizen who volunteers to assist a wife abandoned by her husband may maintain an action at common law upon the implied assumpsit of the husband, a fortiori may the poor authorities who, in furnishing such assistance, are not volunteers, but act in the discharge of a duty imposed by law." Again, in Rumney v. Keyes, 7 N. H. 576, it was held that where a wife, who lived separate from her husband, had become poor, and unable to maintain herself, and was assisted by the town, the town could maintain an action at common law to recover of the husband the amount of the expenditure on her account. Said Upham, J.: "No reason can be assigned why an individual should be holden liable at common law for all necessary supplies furnished by any citizen to his suffering wife or child, arising from his neglect to make such provision, while the town, whose special duty it is to grant such relief, should be debarred from such remedy." In the case first cited (Goodale v. Lawrence) it was held that, where a husband refused to support his wife, he neglects a duty imposed by the common law, and incurs a common-law liability to anyone who furnishes her a necessary support.

The duty imposed by the common law upon the guardian to maintain and support his ward is no less obligatory than that imposed upon the husband to support his wife; and if the guardian, with means of the ward at his disposal, breaches his duty, and permits his ward to become a charge upon the county, it should be reimbursed for expenses incurred in supplying necessities to said ward. It is true, the county asylum established under the laws of this state is a charitable institution. It was designed for the care and maintenance of indigent paupers, and not for the benefit of those who have means sufficient to support themselves. If, therefore, it appears that the county, through the neglect of the guardian, has been compelled to provide for one who was not a pauper, it would seem but just that the county should be indemnified out of the funds belonging to the ward; and to this effect is the great weight of authority. Goodale v. Lawrence, 88 N. Y. 513, 42 Am. Rep. 259; Monson v. Williams, 6 Gray, 416; Rumney v. Keyes, 7 N. H. 576; Alna v. Plummer, 4 Me. 258; Charlestown v. Groveland, 15 Gray, 15; 41 L. B. A.

Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 203; Templeton v. Stratton, 128 Mass. 137; Arlington v. Lyons, 181 Mass. 328; Werts v. Blair County, 66 Pa. 18; Jasper County v. Osborn, 59 Iowa, 208; McCook County v. Kammos, 7 S. D. 558, 31 L. R. A. 461. In the last case it appeared there was a statute of South Dakota imposing upon children the duty to support indigent parents, but no provision was made for enforcing same. Said the court: "The duty [under the statute] rests upon the child, but in consequence of his neglect, the statute humanely requires the county to provide such support. The county does not act officiously, but under the coercion of the law, and supplies the support which the son or daughter was under obligation [by statute] to supply. The duty to support being by law put upon the child, he is liable upon the same principles that the father is liable at common law for necessary support furnished to a destitute minor child, whom it is his duty to provide for. If, under such circumstances, the county, under the direction of the law, furnishes necessities to the indigent and helpless father, we think, upon principle, it ought to and may recover therefor against the children whose duty it was to furnish the same, but who neglected and refused so to do." See also Howard v. Whetstone Twp., 10 Ohio, 365; Springfield Twp. v. Demott, 13 Ohio, 104; Ashland County Comrs. v. Richland County Infirmary, 7 Ohio St. 65, 70 Am. Dec. 49; Muskingum County Infirmary v. Toledo, 15 Ohio St. 409; Marion County Infirmary v. Westfield Twp., 21 Ohio St. 374, 375; Bangor v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 585; Dakota v. Winneconne, 55 Wis. 522; Chester County Directors of Poor v. Malan, 64 Pa. 144; Turner v. Hadden, 62 Barb. 480; 2 Kent, Com. 148. The case of Montgomery County Comrs. v. Ristine, 124 Ind. 242, 8 L. R. A. 461, decided by the supreme court of Indiana, and holding a contrary view, is out of line with the current of authority, and was decided, moreover, by a divided court.

The decree of the chancellor, sustaining the demurrer, is reversed, and the cause will be remanded for an answer. The county of McNairy will pay the costs of the appeal.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the First Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1898, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Police power.

A statute prohibiting the deposit of sawdust in a lake or tributary thereto is held to be a valid exercise of the police power, although it does not apply to other lakes or rivers in the state. (N. H.) 177.

Sunday law.

A statute making baseball playing on Sunday an offense is held constitutional. (Ohio) 854.

Nuisances.

An equitable action by a city to compel the abatement of the nuisance of a slaughterhouse is sustained, although it was not injurious to public health, where the action was authorized by the charter. (Minn.) 821.

Highways.

Electric-light poles in streets, if properly placed, are held not to constitute any injury to the rights of abutting owners, but one placed where it will do unnecessary injury and annoy the abutting owner may be removed by mandatory injunction. (Iowa) 845.

The use of a bicycle on the street with handlebars lower than 4 inches below the center of the saddle at the top is in question under an ordinance prohibiting it, and the reasonableness of the ordinance is held to be a question of fact depending on proof as to the safety of such use. (D. C.) 208.

Regulation of business.

The constitutional right to labor and enjoy the fruits thereof is held subject to the legislative power to regulate a business for the protection of the public against incapacity and ignorance, when it directly concerns the public health and welfare, as in case of the business of plumbing. But a statute allowing all members of a firm to pursue the business when one of them has a license, or all members of a corporation to do so when the manager has a license, is held void for lack of equality. (Ohio) 689.

The practice of Christian Science is held not to be the practice of medicine or surgery within the meaning of those terms in a statute. (R. I.) 428.

A statute requiring physicians, though previously practising medicine under a license obtained by law, to obtain a new certificate and license, and submit to investigation the validity of the former license and their fitness to practise medicine, is held valid. (Ind.) 212.
41 L. R. A.

The Indiana statute fixing the rate of fare on street railroads in cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants according to the census of 1890 is held constitutional. (Ind.) 337.

Patent-right sales.

Restrictions on sales of patent rights by a statute requiring a copy of the patent to be filed with an affidavit of its validity, and also that any obligation of a vendee for such a right shall include the words "given for a patent right," is sustained as a valid police regulation. (Kan.) 549.

Eminent domain.

An electric passenger railway on a country road is held to constitute an additional burden. (Wis.) 575.

The destruction of property to prevent imminent public danger is held not to be a taking by eminent domain, but rather an exercise of the police power. (Vt.) 566.

The overflow of lands caused by a dam raising the water of a stream above high-water mark to improve its navigation is held to be a taking of property which entitles the owner to compensation. (Minn.) 871.

Confiscation.

An ordinance making it unlawful for the owner of a dead carcass to remove it, but requiring him to pay more than its value as a fee for its removal by a public contractor, is held unconstitutional as an indirect confiscation of the property. (Ky.) 219.

Taxes.

Nonresident trustees are held not to be taxable on property held by them outside of the state, although a statute provides for assessing trustees at the place where the beneficiary is an inhabitant. (Me.) 475.

On the ground that the right to take property by devise or descent is purely statutory, it is held that the Illinois act for taxing inheritances, etc., is constitutional, although it makes different classes of decedents, exempting some and making different rates for other classes. (Ill.) 447.
865

The remission or abatement of the taxes of insane, infirm, or indigent persons is held to be in violation of a constitutional provision for the taxation of all property not expressly exempted by the laws of the United States, or under the Constitution, in proportion to value. (Utah) 407.

A corporation engaged in buying, slaughtering, and selling sheep and lambs is held not engaged in manufacturing, within the meaning of a tax law, although it prepares and sells the animals as refrigerated mutton, rendered tallow, pulled wool, untanned hides, and also as fertilizer made from the offal, including the blood and legs. (N. Y.) 228.

Interstate commerce.

The purchase of a frame for a portrait in accordance with an option included in an order for the making of the portrait in another state is held to be a mere incident of the interstate order, and not within a statute against peddling. (S. C.) 501.

A state statute does not interfere with interstate commerce by providing that a carrier taking goods for transportation beyond its own line shall be liable for the whole distance in the absence of a written contract to the contrary, and even in case of such contract shall have the burden of proving that loss did not occur on its own line. (Va.) 511.

The requirement by state statute of equal, but separate, accommodations for white and colored persons on railroads, is held valid as applied to interstate commerce. (Tenn.) 432.

Public funds.

An injunction against the payment of a state warrant issued for the purchase of the site of an insane asylum at a place other than the seat of government, in violation of the Oregon Constitution, is sustained with disapproval of some of the language in a prior case, and the right of the state in its sovereign capacity to prevent the misapplication of the funds is upheld, without any showing of special injury to the state. (Or.) 692.

Courts.

A judge owning real estate in a city is held disqualified to sit in a suit contesting the validity of a contract to issue a large amount of city bonds which would require a special tax on the real property of the city for forty years. (Cal.) 762.

A statute depriving the justices of the peace of a single town of jurisdiction in criminal cases is held to be a violation of the constitutional provisions for the election of such officers. (N. Y.) 838.

An action by a white man against an Indian who belongs to a tribe and a reservation is held to be within the jurisdiction of a state court. (Wis.) 419.

Militia.

The decision of a board of examiners as to the qualifications and competency of a militia officer is held beyond the power of the court to review on a writ of error. (Mass.) 879.

Elections.

A case of first impression under the Missouri corrupt practices act holds that payments and promises to induce the withdrawal of a candidate and the indorsement by his party of another candidate do not constitute bribery of voters, although the fusion candidate thereby receives additional votes. (Mo.) 297.
41 L. R. A.

The ousting of a person from office under a corrupt practices act is held not to be a punishment, and therefore not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to the legislature the power to disqualify a person from office on account of conviction of an infamous crime. (Ohio) 291.

Primary elections.

The first decision as to the constitutionality of a statute providing for primary elections is probably that in which the California statute is held unconstitutional because it attempts to change the constitutional qualifications of voters. Such primary elections are held to be elections authorized by law within the meaning of the constitutional provision defining the qualifications of electors. (Cal.) 196.

Civil service.

The civil service law of Illinois receives very extensive discussion, and is held constitutional, while an ordinance attempting to change certain subordinate officers to the exempt class is held void. (Ill.) 775.

Officers; women.

A woman is held to be ineligible to the office of notary public under constitutional provisions which require an officer to be an elector, and that an elector must be a male citizen. (Ohio) 727.

Grand and petit juries.

Changes in the number of grand jurors, and in the number necessary to agree on a verdict by a petit jury, are held to be matters of remedy which do not constitute an ex post facto law. (La.) 718.

Schools.

The suspension of children from a public school is held proper, although they had not violated the rules, when their father or mother had entered the school during the school hours and used offensive and insulting language to the teacher. (Ga.) 593.

The exclusion of women from the principalship of boys' grammar schools or mixed or combined schools is held to be within the discretion of a board of education having power to prescribe qualifications of teachers and classify or grade them. The constitutional provision making women eligible to "any office of control or management under the school laws" is held inapplicable to teachers. (Pa.) 493.

Local self-government.

The right of local self-government is held to be a constitutional right which is infringed by a legislative attempt to interfere with the management of a fire department by authorizing the governor to appoint commissioners. (Neb.) 624.

City waterworks.

The right of a city to lease or otherwise transfer its waterworks is denied, where no special authority to do so had been given, although it was authorized in general terms to lease or transfer real and personal property for its benefit. (Utah) 805.

Water supply.

Discrimination between consumers, by a water company, in the rates charged, is held to be unlawful. (N. C.) 240.

Lighting railroad track.

An ordinance requiring a railroad company to light a track which it uses at certain street crossings, although the company does not own or lease the road, is sustained, notwithstanding it requires the use of electric lights which are subject to a patent and to the monopoly of an electric-light company in that place, as the municipality has power to prevent extortion in the prices. (Ohio) 422.

Railroad viaducts.

As an exercise of the police power it is held that railroads may be compelled to maintain and repair viaducts on which their roads cross the streets of a city. (Neb.) 481.

Compelling operation of franchise.

The duty of a street-railway company to continue to operate its road is held enforceable by mandamus. (Wash.) 515.

Pauper's support.

A county that has been obliged to support a lunatic as a pauper because of the guardian's neglect is allowed to bring an action for reimbursement on the finding that the guardian has funds in his hands. (Tenn.) 862.

Validating void judgment.

A statute attempting to validate void judgments rendered without jurisdiction is held to be beyond the law-making power. (Utah) 504.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Validity.

An agreement to pay a rebate on purchases at a certain time, upon condition that the purchaser shall have bought exclusively of the seller up to that time, is held to make the condition such an integral part of the contract that the performance of the condition, unless waived or excused, is necessary to the enforcement of the contract for the rebate, even if it involved an invalid contract for a monopoly, since the condition is the sole consideration of the promise, and, if that is illegal, the promise falls with it. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 609.

A contract by officers of different corporations not to engage for five years in any business to compete with that of a new company, to which the old corporations sold their business, is sustained. (Mass.) 189.

But an agreement by the seller of a business not to engage for twenty-five years in the same business, in the state or in the United States, is held void as a general restraint of trade. (Ohio) 185.

ChamPERTY.

ChamPERTY is held in an elaborate discussion by the court of appeals of the District of Columbia to be illegal independent of statute, and to have been so at common law prior to any English statute on the subject. (D. C.) 520.

Lease.

The partial destruction of a building is held to be within the provisions of a statute that a lessee's agreement to repair does not require the restoration of buildings destroyed by fire or other casualty. (Ky.) 792.

Banks.

A depositor keeping a rubber stamp which will make a fac simile of his signature is held not for that reason liable for the loss occasioned by payment of his deposit on checks forged by the use of such stamp, in the absence of his negligence. (Pa.) 695.

Negotiable paper.

An unrestricted guaranty of payment indorsed on a negotiable instrument is held to be negotiable, passing with the instrument. (Kan.) 175.

A condition on the delivery of a note to a payee or his agent that another person must sign before the note will be operative is held invalid. (Mo.) 823.

The general rule that the drawee of a check or bill of exchange is held to know the signature of the drawer, and makes payment at his own peril, is sustained except so far as it is modified by local custom. (Ohio) 584.

The doctrine of contributory negligence is denied application to the payee of unindorsed checks who does not use sufficient care to prevent a clerk, whom he might have known to be dishonest, from putting them in circulation on forged indorsements. (Mass.) 617.

Carriers.

Mere blindness of a person is held not to justify his rejection as a railroad passenger. (Miss.) 335.

A person having a ticket, and who crosses a track from a station to a platform where passengers are accustomed to take trains, is held to be a passenger under the Massachusetts statute. (Mass.) 198.

Samples of merchandise are held not to be baggage within the meaning of a statute regulating charges on excessive baggage. (Ark.) 838.

Insurance.

A statute making any application, constitution, or by-laws referred to in an insurance policy inadmissible in evidence unless a copy thereof accompanies the policy is held inapplicable to an accident policy. (C. C. App. 3d C.) 194.

A standard guaranty to maintain 80 per cent insurance, stamped on a policy, is held not to supersede a clause avoiding the policy for additional insurance. (Conn.) 159.

An insurance policy allowing the use of wood for a steam engine running a threshing machine only to start or kindle the fire is held not to authorize the use of wood to run the machine for a half hour or so entirely on wood and then use wood together with a small quantity of coal. (Wis.) 316.

The levy of attachments and executions on property is held not to make a policy of insurance void, when it provides that it shall be void for a change of title, interest, or possession, except change of occupants without increase of hazard. (Tenn.) 700.

The total destruction of a building which was insured only against such destruction is held to give no right of recovery when the foundation and the four walls remain substantially intact and the building could be repaired for little more than one third its value. (N. Y.) 818.

Riding on a railroad locomotive by invitation of an officer of the road is held not to preclude a person from being held a passenger within the clause of an accident policy doubling the insurance for injury to passengers on railroad conveyances. (Cal.) 467.

Insurance obtained by an insolvent without paying the premium except by giving a worthless check is held to be free from any claim of his creditors as against the persons to whom the policy is payable. (Tenn.) 275.

The presumption against suicide is held insufficient to sustain an action for insurance, where a man was found in a cistern with an opening 15x20 inches. (Wis.) 587.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

The license of a foreign insurance company is held properly revoked for failure to pay full license fees in past years. (Wis.) 557.

The right of a creditor of a corporation to sue stockholders is held to be merged in a decree obtained in another state for the payment of assessments by such stockholders to a receiver. (Md.) 867.

Building and loan associations.

A statute making valid all contracts of a building and loan association so far as the defense of usury is concerned, passed because the charter authorizing such contracts was of doubtful validity, is held constitutional, although retroactive. (Va.) 589.

See also supra, I., as to validating void judgments.

Partnership.

A penalty for wilfully and knowingly cutting trees is held not to apply to a partner for the acts of his copartner, done without his consent or knowledge. (Ala.) 650.

Tolls.

A right to take toll for a bicycle is denied under a charter authorizing toll to be collected from every carriage drawn by one or more beasts, and providing that any person driving any carriage of burden or pleasure might be stopped when attempting to pass without paying the toll specified. (N. J.) 457.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

The annulment of a marriage because the husband is constitutionally afflicted with syphilis and in a state in which his chances of cure are very remote and doubtful may be granted, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 11, on the ground of fraud, where, with knowledge of his condition, he did not inform his wife in regard to it, and she, learning of it on the day of the marriage soon after the ceremony, refused to live with him as his wife, and filed the libel for annulling the marriage before its consummation. (Mass.) 800.

The communication of syphilis to a wife by her husband, who has the disease in the tertiary stage and is probably incurable, whereby she is kept in a constant state of suffering, is a ground for a divorce under 1 Pepper & L. Dig. p. 1638, pl. 11, allowing a divorce for cruel and barbarous treatment endangering the wife's life or rendering her condition intolerable and life burdensome. (Pa.) 802.

A business partnership between husband and wife is held invalid under a statute making her liable for her debts contracted in her own name as well as for her torts in which the husband did not participate. (Me.) 363.

A division of property between persons who have lived together as husband and wife is held to be within the power of the court on decreeing the nullity of a marriage because of a prior existing marriage of one of the parties, when the action is for a divorce. (Kan.) 849.

A stepfather is held not to be a parent under a statute giving a right of action for death, although the children were dependent upon him and he had no other children. (Ga.) 211.

The regularity, legality, or sufficiency of proceedings by which a child is committed to an industrial school is held not to be open to question on habeas corpus instituted by a parent, if the detention is manifestly for the welfare of the child. (Tenn.) 284.

The unborn heirs of a person against whose estate an action is brought to establish claims are held bound by the decree, if the living heirs of the same class were parties to the action. (Va.) 708.

V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.

A person is held not to be disqualified for executor by reason of a disputed indebtedness to the estate, where the statutes expressly specify grounds of unfitness among which this is not included. (Ala.) 154.

An administrator de bonis non, who at common law has the right to receive intestate property which exists in specie, unchanged and unconverted in the hands of a third person who has no right to it, is held to have, in Connecticut, the right to intestate property wanted for distribution, even if it has been technically "administered." (Conn.) 204.

A provision in a will for the removal of a trustee and the appointment of another by the beneficiary, without the aid of the courts, for what he may deem good and sufficient cause, is upheld; but it is held that it must not be exercised wantonly and capriciously or arbitrarily, and its exercise may be reviewed by a court of equity. (D. C. App.) 787.

Creditors of an insolvent who join with him in his deed of trust for their benefit are held not to be liable for goods purchased by the trustee in carrying on the business under the trust. (N. D.) 252.

The adoption by receivers of a street railway company of metal safes to be carried by conductors for receiving fares, into which passengers are required to deposit their fares while the conductor registers them, is held to be a detail of management within the discretion of the receivers which the court will not control. (Mich.) 817.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Penalty.

The refusal of a waiter in an eating house to wait upon a colored patron is held to make the proprietor liable to a statutory penalty, even if he did not aid or abet the waiter in his action. (Wis.) 658.

Civil liability for a penalty is denied in case of a railroad company where its conductor received unlawful rates of fare without the carrier's authorization or approval. (W. Va.) 689.

See also supra, III., as to partner.

Death of child.

A right of action by parents for the death of a minor child, causing them the loss of his services, is held not sustainable at common law. (Tex.) 807.

The right of action of the mother of a child whose father is dead to recover for the wrongful death of the child is held unaffected by the fact of her remarriage and the stepfather's assumption of parental obligations toward the child. (Mo.) 385.

Negligence as to fire.

A person who lies down on hay or straw in a barn and goes to sleep with a lighted pipe in his mouth is held liable for negligence and the consequent loss of the buildings of another person to which the fire is communicated from the barn which he sets on fire. (Mich.) 381.

Negligence in permitting oil to stand on a station platform in violation of statute and when the platform has become saturated is held not to be the proximate cause of loss by a fire set by the careless dropping of a match by a man who comes there in his own right to deliver goods. (Mass.) 794.

As to electricity.

A telephone lineman is held negligent in touching a span wire in contact with a trolley wire, an insulator of which was broken, when he had failed to test the insulator and knew that there was no other person except the linemen to make such tests. (Wash.) 410.

As to logs floating.

Damages to riparian owners by logs floated in a reasonably careful manner are held to give no right of action. (Minn.) 494.

As to elevator.

The insufficiency of a railing at the shaft of a freight elevator is held not to make the owner liable for failing to comply with the statute, in case an injury occurs because a third person, in using the elevator, has left the railing out of place and the shaft unguarded. (N. Y.) 487.

As to staging.

For the fall of an additional staging erected by a builder's employee on the main staging in a building, at the request of an employee of a manufacturer of ornamental work who had come to put up such work made on the builder's order, is held not to make the manufacturer liable to such employee, who was told that the builder would see to the staging, although he was assured that it would be entirely safe. (Conn.) 200.

A gratuitous lender of brackets for use in a staging is held not to be liable for an injury to a servant of the borrower, caused by a defect in the brackets of which the lender did not know, even if he ought to have known thereof. (N. H.) 889.

As to highway.

The purchaser of a street railway so constructed as to make a street defective is held liable for resulting injury to a traveler, although he had left the railway company in possession under an option to purchase, but without any agreement to remedy the defects. (Wis.) 287.

The duty of the owner to keep in repair a grate in a sidewalk in front of his premises is held to continue, notwithstanding his lease of a part of the adjacent building to a tenant who has the exclusive right to use the grate. (N. Y.) 554.

Landlord's liability.

A landlord is held liable to his tenant for dangers of which the former did not know if he might have known of them by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. (Tenn.) 278.

Injury to passenger.

An experienced traveler who, in attempting to enter the closet of a sleeping car about 6 o'clock in the morning, when it is passing through a tunnel and the car is dark, by mistake steps out of the vestibule and falls on the track, is held guilty of negligence which precludes his recovering against the carrier. (N. Y.) 724.

A passenger attempting to enter a car of a mixed train at a distance from the station is held to have no remedy for injury caused by the sudden jolting of the car in coupling while the train was being made up. (N. Y.) 490.

Injury to trespasser.

The liability of the owner of premises for injury to a child who was trespassing thereon, by a wire projecting from the shaft of machinery, is denied, although children sometimes went there to play, and tramps resorted to the spot. (N. D.) 677.

The liability for injury to a child playing on a turntable is denied in a New Jersey case, where the turntable was on the owner's own premises. (N. J.) 831.

Injury to servant.

The want of self couplers for freight cars is held to be negligence per se on the part of a railroad company. (N. C.) 399.

The employment of a boy seventeen or eighteen years old to manage the brake controlling the passenger cage connecting with a mine is held not to be negligence toward a coemployee, where the boy appeared competent for the place; and the fact that, after operating the machinery correctly for seven months, he turned it on one occasion the wrong way is not, in itself, sufficient to show that he was incompetent, or that the master was liable for the accident. (Mich.) 88.

Independent contractors.

Negligence of an independent contractor in blasting while excavating preparatory to building is held not chargeable to his employer so as to make him liable for injuries to a building on adjoining premises. (N. Y.) 891.

Imputed negligence.

The doctrine of imputed negligence as applied to children is repudiated in an extensive opinion. (Ind.) 798.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.

The right to cross the unimproved land of a person to reach a public pond, for the purpose of cutting and carrying away ice, is held not to exist under an ancient ordinance giving the right to fish and fowl there and to pass and repass on foot for that purpose. (Mass.) 268.

Water rights.

The appropriation of more water than is needed for the beneficial use intended is held ineffectual to prevent the subsequent appropriation of the excess by other parties to a beneficial use. (Utah) 311.

The discharge of mineral water from an artesian well after its use in a bath house by persons afflicted with infectious, syphilitic, or other similar disorders by carrying it to a stream which constitutes the only available drainage unless a sewer is built for more than a mile to a river which would cost from $3,500 to $4,000, besides the cost of purchasing the right of way, is held lawful. (Ind.) 787.

Copyright.

The lease of reference books of a mercantile agency to subscribers to be returned when the subscription expires is held to be a publication which will defeat a common-law copyright. (N. Y.) 846.

Trademark.

A trademark used by the seller of shoes, which indicates that they are made at a place where they are not made, and which is adopted by him to get the benefit of the reputation of shoes made at that place, is held to be so deceptive and misleading that it will not be protected in equity. (Ga.) 470.

The use of the name "Minneapolis" or "Minnesota" on flour made in Milwaukee from wheat of a different grade than that used by Minneapolis millers is held to be a wrong which the Minneapolis millers may prevent by injunction. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 162.

Tradename and goodwill.

A school carried on by the widow and children of a man who formerly conducted it, and which is claimed to be the successor of a school established nearly a century before by one of his ancestors, is held lawful as against another member of the same family who conducts a school under the family name in another part of the state. (N. C.) 243.

Gift.

Delivery of a deposit book with intent to give the deposits represented thereby is held a sufficient delivery of deposits in a savings bank, without any assignment or transfer in writing. (Ohio) 858.

41 L. R. A.

Husband's estate.

The right of a husband to use and rent his wife's real estate existing under statutes in force at the time of the marriage and the acquisition of the property is held vested and beyond the power of the legislature to take away. (Ky.) 853.

Deed to defraud wife.

A secret unrecorded deed made on the eve of marriage to prevent a homestead right of the wife from vesting in the land is held fraudulent, although such right, if vested, might have been defeated by the husband's removal from the premises. (N. D.) 258.

Assignment for creditors.

The preference of an usurious debt in an assignment for the benefit of creditors is held to make the assignment void. (Miss.) 707.

Homestead of infants.

A sale of a homestead descended to infants by order of the probate court is held to be allowable for their benefit under constitutional provision giving them an interest in the rents and profits during their minority and vesting in them the entire estate on the death of both parents. (Ark.) 714.

Trusts.

The right of the author of a trust to make the interest of the beneficiary unassignable and free from subjection to claims of his creditors is sustained. (Cal.) 544.

A person creating a trust, reserving a life interest, is denied the power to keep such interest free from the claims of subsequent creditors, and a statute prohibiting the beneficiary of a trust for the profits of lands is held inapplicable to a trust for the benefit of the grantor. (N. Y.) 895.

Wills.

The effect of failing to provide for children in a will is held, under Michigan statutes, to be that in case of afterborn children the intent must appear from the will itself in order to prevent them from taking as in case of intestacy, but as to the children previously born the intent need not appear from the will itself. (Mich.) 820.

Lien of judgment.

On setting aside a mere money judgment, it is held that the statutory lien cannot be continued so as to attach again to the judgment finally rendered. (Neb.) 222.

Subrogation to tax lien.

A sheriff's claim of subrogation to a tax lien as against a prior mortgagee to whom the premises had been conveyed absolutely in part payment of the debt, which was more than the value of the property, is denied, where he had accounted for, but failed to collect, the taxes, when there was personal property out of which he might have collected them. (Ky.) 851.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.

The effect of contributory negligence on a right of action accruing in another state is held to depend on the law of the place of injury, and not of the forum. (Ky.) 614.

The taking of the testimony of the plaintiff at her own home against defendant's objection is held, at most, an irregularity which would not defeat the judgment, where the judge and jury were present when the evidence was taken. (Wis.) 568.

Evidence.

An attempt to procure false testimony or to corrupt jurors is held provable to raise a presumption against the guilty party. (Pa.) 805.

Evidence of what a person said after receiving injuries that resulted in his death, tending to show that it was due to his own fault, is held admissible in an action by his administrator. (Ohio) 860.

A family record in a Bible is held incompetent proof of the age of a person, when the entries do not appear to have been made contemporaneously with the facts recorded, and there is no proof as to when or by whom they were written, or of the writer's knowledge of the facts, or that the persons named therein ever acknowledged that the record was authentic. (N. J.) 449.

An indorsement on a certificate of deposit directing payment to the order of a certain person for account of the indorser is held to be a restrictive indorsement which cannot be varied by parol evidence. (Neb.) 439.

Presumptions.

The presumption of negligence on the part of a carrier is held authorized when a passenger is injured through some defect in the carrier's appliances or by some act or omission of a carrier's servant, which might have been prevented by a high degree of care. (Me.) 836.

A presumption of negligence is held inadmissible when an injury is shown without anything to show what caused it, as in case of a person who was found unconscious in a tunnel on a mimic railway run for amusement, without anything to show how he left the car. (Md.) 478.

Damages.

The damages for mining coal when done by a tenant in good faith but without right are held to be the value of the coal in place. (Ohio) 681.

Only nominal damages are held allowable to a railroad company for telegraph poles and wires along its right of way, when they do not interfere with the use of the railroad right of way. (Tenn.) 408.

Application of payments.

A payment of bonds by a railroad contractor to a subcontractor is applied pro rata to the lienable and nonlienable expenditures under the subcontract. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 458.

Ejectment.

Ejectment for the possession of land dedicated for use as a street is held maintainable by a city, although it does not own the fee. (Cal.) 835.

Garnishment.

Garnishment of a debt due to a nonresident creditor who is not personally served in the state and does not voluntarily appear is held void for want of due process of law. (Ala.) 881.

Injunctions.

An injunction against prosecutions for violations of a statute or ordinance is denied, even when the constitutionality or validity of the enactments is contested. (Ga.) 772.

An injunction against a bawdy house on the ground that it is obnoxious to the community and depreciates property is denied because there is an adequate remedy under the criminal law. (Ky.) 219.

An injunction against excluding representatives from the right to vote in the supreme lodge of a benevolent society is granted, but an injunction against the exercise of the duties of the offices by persons irregularly elected is held not to be the proper remedy. (Md.) 720.

Mandamus.

Mandamus to the governor is held to be beyond the power of the courts, although it may be issued against the lieutenant governor and speaker of the assembly during a recess of the legislature. (N. Y.) 281.

Limitation of actions.

Payments made by the maker of a note are held insufficient to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations as to an indorser. (Mo.) 581.

The running of the statute of limitations in favor of a surety is held unaffected by payments made by the principal debtor or his absence from the state. (Ind.) 612.

Prohibition.

A justice of the peace attempting to exercise jurisdiction of an action under a statute which has been repealed is held to be exceeding his legitimate powers and subject to prohibition. (W. Va.) 414.

Set off.

A set-off of judgments is denied where all the property of one of the debtors, including his judgment against the other, is less than the statute exempts from seizure. (N. D.) 852.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

Absence of a judge from the courtroom in a felony case for about twenty minutes, during which the trial goes on, with a member of the bar presiding, is held fatal to the prosecution. (Miss.) 569.

Evidence.

A box of sand containing footprints made by a witness with the shoes of an accused person is held admissible on evidence that they are identical with those made in the sand of a desert, which are claimed to have been made by the accused. (Cal.) 157.

The burden of proving an alibi is held to be upon the defendant after the state has made out a prima facie case,—at least to the extent of raising a reasonable doubt of guilt. (S. D.) 530.

Coercion of jury.

A jury are deemed coerced when they agree after eighty-four hours deliberation, when they had been kept without beds or cots, part of the time in a small room, and had reason to believe that still further detention in this way would be the penalty of their failure to agree. (N. Y.) 644.

Suspension of sentence.

A suspension of sentence without conditions expressed in the judgment is held in Ohio to be subject to the power of the court at any time during the same term, acting on its own motion, to order the execution of the sentence. (Ohio) 472.

But in Illinois the indefinite suspension of a sentence without recognizance, after a plea of 41 L. R. A. guilty, is held to be such a loss of the power of the court that it cannot subsequently impose a sentence. (Ill.) 478.

Shooting.

Persons charged with shooting firearms within a town without reasonable excuse are held entitled to show that they shot at a rabbit in a corn patch and had suffered from the depredations of rabbits. (S. C.) 503.

Bigamy.

Bigamous cohabitation is held to continue so long as the parties live together ostensibly as husband and wife. (Ala.) 760.

Giving free transportation.

Giving free transportation to an official is held to be indictable under the North Carolina statute. (N. C.) 246.

Possession as a crime.

A statute making the possession of any record of any lottery drawing or a ticket an offense unless it is held for the purpose of evidence of a violation of the law is held applicable to one who had possession of such articles without knowing what they were, and the statute thus construed is held constitutional. (Md.) 551.

Fines.

The fines collected for offenses committed against the state, which are set apart for a literary fund by the Virginia Constitution, are held not to include a pecuniary forfeiture imposed upon an express company for charging greater rates than it is authorized to charge. (Va.) 436.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Alibi. See EVIDENCE.

Amusements; injunction against, by municipality 322

Buildings; injunction by municipality against nuisance of 323

Burglary; criminal liability for agent's act in 653

Cemeteries; injunctions by municipality against 323

Courts. See TRIAL.

Criminal law; criminal and penal liability for act of copartner, servant, or agent:—(I.) General rules; (II.) application to particular subjects: (a) crimes against the person; (b) forgery, burglary, larceny; (c) libel; (d) violation of revenue laws; (e) maintenance of nuisances; (f) adulteration of food products; (g) trespass in willfully cutting trees; (h) Sabbath breaking; (i) dealing with slaves; (j) gaming on licensed premises; (k) miscellaneous offenses; (III.) violation of liquor laws: (a) conflict of authority; (b) unlawful sale generally: (1) by partner; (2) by agent or servant; (c) selling without license: (1) by partner; (2) by agent or servant; (d) selling to minors: (1) by partners; (2) by agents or servants; (e) selling to habitual drunkards; (f) selling on Sunday; (g) violation of other miscellaneous provisions; (h) evidence of: (1) presumption and burden of proof; (2) admissibility; (3) sufficiency; (4) question for jury 650

Death; common-law right of action of parent for loss of services of child killed:—(I.) Rule that no action will lie: (a) different theories as to; (b) doctrine that private injury is merged in public wrong; (c) doctrine that human life is not a subject of civil damages; (d) effect when death is not instantaneous; (II.) the contrary rule; (III.) the true rule; (IV.) rule when injury consists of a breach of contract 807

Drains and sewers; injunction by municipality against nuisance of 325
Discharge of, into stream 751

Evidence; burden of proof as to master's knowledge as element of negligence 149

Burden and measure of proof of an alibi:—(I.) Proof by defendant beyond a reasonable doubt; (II.) proof by defendant by a preponderance of evidence: (a) general rules; (b) as affected by reasonable doubt on whole case; (III.) proof by defendant to raise a reasonable doubt; (IV.) proof by prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt; (a) general rule as to burden of proof; (b) measure of proof; (c) consideration of all the evidence; (d) how jury should be instructed; (V.) time covered by proof 580

Entries in family Bible or other religious book as evidence:—(I.) General rule; (II.) grounds upon which admitted; (III.) cases in which admitted: (a) in general; (b) on the testimony of the party making them; (c) on the testimony of a party to the action; (d) on the testimony of a third party; (IV.) time of entry material; (V.) necessity of production of book; (VI.) necessity of proof of handwriting; (VII.) when declarant is alive; (VIII.) when excluded; (IX.) right of jury to book in retirement 449

41 L. R. A.

Fisheries; access to waters for 268

Flood. See WATERS.

Food; criminal liability for adulteration of, by servant, agent, or partner 658

Forgery; criminal liability for agent's act in 653

Gaming; criminal liability for act of servant, agent, or partner 659

Garbage; injunction by municipality against nuisance of 324

Health; injunctions by municipality against nuisance affecting 323

Hospitals; injunction against, by local authorities 324

Injunction; against use of stream to float logs 497

By municipal corporations against nuisances affecting public morals, peace, and good order, and health and safety:—(I.) Public morals, peace, and good order: (a) intoxicating liquors; (b) public amusements; (II.) public health and safety: (a) in general; (b) burial grounds, etc.; (c) hospitals, etc.; (d) garbage, etc.; (e) sewers and drains; (f) trade or business; (g) buildings and other structures 321

Insolvency; effect of preferring an usurious debt in an assignment for creditors:—(I.) General doctrine stated; (II.) limitation of this note; (III.) deed of assignment rendered void; (IV.) preference of actual debt sustained, but usury rejected; (V.) preference of usurious debt sustained generally; (VI.) who may, and who may not, urge the usurious character of the debt preferred 707

Internal revenue; criminal or penal liability for act of agent, partner, or servant 654

Intoxicating liquors; criminal liability for act of partner, servant, or agent 650

Judgment; continuing lien of judgment opened or set aside to permit a defense:—(I.) Distinction between opening and setting aside or vacating judgment; (II.) power to continue lien on opening judgment; (III.) the Pennsylvania and Ohio rules; (IV.) effect of continuance of lien; (V.) the second or final judgment; (VI.) the final enforcement or collection 223

Larceny; criminal liability for agent's act in 653

873

Libel. See also EVIDENCE.

Criminal liability for agent's act in 658

Lights. See RAILROADS.

Logs. See WATERS.

Master and servant; knowledge as an element of an employer's liability to an injured servant:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) actual knowledge; (III.) constructive knowledge; (IV.) rule when the dangerous condition is due to the act of a stranger or of a fellow servant, or to the operation of some abnormal physical force; (V.) imputed knowledge of probable future events; (VI.) circumstances charging an employer with knowledge of the condition of his instrumentalities; (VII.) duty of active inspection of instrumentalities when first used; (VIII.) duty of active inspection of instrumentalities while in use; (IX.) employer's duty to know the character and capacity of his servants; (X.) employer's duty as to the supervision of appliances not owned by him, but used by his servants; (XI.) assignability of the duty of inspection; (XII.) employer's liability qualified by the servant's duty to acquaint himself with his environment; (XIII.) whose knowledge is imputed to the employer; (XIV.) duties of a master after learning of a danger to which his servant is exposed; (XV.) knowledge as an element of liability under statutes; (XVI.) pleading; (XVII.) burden of proof; opinions as evidence; (XVIII.) instructions 88

Criminal and penal liability for act of servant 650

Merry-go-round; injunction against, by municipality 323

Municipal corporations. See RAILROADS; WATERS.

Nuisances. See also INJUNCTION.

Criminal or penal liability for maintenance of, by servant, agent, or partner 655

Parent and child. See DEATH.

Partnership; criminal and penal liability for act of partner 650

Penalties. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Pleading; as to master's knowledge as element of liability 145

Principal and agent; criminal and penal liability for act of agent 650

Railroads; compelling roads to light their tracks in city 429

Safety; injunctions by municipality against nuisance affecting 322

Schools; right to exclude, suspend, or expel pupils from school for misconduct of pupil or parent:—(I.) Where the parent's action affects the child; (II.) for misconduct of pupil; (III.) for absence and tardiness; (IV.) for connection with secret societies; (V.) for failure to participate in certain studies and exercises; (VI.) for refusal to perform manual labor; (VII.) controlling conduct of pupil after the relation of teacher and pupil has ceased; (IX.) questions of pleading and practice 593

Slaves; criminal liability for dealing of partner, agent, or servant with 658

Sunday; criminal liability for Sabbath breaking by agent or servant 658, 670

Trespass; on banks to float logs 496
Criminal liability for act of servant, agent, or partner 657

Trial; validity of proceedings in course of a trial outside of the courtroom 563

Temporary absence of judge, when fatal to trial:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) when court consists of single judge; (III.) when courts consists of more than one judge 569

Usury. See INSOLVENCY.

Waters; statutory protection of water used for supplying municipality 177

Public right of access to water:—For fishing; for general purposes 296

Right to use stream for floating logs:—Stream floatable in natural state; what streams are floatable; necessity; artificial channel; construction of statutes; manner of use; as public highways; correlative rights of log and riparian owners; regulations; conflict with other navigation; conflicting rights of floatage; log-driving companies 371

Liability for injuries to riparian owner by running logs in stream:—Trespass on banks; flooding land; other injuries; excessive floods; contributory negligence; statutes; injunction 491

Correlative rights of upper and lower proprietors as to use and flow of water in stream:—(I.) General statement of the right; (II.) right to use; (III.) right to flow; (IV.) use for sewer; (V.) right to relief 72

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACCEPTANCE. See DEDICATION, 1; DEEDS, 3.

ACCESSION AND CONFUSION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Title by severance of part of realty. 683

ACCIDENT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE, 2, 4, 6-8.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also CORPORATIONS, 2.

1. The owner of a state or county warrant is a necessary party to a suit to enjoin its payment. State, McCain, v. Metschan (Or.) 692

2. Corporations doing business in the same city and having a common interest may unite in a suit in equity to prevent the deceptive use of the name of the city on products made elsewhere, to the damage of their business. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. v. Eagle (C. C. App. 7th C.) 162

3. Other judgment creditors who have not filed a creditors' bill are not necessary parties to such a bill. Seymour v. McAvoy (Cal.) 544

4. A bill to impeach a decree establishing claims against a decedent's estate and ordering the sale of real estate to pay them is fatally defective if the persons who purchased the land under the decree are not made parties. Harrison v. Turnbull (Va.) 708

5. There is no error in dismissing a bill as to a defaulting party, if the defense of the party who appeared went to the foundation of the right to recover upon the case stated. Id.

ADMINISTRATORS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

AFTERBORN CHILDREN. See UNBORN CHILDREN; WILLS, 2.

ALIBI. See EVIDENCE, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

AMUSEMENTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction against, by municipality. 823

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. An order appointing a receiver is appealable as a final judgment, within the meaning of L. R. A.

ing of Utah Const. art. 8, § 9, as the question whether an order is appealable depends on its effect on the rights of the parties rather than the stage of the litigation. Ogden City v. Bear Lake & R. Waterworks & Irrig. Co. (Utah) 805

2. The amount in dispute for the purpose of determining jurisdiction on appeal is that claimed in the petition, where a nonsuit is granted, although the sum allowed by the jury on a former trial was much smaller, and the action is for killing a minor whose earnings at the rate received at the time of his death would not have amounted to the sum claimed, before his majority. Hennessy v. Bavarian Brew. Co. (Mo.) 885

3. A decision that a regulation is reasonable upon its face as matter of law, without regard to the facts in proof, is subject to review, although, if the court had decided the question as it should have done, as a question of fact, there could have been no appeal. Moore v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.) 208

4. An objection that footprints made in a box of sand were not made under conditions similar to those made in a desert is not raised by a general objection to the proof of the footprints in the box, without any specific objection to the dissimilarity of the conditions. People v. Searcey (Cal.) 157

Grounds of reversal.

5. Failure to make a finding on an issue is not ground for reversal, if the finding would necessarily have been prejudicial to the appellant, and the facts found are sufficient to sustain the decree. Hague v. Nephi Irrig. Co. (Utah) 811

6. Excusing for cause some of those on the venire does not constitute available error to one who is tried by twelve qualified, competent jurors. People v. Searcey (Cal.) 157

7. It is error to suggest to a jury as a reason for agreeing, that failure to agree is "almost to confess incompetency," as personal considerations should never be permitted to influence their conclusions. People v. Sheldon (N. Y.) 644

8. A jury must be deemed coerced so that a judgment of conviction based on their verdict will be reversed, when they agreed after they had been out for eighty four hours without beds or cots, during forty of which they had been confined in a small room, and from the remarks of the court and the treatment they had received they had every reason to believe that a still longer confinement on chairs and hard benches was in store for them, while the judge had also told them after the foreman had reported that their agreement was impossible, that a failure to agree was "almost to confess incompetency." Id.

9. Allowing the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries to exhibit her actual condition to the jury by lying on a lounge, with her physician attending her, when her testimony is taken, and allowing her daughter to weep, is not ground of reversal. Selleck v. Janesville (Wis.) 563

10. Reference by the court to the "crime charged," in its instructions, will not be regarded as having misled the jury from the fact that a witness incidentally stated that accused had been arrested upon another charge than that for which he was on trial. State v. Thornton (S. D.) 580

11. The fact that there was no competent evidence to sustain a verdict for plaintiff when a motion for nonsuit was made at the close of plaintiff's evidence is immaterial, where defendant has introduced evidence which supplies the deficiency. Gagnon v. Dana (N. H.) 589

12. A question as to the competency of evidence which cannot affect the decree will not be considered on appeal, where there is ample proof, unassailed, to justify the findings and decree. Hague v. Nepht Irrig. Co. (Utah) 811

Second appeal.

13. A decision by the Kansas City court of appeals is not binding on the Missouri supreme court upon subsequent appeal to it after retrial in the circuit court. Hennessy v. Bavarian Brew. Co. (Mo.) 385

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; finality of order appointing receiver. 307

ARTESIAN WELL. See WATERS, 5.

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS.
See INSOLVENCY.

ASSUMPSIT.

One who voluntarily and knowingly deals with parties combined to monopolize trade and arbitrarily control prices cannot accept and retain the goods and have a right of action against the seller for the money paid, or any part of it, either upon the ground that the combination was illegal or that its prices were unreasonable, however urgent the need of dealing with such combination may have seemed for preservation of business interests, as such need cannot change the voluntary character of the payment. Dennehy v. McNutta (C. C. App. 7th C.) 609

ASYLUM. See STATE INSTITUTIONS.

ATTORNEYS. See CHAMPERTY, 2.

BAGGAGE. See CARRIERS, 5.

BALL PLAYING. See SUNDAY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

41 L. R. A.

BANKS. See also CHECKS, 1, 2; GIFT; TRIAL, 8.

1. A bank account kept by a person as administrator cannot be applied by the bank to the payment of a check drawn by him individually. First Nat. Bank of Belmont v. First Nat. Bank of Barnesville (Ohio) 584

2. Presentation for payment of a check by a bank which is the indorsee for collection does not justify the drawee bank in relaxing its vigilance in determining whether or not the name of the drawer is genuine. Id.

3. An indorsement for collection is notice to the drawee that the indorsee is not the owner of the paper, but only the agent of the owner authorized to receive payment for him. Id.

4. An indorsement of a check, draft, or bill of exchange, "For collection," by one other than the payee, guarantees the genuineness of the names of the indorsers, but not that of the drawer. Id.

5. The drawee of a check, draft, or bill of exchange is held to know the signature of the drawer, and makes payment in case of forgery at his own peril, unless the rule is modified by local custom. Id.

6. A depositor's procurement of a rubber stamp which will make a fac simile of his signature, of which the bank has no notice, does not, in the absence of his negligence, make him liable for the loss occasioned by payment of his deposit on forged checks made by one who had unlawfully and clandestinely obtained the stamp and used it in forging checks. Robb v. Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Life, etc. (Pa.) 695

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; duty to know signature of depositor. 585

Negligence of depositor as affecting liability of bank in case of forgery. 693

BASEBALL. See SUNDAY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BATHS. See WATERS, 5.

BAWDY HOUSE. See INJUNCTION, 7.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES. See INJUNCTION, 4, 5.

The representation of the 4,000 Maryland members in the Supreme Lodge, Order of the Golden Chain, extends, under Md. Laws 1894, chap. 295 (Md. Code, art. 23, § 148e), to eight members, as the law gives the right to as many representatives as will equal the number of times the membership is greater than the unit of representation, which is the number of members necessary to secure one representative, and the constitution of the organization gives each state one representative for the first 500 members, although it also proceeds to declare that there shall be two representatives for 1,500 and three for 4,500. Supreme Lodge Order of Golden Chain v. Simering (Md.) 790 BIBLE. See EVIDENCE, 12.

BICYCLES. See also TOLLS.

The reasonableness or unreasonableness of an ordinance or regulation prohibiting any person to ride on the streets a bicycle having handlebars of which the lower end is on a plane more than 4 inches below the top of the saddle at its center is more or less a question of fact depending on the proof as to the safety of such a vehicle when used by a person of ordinary care and skill in riding. Moore v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.) 208

BIGAMY.

Cohabitation with a bigamous wife in violation of Ala. Crim. Code 1896, § 4406, continues while the parties live together ostensibly as husband and wife, presenting to the community the appearance of the open and demoralizing example of living in an illicit relation, although in fact such relations have ceased because of the wife's physical incapacity. Cox v. State (Ala.) 760

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bigamy; what constitutes. 760

BILL OF RIGHTS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1.BILLS AND NOTES. See also BANKS, 8-5; CONTRACTS, 1; EVIDENCE, 14, 15; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 4.

1. A conditional delivery of a promissory note to the payee or the agent of the payee cannot be made so as to make the subsequent signature of another person essential to its validity. Hurt v. Ford (Mo.) 823

2. One who writes on the back of a note an assignment with a guaranty of payment is an indorser. Madrox v. Duncan (Mo.) 581

3. An unrestricted guaranty of payment indorsed on a negotiable instrument is negotiable, and passes with the title to the instrument. Commercial Bank v. Cheshire Provident Institution (Kan.) 175

4. An indorsement on a certificate of deposit of the words, "Pay to the order of R. C. O. cash, for account" of the indorser, is a restrictive indorsement which vests no general property to the paper in the indorsee, but merely constitutes him an agent for collection. United States Nat. Bank v. Geer (Neb.) 439

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; effect of guaranty of payment upon negotiability. 175

Indorsement for collection or account. 439

Contract of indorsement; guaranty indorsed on. 581

Conditional delivery of; left for other signature before delivery. 824

BLIND. See CARRIERS, 1.BONDS. See LIENS, 5.BRAKEMAN. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 9.BRIBERY. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 2.

41 L. R. A.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.BUILDINGS. See also ELEVATORS.*NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Buildings; injunction by municipality against nuisance of. 828

BURGLARY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal liability for agent's act in. 652

CARCASS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15.CARRIERS. See also COMMERCE, 1, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14; CORPORATIONS, 1; CUSTOM; EVIDENCE, 11; RECEIVERS, 4; STATUTES, 7; TRIAL, 9, 10.

1. The blindness of a person does not justify his rejection as a passenger of a railroad when unaccompanied by some other person, unless he is otherwise incompetent to travel alone. Zackery v. Mobile & O. R. Co. (Miss.) 885

2. A person passing from a railroad station across a track to a platform, intending to take a train for which he has purchased a ticket, is a passenger within the meaning of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212, relating to the liability of a railroad company for negligently causing the death of a passenger. Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) 198

3. An experienced traveler who opens a vestibule door of a sleeping car by mistake, about 6 o'clock in the morning, while the train is passing through a tunnel and the car is dark, and steps off upon the track, when he supposes he is entering the car closet, is guilty of such negligence as will preclude his recovery even if the carrier is deemed negligent. Piper v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 724

4. The sudden jolting of a passenger car on a mixed train while the train was being made up and a passenger was attempting to enter the car at a distance from the station, without the knowledge of any person in control of the train, although the station baggage-master knew it, does not render the railroad company liable to the passenger for resulting injuries, in the absence of any invitation to get on the car at that place. Jones v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 490

Baggage.

5. Samples of merchandise carried by a traveling salesman do not constitute baggage within the meaning of Ark. act April 19, 1895, regulating charges on excess baggage, but may be charged for by the railroad company as freight. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 838

Regulation of rates.

6. In order to exempt a common carrier from legislative control over its rates of fare, the exemption must be made by clear and unmistakable language inconsistent with the exercise of such power by the legislature. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 837

7. A railroad company is not liable for the penalty of $500 for overcharge of freight or passenger rates under W. Va. Code 1891, chap. 54, p. 559, cl. v, for the mere charge of it by a conductor, unless the company authorized or approved the act. Hall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 669

8. W. Va. Code 1891, chap. 54, § 82c, subs. 7, 8, as to classification of freight and rates of charges therefor, are repealed by W. Va. Acts 1895, chap. 17. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co. (W. Va.) 414

9. An intention to violate the law prohibiting free transportation of favored passengers is not essential to constitute a violation of N. C. Acts 1891, chap. 320. State v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 246

10. Circumstances and conditions which surround two persons are not dissimilar so as to relieve a railroad company from the prohibition of N. C. Acts 1891, chap. 320, § 4, against discriminating in rates between persons under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, merely because one is a high official, or a larger shipper, or a politician of power, whose influence may be of service to the company, and the other is not. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; unlawfulness of pass or discrimination between passengers. 246

What constitutes baggage. 334

Negligence in boarding freight train. 490

Negligence of passenger in falling from train. 724

Standing on front of street car. 336

Legislative power to regulate street-railway fares. 337

Statute as to separate accommodations for different races. 432

CASE.

Injury to another's property in the exercise of a legal right—especially one conferred by statute—does not render one liable for damages, unless they were caused by want of care and skill ordinarily exercised in like cases. Coyne v. Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. (Minn.) 494

CEMETERIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunctions by municipality against 323

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT. See BILLS AND NOTES, 4.

CERTIORARI.

1. A writ of certiorari does not lie to review a decision of a question of fact upon evidence heard. Demlin v. Dalton (Mass.) 379

2. Certiorari will not lie to review the decision of a board of military examiners respecting the competency of a person to be a militia officer, as the proceedings of the board are not judicial. Id.

41 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Certiorari; when lies; to summary court. 379

CHAMPERTY.

1. Champerty is illegal, independent of statute, and the English statutes of Edw. I. and III. and 32 Hen. VIII. on this subject were merely declaratory of the common law. Johnson v. Van Wyck (D. C. App.) 520

2. An agreement by an attorney to prosecute a suit entirely at his own expense, in consideration of one half of the recovery, is champertous. Id.

3. The rule that champerty in an incidental contract will not defeat title does not apply so as to allow a recovery of land by a trustee whose title is derived through champertous conveyances which have a merely nominal consideration aside from champertous agreements to prosecute suits for the property at the expense of the various grantees. Id.

4. The fact that a champertous trust is in part for the benefit of the heirs of one who conveyed land in consideration of a share of the prospective recovery in champertous litigation will not make the trustee's title valid for any part of the property. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Champerty; invalidity of contract for. 520

CHECKS. See also BANKS; ESTOPPEL, 3-5; NOTICE.

1. The fact that checks are taken in absolute extinguishment of debts does not relieve the drawer from his legal obligations to the payee as drawer, when the checks have been stolen from the payee and collected upon a forged indorsement. Shepard & M. Lumber Co. v. Eldridge (Mass.) 617

2. Negligence of the holder of an undorsed check payable to his own order, in intrusting it to a clerk who, he might have known, by the exercise of due care, was dishonest, and who puts it in circulation by forging an indorsement thereon, does not deprive the holder of his remedy against the drawer. Id.

3. Notice of the loss of a check which has been stolen and collected upon a forged indorsement is not required to be given by the payee to the drawer and drawee or to the public, if he is honestly ignorant of the facts and incorrectly but honestly assumes that the check has been collected in the regular course of business. Id.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. See PHYSICIANS, 2.

CIVIL RIGHTS. See also COMMERCE, 1.

The refusal of a waiter in an eating house to wait upon a colored patron because of his color renders the eating-house keeper liable, although he did not aid or abet the waiter in such action, to at least the minimum penalty provided by Wis. Laws 1895, chap. 223, § 1, providing that all persons shall be entitled to the equal enjoyment of the privileges of eating houses, and § 2, providing that any person who violates the foregoing section by denying any person, except for reasons applicable alike to all persons, the full enjoyment of all such privileges, shall be liable to the person aggrieved for not less than $5 and costs. Bryan v. Adler (Wis.) 658

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil rights; of colored passengers. 482

CIVIL SERVICE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5, 6; CRIMINAL LAW, 2; STATUTES, 1.

1. A law providing that appointments to municipal offices or positions shall be made according to merit and fitness, and that such merit and fitness must be ascertained by competitive examination, is within the power of the legislature. People, Akin, v. Kitley (Ill.) 775

2. An officer whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the city council, even though he be a subordinate in one of the principal departments of the city, is excluded from the classified service by § 11 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895, if the office had been created and was in existence when the act was passed. Id.

3. The words "heads of any principal department of the city," in § 11 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895, excluding such heads of departments from the classified service, refer to heads of the departments as they existed at the time when the act was passed, and do not extend to subordinates, even where the department has but one head. Id.

4. An ordinance which purports to change certain subordinate officers into heads of principal departments, and require their appointments to be confirmed by the city council, in order to remove them from the classified service, for which appointments must be made by examination under the Illinois civil service act of 1895, and place them in the list of those exempt from examination, which includes heads of principal departments and officers whose nominations must be confirmed by the city council, is invalid as an attempt to nullify the statute. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil service; construction and effect of acts for; policy of competitive examinations; legislative power as to 775

COAL. See DAMAGES, 8, 4.

COERCION OF JURY. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 7, 8; NEW TRIAL, 1; TRIAL, 14.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE. See TAXES, 8, 9.

COLORED PERSONS. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

COMMERCE.

1. A state statute providing for separate but equal accommodations for the white and colored races on railroads is a valid police 41 L. R. A.

regulation, and applies both to intra and inter state travel. Smith v. State (Tenn.) 482

2. A state statute making a carrier which accepts anything for transportation to a point beyond its own route liable for its safe carriage to such point of destination, in the absence of a written contract to the contrary, and imposing upon the carrier the burden of proving, even in case of such contract, that the loss or injury did not occur while the thing was in its charge, is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. (Va.) 511

3. The sale of a frame for a portrait, made in another state to fill an order taken by a solicitor in the state where it was delivered, is a mere incident to the taking of the order for the portrait, and is not within the provisions of a state statute against peddling without a license, where the order for the portrait contained a provision that it should be delivered in a frame which the purchaser of the portrait should have the option of buying at wholesale price. State v. Coop (S. C.) 501

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; state regulation of. 432

State regulation of carriers. 511

COMMERCIAL AGENCY. See COPY-RIGHT, 8; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

COMMON LAW.

In ascertaining the rules of the common law the court may look to the decisions of other states of the Union as well as to those of the English courts. Seymour v. McAvoy (Cal.) 544

COMPULSORY SERVICE. See ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

CONDITIONS. See BILLS AND NOTES, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CONFISCATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. The law of the state in which a contract of life insurance is made by a resident thereof will control as to the rights of his creditors and beneficiaries, instead of the law of another state in which the beneficiaries reside, or of another state in which the insurance company is located and the policy payable. Roberts v. Winten (Tenn.) 275

2. The effect of contributory negligence to defeat or limit a right of action for an injury received in another state is to be determined by the law of the place of the injury, and not by the law of the forum. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitlow (Ky.) 614

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; as to contributory negligence. 614

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also COURTS, 10; EMINENT DOMAIN, 1; FINES, 8; JUDGMENT, 4, 5; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4; OFFICERS, 1; TAXES, 9.

1. The Bill of Rights of the Nebraska Constitution is not an enumeration of all the powers reserved to the people of the state. State, Smyth, v. Moores (Neb.) 624

2. A statute inhibited by the general scope and purpose of the fundamental law is invalid, although it may not contravene any express provision of the Constitution. Id.

3. The exercise by the legislature for forty-five years, with the acquiescence by the people, of the power to regulate corporations by special acts, is influential in determining the construction of a constitutional provision against creating corporations by special acts. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 337

Delegation of power.

4. The police power may be delegated by the legislature to municipal corporations. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

5. Authorizing civil service commissioners to make rules for the examination of persons applying for appointments to public office does not delegate to them legislative power. People, Akin, v. Kiple (Ill.) 775

6. Judicial power is not delegated to civil service commissioners by giving them authority to investigate complaints against officers and matters as to the enforcement of the civil service law, with the right to administer oaths and secure the attendance of witnesses by subpoena, and providing that a court may compel obedience to such subpoena. Id.

Ex post facto laws.

7. Changes in constitutional provisions by which a grand jury may consist of twelve instead of sixteen, and a petit jury of twelve need not all agree to find a verdict, relate to methods of procedure only, and are in no sense ex post facto in character as applied to crimes previously committed. State v. Caldwell (La.) 718

Retroactive laws.

8. A statute relieving from the imputation of usury all contracts made by a building and loan association under a charter of doubtful validity is not unconstitutional as to those contracts because it is retroactive. Smoot v. People's Perpetual Loan & B. Asso. (Va.) 539

Vested rights.

9. The right of a husband to the use of his wife's real estate, with power to rent it for not more than three years at a time and receive the rent, under Ky. Gen. Stat. p. 720, chap. 52, art. 2, § 1, which was in force when the parties were married and the property was acquired, is a vested right of which the legislature cannot deprive him. Rose v. Rose (Ky.) 353

Due process of law.

10. Due process of law is shown when an opportunity is conferred to invoke the equal protection of the law by judicial proceedings appropriate for the purpose and adequate to 41 L. R. A.

secure the end and object sought to be attained. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

11. A person is not deprived of his liberty without due process of law by a statute making it an offense to have possession of prohibited articles, such as a record of lottery drawings, even if he did not know what the articles that he had were. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

12. A public office, or the prospective fees of an office, are not the property of the incumbent within the constitutional provision against depriving a man of property. People, Akin, v. Kiple (Ill.) 775

13. Due process of law is not furnished by garnishment of a debt due to a nonresident who is not personally served within the state and does not voluntarily appear. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash (Ala.) 331

Confiscation.

14. The right to regulate fares on street railroads does not include the power to require passengers to be carried without reward, or for such sum as will amount to confiscation or the taking of property without compensation or due process of law. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 337

15. An ordinance prohibiting the owner of a dead carcass from removing it, but requiring him to pay a public contractor for its removal a fee greater than the value of the carcass, is unconstitutional as an indirect confiscation of property. Knauer v. Louisville (Ky.) 219

Equal privileges and immunities.

16. The permission to all members of a firm to pursue the business of plumbing where one only has procured a license, and to all members of a corporation to pursue it where the manager only has procured a license, renders Ohio act April 21, 1896, for the licensing of plumbers, unconstitutional on the ground that it does not operate equally upon all of a class pursuing the calling under like circumstances. State v. Gardner (Ohio) 639

Local law.

17. A general law making a police regulation applicable to part of the state only is not void for lack of equality and uniformity. State v. Griffin (N. H.) 177

Police power.

18. All wholesome laws as may be necessary to promote the peace, health, and well being of society, are within the legislative power. State v. Powell (Ohio) 854

19. Laws and regulations necessary for the protection of the health, morals, and safety of society, are within the legitimate exercise of the police powers of the state, provided they are reasonable. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

20. The constitutional right of an individual to hold property is subject to those reasonable regulations which are necessary for the common good and general welfare,—especially such as affect the health and morals of the people. Id.

21. A police regulation prohibiting acts which are in some circumstances harmless is not unconstitutional as an exercise of judicial power. State v. Griffin (N. H.) 177

22. Some obvious and real connection between the actual provisions of police regulations and their assumed purpose is essential to their validity. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

23. The power of the legislature to subserve the general welfare of the people by all needful and proper regulations in the interest of health and safety is inherent in the sovereignty of the state, and cannot be bartered away by contract or otherwise. Id.

24. A statute authorizing an ordinance requiring railroad companies to construct and keep in repair viaducts over streets crossed by their tracks is a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Id.

25. Sunday laws are within the legislative power to adopt such wholesome laws as may be necessary to promote the peace, health, and well being of society, and do not violate the personal liberty of the individual secured by Ohio Bill of Rights, § 1. State v. Powell (Ohio) 854

26. A statute prohibiting the depositing of sawdust in the waters of a lake or any tributary thereto is a proper exercise of the police power. State v. Griffin (N. H.) 177

27. Reasonable regulations to protect the public against evils which may result from incapacity and ignorance may be made by the general assembly, where a pursuit directly concerns the public health and welfare, and is of a character that requires a special course of study, training, or experience in order to qualify one to pursue the occupation with safety to the public interests. State v. Gardner (Ohio) 689

28. The business of plumbing is so nearly related to the public health that reasonable regulations tending to protect the public against the dangers of careless and inefficient work may be made by law without infringing the constitutional right of the citizen to pursue such calling. Id.

29. The requirement that all physicians shall obtain a new certificate and license under Ind. act March 8, 1897, although they had been previously practising medicine and held a license under the old law, and that the validity of the old license and the fitness of the applicant might be examined by the medical board, is a valid exercise of the police power of the state. State, Burroughs, v. Webster (Ind.) 212

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SUNDAY.

Constitutional law; police power over waters. 178

Police power as to dead animals. 220

Restriction on practice of profession. 212

Regulation of business by requiring license. 689

Vested right of husband in wife's real estate. 353

CONTEMPT.

Issues in a proceeding for contempt by disobeying an order of court do not require trial by jury. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

CONTRACTS. See also ASSUMPSIT; CHAMPERTY, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8; PATENTS; TRUSTS, 1.

1. An oral promise by the payee of a note to save certain makers harmless is within the statute of frauds, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5186. Hurt v. Ford (Mo.) 823

2. A contract by a vendor of patent rights in violation of a statute to prevent and punish fraud in the sale of such rights is void as between the parties. Mason v. McLeod (Kan.) 548

3. Vendees of patent rights for whose protection a statute is enacted imposing duties upon a vendor are not in pari delicto so as to prevent them from obtaining relief from their contract on account of the vendor's failure to obey the statute. Id.

4. An agreement by a manufacturing corporation that, subject to conditions named and for the purpose of securing the continuous patronage of a purchaser as payee, the company will, in six months, pay to the purchaser a certain amount, being a rebate on a purchase that day made, to be valid and payable only on condition that the purchaser, his successors and assigns, shall have bought their supply of such goods as are produced by the company exclusively from one or more dealers named,—cannot be enforced even in equity without the performance of the condition, unless waived or excused, upon the ground that the condition is affixed as a means of carrying out the illegal purposes of a monopoly, as the condition is the sole consideration of the promise, and if illegal the promise falls with it. Dennehy v. McNulta (C. C. App. 7th C.) 609

Restraint of trade.

5. All agreements in general restraint of trade are against public policy and void, although agreements having such partial effect only, made in connection with the purchase of a business and its goodwill, and reasonably necessary to the enjoyment thereof, and not oppressive, may be enforced. Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli (Ohio) 185

6. An agreement not to engage in business again in the same state for twenty-five years, made by a person selling his business to another, is a general restraint of trade, which is void. Id.

7. An agreement not to engage, directly or indirectly, for twenty-five years, in the state or in the United States, in the same business that is sold by such contract, with the goodwill thereof, tends to create a monopoly, and is invalid, whether it is necessary or not to the reasonable enjoyment of the goodwill so purchased. Id.

8. An agreement by officers of corporations not to engage in business for five years in any way to interfere with or compete with the business of a new corporation to which each of the old companies sold its business is not against public policy, although the new business is of a nature to extend over the whole country and is more general than that of either of the old companies, combining the business of installing and constructing electric plants and appliances, which one of them had carried on, with that of manufacturing and dealing in such appliances, which the others had carried on. Anchor Electric Co. v. Hawks (Mass.) 189

9. The fact that a corporation as one of the contracting parties may constitute an unjust monopoly, and that its general business is illegal, cannot serve ipso facto to create default or liability on its contracts generally; nor can such fact be invoked collaterally to affect in any manner its independent contract obligations or rights. Dennehy v. McNulta (C. C. App. 7th C.) 609

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contracts; reasonableness of restriction of trade. 187, 190

COPYRIGHT.

1. A statutory copyright operates to divest a party of the common-law right. Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Jewelers' Weekly Pub. Co. (N. Y.) 846

2. A book is published so as to defeat what is known as the common-law copyright, or right of first publication, if it is put within reach of the general public so that all may have access to it, no matter what limitations be put upon the use of it by the individual subscriber or lessee. Id.

3. A lease of the reference books of a mercantile agency to subscribers, retaining title and providing that the books shall be returned when the subscription expires, constitutes a publication which will defeat a common-law copyright. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Copyright; common-law and statutory right; effect of publication. 847

CORPORATIONS. See also CARRIERS, 6; ESTOPPEL, 2; INSURANCE, 1; INTEREST; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1; RECEIVERS, 3; TAXES, 3, 4.

1. The mere regulation of the maximum rate of fare to be collected by street-railroad companies in cities of a population of 100,000 or more according to the census of 1890 is not within the prohibition of Ind. Const. art. 11, § 18, against the creation of corporations by special act. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 337

2. The right of a creditor of a corporation to proceed individually against stockholders is merged in a decree obtained by such creditor in another state, in a court of competent jurisdiction, directing the collection of such claims by a receiver. Castleman v. Templeman (Md.) 387

3. An action in equity to prevent the revocation of the license of a foreign insurance company for failure to pay license fees cannot be based on the ground that the statute of limitations would prevent an action to collect the fees. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 557

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; foreign, conditions of doing business; revocation of license of. 558

CORRUPT PRACTICES. See OFFICERS, 1; QUO WARRANTO; STATUTES, 8; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

41 L. R. A.

COSTS AND FEES. See TRUSTS, 2.

COTENANCY. See also DAMAGES, 3, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cotenancy; action against cotenant for tort. 682

COURTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE, 2.

1. An action against an Indian belonging to a tribe and a particular reservation, brought on a contract in favor of a white man, is within the jurisdiction of a state court, in the absence of any Federal statute or treaty to the contrary. Stacy v. Labels (Wis.) 419

2. A county court acting as a probate court has no jurisdiction to try a question of title to property as between the personal representative of a decedent and a person claiming in hostility to the estate. Arnegard v. Arnegard (N. D.) 258

3. The attempt to confer general common-law and chancery jurisdiction on probate courts by the territorial act of Utah March 6, 1852, was absolutely void because it was not authorized by the organic act. Re Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

4. The enactment of a local or special law on a subject not enumerated in Ind. Const. art. 4, § 22, is an expression of the opinion and judgment of the legislature that a general law cannot be made applicable; and this judgment is not subject to be reviewed by the courts. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 337

5. The validity of a location by the legislature of a public institution is not beyond review in the courts on the ground that it is a legislative question, under Or. Const. art. 14, § 3, which amounts to a location of such institutions at the seat of government. State McCain, v. Metchan (Or.) 692

Judges.

6. A judge who owns real estate in a city that is taxable for the city's bonded indebtedness is disqualified to sit in a suit to contest the validity of a contract which will involve the creation of a bonded debt of the city to a large amount, necessitating a special tax for forty years, that will directly affect the value of all real property subject to it. Meyer v. San Diego (Cal.) 762

7. A judge cannot delegate his judicial authority to another, and his attempt to do so, even with the consent of the parties, cannot bind the defendant on a prosecution for felony. Ellerbe v. State (Miss.) 569

8. The temporary relinquishment by a judge of the control of proceedings in a trial for felony by going 250 or 300 yards from the courtroom, leaving a member of the bar presiding in his absence, and being gone about twenty minutes, during which the trial goes on, amounts to a dissolution of the court which makes the trial void. Id.

Rules of decision.

9. A will will not be construed by the courts before necessity of action under it arises. May v. May (D. C. App.) 767

10. Mere difference of opinion between the courts and the law-making power is not sufficient ground for holding a statute unconstitutional. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

11. Departure from decisions previously made is required by the policy of the law where adherence to them would be productive of more evil than the departure therefrom and the establishment of a better and sounder rule. Evansville v. Senhenn (Ind.) 728

12. On questions of the requirements of the state Constitution the supreme court of the state is not at liberty to set aside or discard its own views because of different conclusions by the Federal courts. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 337

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also TRIAL.

Courts; jurisdiction as to Indians. 419
Disqualification of judge as a taxpayer. 762
Rule of decision as to validity of statutes. 339

CREDITORS' BILLS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Creditors bills, what may be reached by. 544

CRIMINAL LAW. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11; COURTS, 8; EVIDENCE, 7, 8; TRIAL, 2, 13.

1. The intent with which an act is done is immaterial, when the act is denounced as unlawful by statute. State v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 246

2. The disqualification from holding of office for five years, prescribed by § 35 of the Illinois civil service act of 1895 as a punishment for conviction under the preceding section, so far as that punishment is authorized without an indictment, is in violation of Ill. Const. art. 2, § 8, requiring indictment for criminal offenses, except where the punishment is "by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary." People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

3. A suspension of sentence without conditions expressed in the judgment may be set aside by the court on its own motion, and the execution of the sentence ordered at any time during the same term. Weber v. State (Ohio) 472

But see next case.

4. Power over a prisoner is lost upon indefinite suspension of sentence without recognition after his plea of guilty, and the court cannot subsequently sentence him. People, Smith, v. Allen (Ill.) 478

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; suspension of sentence.

472, 478

Criminal and penal liability for act of co-partner, servant, or agent:—(I.) General rules; (II.) application to particular subjects: (a) crimes against the person; (b) forgery, burglary, larceny; (c) libel; (d) violation of revenue 41 L. R. A.

laws; (e) maintenance of nuisances; (f) adulteration of food products; (g) trespass in willfully cutting trees; (h) Sabbath breaking; (i) dealing with slaves; (j) gaming on licensed premises; (k) miscellaneous offenses; (III.) violation of liquor laws: (a) conflict of authority; (b) unlawful sale generally: (1) by partner; (2) by agent or servant; (c) selling without license: (1) by partner; (2) by agent or servant; (d) selling to minors: (1) by partners; (2) by agents or servants; (e) selling to habitual drunkards; (f) selling on Sunday; (g) violation of other miscellaneous provisions; (h) evidence of: (1) presumption and burden of proof; (2) admissibility; (3) sufficiency; (i) question for jury. 650

CURATIVE ACTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8; JUDGMENT, 4, 5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Curative acts; to validate void judgment. 503
Validating usurious contract. 589

CURTESY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As a vested right. 858

CUSTOM.

A custom to take passengers on a mixed freight and passenger train at a distance from the station is not shown by the fact that they sometimes got on there, where no direction, authority, or consent to do so is shown, except the direction of a baggageman in a single instance, and the fact that a flagman saw them board the train, while it appears that the train, when made up, always came to the station. Jones v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 490

DAMAGES.

1. Only nominal damages can be given to a railroad company for the use by a telegraph line of the space occupied by its posts and wires along the railroad right of way through an agricultural section of country, when the use and occupation of the right of way for railroad purposes is not interfered with or encumbered in any way. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. (Tenn.) 408

2. Mistakes or errors of a physician or surgeon who was employed in the exercise of ordinary care will not preclude the recovery of all the damages sustained from personal injuries. Selleck v. Janesville (Wis.) 583

3. The measure of damages for coal mined in good faith by a tenant in common who has a contract for its purchase with the father of co-tenants, who are infants, and under a belief that the purchase will be ultimately perfected by the probate court or by the infants, at arriving at full age, is the value of the coal in place at the time it was mined. Keys v. Pittsburg & W. Coal Co. (Ohio) 681

4. In fixing the value of coal mined in good faith but without right, by a tenant in common, the existence of entries, tramways, etc., owned by him on other lands, as well as every other circumstance, natural or artificial, which tends to enhance or diminish the value, should be considered. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; for placing telegraph line on railroad right of way. 408

For property converted. 688

DAMS. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 8; WATERS, 4.

DEAD ANIMALS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dead animals; police regulations as to. 220

DEATH.

1. The loss of services of a minor child killed by the fault of another does not give the parents at common law any right of action against the party in fault. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Beall (Tex.) 807

2. The right of the mother of an unmarried minor whose father is dead to recover damages for the death of the child under a statute giving such right to the father and mother, or the survivor of them, is not changed by the fact that she has married another man who has assumed the obligations of a natural father to his stepchild. Hennisy v. Bavarian Brew. Co. (Mo.) 885

3. Children have no right of action for the homicide of a stepfather on whom they were entirely dependent, although he left no widow and no other children, under a statute giving a right of action for the homicide of a "husband or parent." Marshall v. Macon Sash, D. & L. Co. (Ga.) 211

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; parent's right of action for death of child. 386

Common-law right of action of parent for loss of services of child killed:—(I.) Rule that no action will lie: (a) different theories as to; (b) doctrine that private injury is merged in public wrong; (c) doctrine that human life is not a subject of civil damages; (d) effect when death is not instantaneous; (II.) the contrary rule; (III.) the true rule; (IV.) rule when injury consists of a breach of contract. 807

DEDICATION. See also EASEMENTS.

1. Acceptance by public authorities is necessary to create a public way by dedication. Sater v. Gunn (Mass.) 268

2. A man cannot dedicate for street purposes land upon which he has placed a homestead, so as to divest the rights of his wife therein. San Francisco v. Grote (Cal.) 385

3. Dedication of land for a highway is not shown by the fact that for eight years the land was used by the public generally for travel, without either consent or objection on the part of the owner. Id.

DEEDS. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 8.

1. The delivery of a deed to a third person to be delivered to the grantee on the death of the grantor transfers the title subject to the 41 L. R. A.

life interest of the grantor. Arnegaard v. Arnegaard (N. D.) 258

2. The regaining of possession of a deed by the grantor after he has made a delivery intended to be absolute, to a third person, to take effect on his death, does not prevent the deed from being operative. Id.

3. The acceptance by a grantee of a deed which has been delivered to a stranger relates back to the time of delivery, if the rights of third persons have not intervened. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deeds; delivery of, when complete. 268

DEEDS OF TRUST. See INSOLVENCY.

DE FACTO. See OFFICERS, 8.

DEFINITIONS. See also BIGAMY; PENALTY.

A penal statute is one which imposes a forfeiture or penalty for transgression of its provisions or doing a thing prohibited. Hall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 689

DELIVERY. See BILLS AND NOTES, 1.

DEMAND. See MANDAMUS, 7.

DEMURRER. See PLEADING, 8.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2-4.

DISORDERLY HOUSE. See INJUNCTION, 7.

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 5-7; JUDGMENT, 8.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Drains and sewers; injunction by municipality against nuisance of. 325

Discharge of, into stream. 751

EASEMENTS.

The use for more than 100 years of a well-known and well defined roadway from a public road to a great pond, by hunters, fishermen, picnic parties, celebrators on public occasions, and by whomsoever choose, without objection and without obstruction, does not establish a way by prescription or dedication, where it does not appear that such use was with the express or implied permission of the owners of the land. Sater v. Gunn (Mass.) 268

EATING HOUSE. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

EJECTMENT.

A city may maintain ejectment for the possession of land dedicated for use as a street, although it does not own the fee. San Francisco v. Grote (Cal.) 385

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ejectment; for bed of street. 335

ELECTIONS. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

A telephone company's lineman who is injured by contact with a span wire charged with electricity by a trolley wire, an insulator of which was broken, is chargeable with negligence which will preclude his recovery of damages, where he failed to test the insulator although he had apparatus by which he could do it, and knew that there was no inspector, other than the linemen, to make such tests. Anderson v. Inland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Wash.) 410

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

The property of an electric-light company is so far devoted to a public use when the company is engaged in furnishing light for the streets and inhabitants of a municipality that it is bound to furnish light impartially to all applicants at a reasonable price. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Bowling Green (Ohio) 422

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 5, 6.

ELEVATORS. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 7.

1. The protection of a freight elevator shaft by the usual method of a railing is, in the absence of direction by the superintendent of buildings, sufficient compliance with N. Y. consolidated act, § 487, as amended by Laws 1897, chap. 566, requiring a substantial railing or trap doors, or both, as directed and approved by the superintendent of buildings. Malloy v. New York Real Estate Assn. (N. Y.) 487

2. The insufficiency of a railing to comply with the statute requiring a substantial railing at an elevator shaft will not render the owner liable to a person who falls into the shaft, not because the railing is insufficient, but because it has been left out of place, and the shaft left unguarded by the negligence of a third person using the elevator. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Elevators; requirements as to guards for. 487

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14; DAMAGES, 1.

1. Injury to the interests of a person, resulting from an exercise of the police power, do not entitle him to compensation under the law of eminent domain, if no part of his lands or property is taken therefor. State v. Griffin (N. H.) 177

2. Overflowing land, not as a mere casual trespass, but as the effect of raising the water above high-water mark to improve navigation, is a taking of property. Carlson v. St. Louis River Dam & I. Co. (Minn.) 871

3. The destruction of a mill and a mill dam by village trustees in time of danger, to prevent damage to a highway and other property, even if they act with authority, is not a taking of property for a public use in the exercise of eminent domain, but rather an exercise of the police power of the state. Aitken v. Wells River (Vt.) 566

4. A condemnation of the right of way for a telegraph line over a railroad right of way is authorized by Tenn. Acts 1895, chap. 135 (Shannon's Code, §§ 1868, 1871), conferring the right to take the property or easements of private corporations for public purposes and internal improvement. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. (Tenn.) 408

5. Poles of an electric railway, if properly placed, do not give ground of complaint to an abutting owner, whether he owns the fee of the street or not. Snyder v. Fort Madison Street R. Co. (Iowa) 845

6. An electric passenger railroad on a country highway constitutes an additional burden, and cannot be built without the consent of the abutting owner and payment of compensation. Zehren v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & L. Co. (Wis.) 575

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; electric railroad as additional burden on highway. 575

ESCROW. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Escrow; of note in hands of agent or attorney. 824

ESTOPPEL.

1. An estoppel cannot be based on a void decree. Re Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

2. The state is not estopped from insisting upon the condition prescribed for the business of a foreign corporation, by failure of officials to require compliance with the law at the proper time. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 557

3. The receipting of subsequent bills without mention of previous checks does not estop the payee, who took the checks as payment, from setting up the forgery of indorsements thereon and collecting them, if it was not done with the intent to mislead, or with any expectation or reason to believe that the drawer would in consequence thereof do or omit to do anything with reference to the checks. Shepard & M. Lumber Co. v. Eldridge (Mass.) 617

4. A payee of a check which is stolen from him and put in circulation by forgery is estopped from collecting the check, if, with knowledge of these facts, he misleads the drawer to his prejudice, and thereby places him in a worse position than he otherwise would be in with reference to the assertion or protection of his rights resulting from what has been done with the check. Id.

5. The situation of the drawer of checks who has paid them on forged indorsements of the payee's name and holds them as vouchers is changed to his prejudice, so as to estop the payee from collecting them, when the latter has procured them as paid checks without giving notice of his intent to collect them, though stating that the indorsements are forged,—especially when in consequence of this the drawer does not give immediate notice to the drawee of the forgery. Id.

EVIDENCE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 9, 12; INSURANCE, 2.

Judicial notice.

1. Judicial notice will be taken of the fact that no ordinary man could go through a hole 15x20 inches, unless he went head first, or with both feet first, and that to do so by mere accident would be very improbable, if not impossible. Johns v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Assn. (Wis.) 537

2. The jury may draw such inference as common knowledge will suggest respecting negligence in lying down and going to sleep in a barn, upon hay or straw, with a lighted pipe in one's mouth. Lillibridge v. McCann (Mich.) 881

Presumptions and burden of proof.

3. No intendment of law or presumption of fact can be made in favor of the jurisdiction of a court when the law purporting to confer the jurisdiction is void. Re Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

4. An attempt to procure false testimony or to corrupt jurors may be proved for the purpose of raising a presumption against the party who is guilty of it. McHugh v. McHugh (Pa.) 805

5. The presumption against suicide is not sufficient to sustain a cause of action under an insurance policy against death brought about by "some external cause or accident, and not by disease or any voluntary act," where the insured, who went to bed as usual, was found next morning in a cistern underground, back of the house, with underclothes, pants, and stockings on, but no coat, and the opening to the cistern was 15x20 inches. Johns v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Assn. (Wis.) 537

6. The declaration of his age made by an applicant for membership in a beneficial society to whom a certificate is issued and by whom payments are made for a series of years will be presumed correct until the contrary is proved. Supreme Council of Golden Star Fraternity v. Conklin (N. J. Err. & App.) 449

7. The burden of proving an alibi is upon defendant after the state has made out a prima facie case,—to the extent, at least, of raising a reasonable doubt of guilt. State v. Thornton (S. D.) 530

8. A person is not deprived of the presumption of innocence by a statute making it an offense to have possession of prohibited articles which are of no lawful use. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

9. A presumption of negligence does not arise from the fact of an injury, when the act that caused the injury is wholly unknown or undisclosed. Benedick v. Potts (Md.) 478

10. Injury to a person who was on a car when it entered a tunnel on a mimic railway operated as an amusement, and was not on the car when it emerged, but was found in an unconscious state in the tunnel, does not raise a presumption of the proprietor's negligence, when there was no defect in or abnormal condition affecting the means of actual transportation, and the other occupants of the car passed safely through. Id.

11. An inference of negligence attributable to a carrier may arise when a passenger is injured through some defect in the carrier's appliances or some act or omission of the carrier's servant, which might have been prevented by a high degree of care. Whalen v. Consolidated Traction Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 836

Documentary.

12. A Bible in which the names and dates of birth of several members of the same family are recorded, without proof of when or by whom written, or of the knowledge the writer had of the facts recorded, or that the persons whose names and dates of birth are written therein ever acknowledged it to be an authentic family record, and when the entries are not shown to have been contemporaneous with the facts stated, is not competent proof of the age of any person whose name may be recorded therein. Supreme Council of Golden Star Fraternity v. Conklin (N. J. Err. & App.) 449

Demonstrative.

13. A box of sand containing impressions of shoe tracks, which a witness testifies that he made with the shoes of the accused person, and that they are identical with those he found in the sand upon a desert, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of accurately describing the appearance of the tracks on the desert which are claimed to have been made by the accused. People v. Searcey (Cal.) 157

Parol as to writings.

14. Parol evidence may be given to show that the terms of the contract when commercial paper is indorsed in blank are different from that which the law implies. United States Nat. Bank v. Geor (Neb.) 439

15. A restrictive indorsement in unambiguous language cannot be contradicted or explained by evidence resting in parol. Id.

16. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that an ordinance or regulation is unreasonable, arbitrary, and oppressive in its operation. Moore v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.) 208 Opinions.

17. The fact that hypothetical questions to a physician are based in part upon his personal examination and knowledge does not make them objectionable. Selleck v. Janesville (Wis.) 563

18. Acquaintances of a person whose sanity is the subject of judicial inquiry, when able to instance expressions or acts of sanity or insanity, although not experts, may give their opinions as to the sanity or insanity of the person. Re Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

Declarations.

19. Evidence of what a person said while in his right mind after the injury causing his death, tending to show that the injury was caused by his own fault or negligence, is admissible against his administrator in an action under Ohio Rev. Stat. §§ 6184, 6185, for damages caused by his death. Helman v. Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. (Ohio) 860

Relevancy.

20. Evidence that persons charged with shooting firearms without reasonable excuse, within the corporate limits of a town, shot at a rabbit in the cornpatch of one of them who had suffered from the depredations of rabbits in his garden, is admissible as tending to show a reasonable excuse for the shooting. Chesterfield v. Rutliff (S. C.) 508

21. The representative character of an executrix will not prevent evidence that she has attempted to procure false testimony,—especially when she is personally interested in the litigation. McHugh v. McHugh (Pa.) 805

22. Evidence that a brakeman was in the habit of lowering the cage into a mine at too great speed is not admissible upon the question of his incompetency, in case of an accident caused by his turning the brake the wrong way and letting the cage fall. Walkowski v. Penokes & G. Consol. Mines (Mich.) 88

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; burden of proof as to master's knowledge as element of negligence. 149

Presumption of negligence. 478

Burden and measure of proof of an alibi:—(I.) Proof by defendant beyond a reasonable doubt; (II.) proof by defendant by a preponderance of evidence; (a) general rules; (b) as affected by reasonable doubt on whole case; (III.) proof by defendant to raise a reasonable doubt; (IV.) proof by prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt; (a) general rule as to burden of proof; (b) measure of proof; (c) consideration of all the evidence; (d) how jury should be instructed; (V.) time covered by proof. 530

Entries in family Bible or other religious book as evidence:—(I.) General rule; (II.) grounds upon which admitted; (III.) cases in which admitted: (a) in general; (b) on the testimony of the party making them; (c) on the testimony of a party to the action; (d) on the testimony of a third party; (IV.) time of entry material; (V.) necessity of production of book; (VI.) necessity of proof of handwriting; (VII.) when declarant is alive; (VIII.) when excluded; (IX.) right of jury to book in retirement. 449

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also BANKS, 1; EVIDENCE, 21; JUDGMENT, 6.

1. A person is not disqualified as an executor because of large indebtedness to the estate, which he denies, making his interest antagonistic and hostile to that of the estate and beneficiaries of the will, where the statutes (Ala. Code 1896, §§ 45–48) provide not only that letters shall be issued to persons named as executors in the will, "if they are fit persons," but also specify as grounds of unfitness minority, conviction of an infamous crime, or incompetence by reason of intemperance, improvidence, or want of understanding, adding that in case of unfitness for the causes enumerated letters of administration may be granted. Kidd v. Bates (Ala.) 154

2. Intestate property wanted for distribution is assets for an administrator de bonis non, under the Connecticut statutes, even if the property has been "administered" within the common-law meaning of that term. Chamberlain's Appeal (Conn.) 204

3. An administrator de bonis non has the right, even at common law, to receive interest. 41 L. R. A.

tate property which still exists in specie, unchanged and unconverted, in the hands of a third person who has no legal right to it, even if he has received it from an executor whose accounts have been settled and approved. Id.

4. It is not the duty of the court of probate to pass upon the legal validity of claims sought to be made available through the appointment of an administrator de bonis non, when asked to appoint him, but only to determine that a claim is made in good faith and appears to have some foundation in fact or in law. Id.

5. A court of probate has incidental power to construe wills for the purpose of deciding whether a claim under them is made in good faith, and is or is not prima facie utterly without any foundation in law or in fact, so far as this is necessary to determine the existence of the conditions for the exercise of its power to appoint administrators de bonis non. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors; disqualification of. 154

Liability for devastavit. 704

Presumption in case of stale demands against. 805

Administrators de bonis non; assets of. 205

EXEMPTION. See TAXES, 1.

EXPRESS COMPANY. See FINES, 2.

FARE. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

FINDING. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 5.

FINES.

1. A statute directing half of a forfeiture or fine to be paid to the informer does not violate Va. Const. art. 8, § 7, setting apart as a permanent literary fund "all fines collected." Southern Exp. Co. v. Com., Walker (Va.) 436

2. A pecuniary forfeiture under Va. Code, § 1220, for the charge by an express company of greater rates than it is authorized to charge, is not within Va. Const. art. 8, § 7, setting apart for a literary fund "all fines collected for offenses committed against the state." Id.

3. Va. Code, § 1220, fixing at $100 the minimum fine for the charge by an express company of rates greater than it is authorized to charge, and failing to prescribe a maximum limit, does not violate Va. Const. art. 1, § 11, prohibiting the imposing of "excessive fines." Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fines; what are. 437

FIREARMS. See EVIDENCE, 20; TRIAL, 6.

FIRE DEPARTMENT. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

The right to maintain a fire department in a city or town is one of the rights vested in the people of municipalities, which is to be exercised without legislative interference, except as the law-making body prescribes rules to aid the people of the municipality in exercising such right. State, Smyth, v. Moores (Neb.) 624

FIRE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIRES. See also NEGLIGENCE, 8; PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. Lying down to smoke, on hay or straw, in a barn, and going to sleep, with a lighted pipe in one's mouth, may be found by the jury to constitute negligence. Lillibridge v. McCann (Mich.) 881

2. The owner of a building taking fire from another building which is set on fire through the negligence of another person, without any intervening cause, has a right of action against the person whose negligence started the fire. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fire; negligence in causing; liability for. 882

Liability for damage caused by. 794

FISHERIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Access to waters for. 268

FLOOD. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FOOD.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal liability for adulteration of, by servant, agent, or partner. 656

FOOTPRINTS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4; EVIDENCE, 13.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. See CORPORATIONS, 3.

FORGERY. See also BANKS, 5, 6; CHECKS; ESTOPPEL, 3-5; NOTICE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Forgery; estoppel to allege. 617

Criminal liability for agent's act in. 652

FRAUD. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2-4.

1. A sale made on the faith of a report furnished by a commercial agency cannot be rescinded for fraud, if it is not shown that the buyer ever made any statement of his standing to the agency, or referred the seller to such report. Hiller v. Ellis (Miss.) 707

2. One who refers to a statement by a commercial agency for his standing, for the purpose of procuring credit, is guilty of fraud which will entitle the seller to rescind, if the condition there shown is infinitely better than in truth it is, although he did not give the information to the agency. Id.

FREIGHT TRAIN. See CUSTOM. 41 L. R. A.

GAMING.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal liability for act of servant, agent, or partner. 659

GARBAGE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction by municipality against nuisance of. 324

GARNISHMENT. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13.

1. The situs of a debt is at the domicile of the creditor for the purpose of garnishment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash (Ala.) 331

2. Payment by a garnishee of a judgment which was void for want of jurisdiction over the nonresident creditor will not be a defense to an action by the latter. Id.

GIFT.

A delivery of a savings bank book containing entries of deposits to the credit of the one delivering it, with the intention to give the person to whom it is delivered the deposits represented by such book, accompanied with appropriate words of gift, is a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid gift of such deposits, without written assignment or transfer. Polley v. Hicks (Ohio) 858

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gift; of savings bank deposit. 858

GOLDEN CHAIN. See BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

GOODWILL.

1. The goodwill of a school, which belongs to one of the persons forming a corporation to conduct it under his name, becomes the exclusive property of his estate on the expiration of the corporation. Bingham School v. Gray (N. C.) 243

2. A break in the operation of a school, after it has been carried on for many years at a certain place by persons belonging to one family, does not forfeit the right of the proper representative of the family to revive the school at the same place, as against another member of the family who has, during the cessation of the school at that place, opened a school in another part of the state, which he claims to be the successor of the original school. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Goodwill; in school kept by family. 243

GOVERNOR. See MANDAMUS, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

GRAND JURY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Number of. 718

GUARANTY. See BANKS, 4; BILLS AND NOTES, 2, 3; INSURANCE, 12.

HABEAS CORPUS.

The court will not, on habeas corpus proceedings instituted by a parent to test the detention of a child in a public institution, inquire into the regularity, legality, or sufficiency of the proceedings before the judge or magistrate which resulted in the committal, where the detention is manifestly for the welfare of the child. State, Bethell, v. Kilvington (Tenn.) 284

HEALTH. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18, 19, 23, 27.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Health; injunctions by municipality against nuisance affecting. 322

HIGHWAYS. See also DEDICATION; EJECTMENT; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5, 6; INJUNCTION, 2.

1. Poles for an electric railway must not be so placed as to interfere unnecessarily with the right of abutting owners to use and enjoy their property. Snyder v. Fort Madison Street R. Co. (Iowa) 345

2. A purchaser of a street railway so constructed as to make the street dangerous is liable for injury thereby caused to a traveler in the street, although he has permitted the railway company to remain in possession under an option to purchase the property, but without any agreement binding the company to remedy the defective condition of the street. Schaefer v. Fond du Lac (Wis.) 267

3. The negligence of private parties piling lumber in a street, either for themselves or when delivering it to the city, will not render the city liable, in the absence of notice, either express or implied. Evansville v. Senhenn (Ind.) 728

4. The implied duty of the owner to use reasonable care in inspecting and repairing a grate in a sidewalk in front of his premises does not cease on leasing a part only of the structure on the abutting land and its occupation by a tenant, although that part includes, by implication, the exclusive right of the tenant to use the grate as a beneficial appurtenance. Canandaigua v. Foster (N. Y.) 554

5. The persons "primarily liable," against whom remedies must be exhausted under a city charter before action against the city can be brought for the dangerous condition of a street, include all persons liable for the wrong, whether at common law or under a statute. Schaefer v. Fond du Lac (Wis.) 267

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highway; relative liability of city and private person for defects in. 288

Rights of abutting owners as to poles of electric railway. 345

Liability for excavation under sidewalk. 555

HOMESTEAD. See also DEDICATION, 2; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3.

A sale of a homestead under order of a probate court, for the benefit of minor child 41 L. R. A.

dren who enjoy it as a descended or transmitted homestead from the deceased homesteader, is not in violation of Ark. Const. art. 9, § 6, giving them an interest in the rents and profits of the homestead during minority, and providing that on the widow's death all of the homestead shall be vested in them. Merrill v. Harris (Ark.) 714

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homestead; jurisdiction of probate court over. 714

HOSPITALS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction against, by local authorities. 324

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. See also HABEAS CORPUS.

1. The power conferred upon county judges by Tenn. Acts 1891, chap. 195, to cause children to be brought before them, and commit them to the industrial school at Nashville, if they come within any of the descriptions therein set out, contemplates a proceeding in open court and a proper investigation upon which to base a committal; and an arbitrary committal by the county judge upon his personal knowledge of the facts, without such a proceeding, is irregular. State, Bethell, v. Kilvington (Tenn.) 284

2. The provision of Tenn. Acts 1891, chap. 195, § 6, that no child under eight shall be committed to the industrial school at Nashville, was made to protect the institution, and cannot be enforced for the purpose of releasing from the institution and restoring to improper hands a child whose welfare would not be subserved by such release, and whose age is uncertain under the proof. Id.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9; JUDGMENT, 3.

1. A married woman cannot form a partnership with her husband under Mo. Rev. Stat. chap. 61, § 4, making her liable for debts contracted before marriage and those contracted after marriage in her own name, as well as for her torts in which her husband took no part. Haggett v. Hurley (Me.) 362

Fraud on wife's property rights.

2. A secret unrecorded deed made by a man to his son on the eve of a second marriage, for the purpose of preventing the homestead right of the wife from vesting on the marriage, while an inducement to her to marry him was a proposal to build a substantial dwelling on the homestead, is fraudulent as to her homestead right, and void as to that, but is not void in toto. Arnegard v. Arnegard (N. D.) 258

3. The fact that a wife's homestead right might be divested by the removal of the family from the land will not prevent a secret deed of the land by the husband on the eve of the marriage from being fraudulent as to her homestead right. Id.

4. The fact that a wife will receive a portion of her husband's personal estate does not, however large that may be, prevent a secret deed of his real estate, made on the eve of their marriage, from being fraudulent as to her. Id.

Divorce.

5. An equitable division of property jointly accumulated by persons living together as husband and wife can be made by the court in an action for divorce wherein the marriage is found to be void because of a prior marriage of one of the parties, and a decree of nullity is entered, although the court has no authority to grant alimony as such. Werner v. Werner (Kan.) 849

6. The legislature cannot grant a divorce at the instance of a party at fault, without the consent of the party not at fault. Re Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

7. The communication of syphilis to a wife by her husband, who has the disease in the tertiary stage and is probably incurable, whereby she is kept in a constant state of suffering, is a ground for a divorce under 1 Pepper & L. Dig. p. 1638, pl. 11, allowing a divorce for cruel and barbarous treatment endangering the wife's life or rendering her condition intolerable and life burdensome. McMahon v. McMahon (Pa.) 802

Annulment of marriage.

8. The annulment of a marriage because the husband is constitutionally afflicted with syphilis, and in a state in which his chances of cure are very remote and doubtful, may be granted, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 11, on the ground of fraud, where, with knowledge of his condition, he did not inform his wife in regard to it, and she, learning of it on the day of the marriage soon after the ceremony, refused to live with him as his wife, and filed the libel for annulling the marriage before its consummation. Smith v. Smith (Mass.) 800

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; partnership of. 862
Equitable division of property on decreeing nullity of marriage. 849
Divorce for cruelty. 802

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION. See EVIDENCE, 17.

ICE. See WATERS, 8.

IGNORANCE. See LOTTERIES.

IMITATIONS. See INJUNCTION, 10, 12.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See EVIDENCE, 18; POOR AND POOR LAWS; TAXES, 2.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 11.

INDIANS. See also COURTS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indians; regulation of intercourse with. 419

INDICTMENT.

Allegations to show that the accused knew what the articles were that he had in his possession are not necessary in an indictment.

-41 L. R. A.

under Md. Laws 1894, chap. 310, § 178, making it unlawful to have possession of any record of numbers drawn in a lottery, or of any lottery ticket, or anything in the nature thereof, unless they are held for the purpose of procuring or furnishing evidence of a violation of the law. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

INDORSEMENT. See BANKS, 8, 4; BILLS AND NOTES, 2, 4; EVIDENCE, 14, 15.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL. See HOUSE OF CORRECTION, 2.

INFANTS. See also HABEAS CORPUS; HOMESTEAD; HOUSE OF CORRECTION, 1; NEGLIGENCE, 6, 8-10; UNBORN CHILDREN.

1. An infant can impeach a decree in a suit to which he was a party, only upon a ground which would invalidate it in case of any other person, such as fraud, collusion, or error. Harrison v. Turnbull (Va.) 703

2. An infant is not prevented from asserting his rights by next friend against a decree settling an estate in which he is interested, whenever he sees fit to do so, by Va. Code, § 3424, allowing him to show cause against such decree within six months after he becomes of age. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also NEGLIGENCE.

Infants; effect of judgment on rights of. 704

INHERITANCE TAX. See TAXES, 8, 2.

INJUNCTION. See also ACTION ON SUIT, 1, 2.

1. All expenditure of public money at a place prohibited by the Constitution is a misapplication thereof which may be prevented by injunction, for the reason that it is against the declared will of the people. State, Mc Cain, v. Metchan (Or.) 693

2. A mandatory injunction to compel the removal of an electric-light pole may be granted when the pole is placed in front of the plaintiff's property without necessity therefor, for the purpose of annoying him and to injure and depreciate the value of his property. Snyder v. Fort Madison Street R. Co. (Iowa) 345

3. An injunction against a trespass may be granted for the inadequacy of the relief at law, where an action at law has been brought, but the insolvency of the defendant makes it impossible to collect a judgment against it for damages. Slater v. Gunn (Mass.) 263

To officers of lodge.

4. A court of equity has power to enjoin the members of the supreme lodge of a fraternal beneficiary association from excluding any properly qualified state representatives from the right to vote. Supreme Lodge Order of Golden Chain v. Simering (Md.) 720

5. An injunction against the performance of the duties of the officers of a fraternal beneficial association, to which defendants claim to have been elected, sought on the ground that the election was invalid because persons entitled to vote were denied the right, is not the proper remedy,—especially when it does not appear that this was done in bad faith. Id.

Against slaughter house.

6. An equitable action by a city to compel the removal or abatement of a slaughter house affecting the comfort and convenience of the public, but not injurious to the public health, is authorized by a charter empowering the city to compel the owner of any unwholesome, noxious house or place to cleanse, remove, or abate the same from time to time "as often as may be necessary for the health, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants of said city." Red Wing v. Guptil (Minn.) 821

Against bawdy house.

7. An injunction against keeping a bawdy house on certain premises cannot be granted because it is obnoxious to the neighborhood and unfavorably affects the salable value of property in the locality. Neaf v. Palmer (Ky.) 219

Against prosecution.

8. An injunction against criminal proceedings, whether for violations of statutes or ordinances, will not be granted even when the constitutionality of the statute or the validity or reasonableness of the ordinance involved is alleged. Paulk v. Sycamore (Ga.) 772

Against use of trademark or trade-name.

9. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the use of a trademark which is deceptive in falsely representing that the goods sold under such trademark are manufactured at a particular place which has a reputation for making such goods. Coleman, B. & W. Co. v. Dannenberg Co. (Ga.) 470

10. Owners of flouring mills in Minneapolis, Minnesota, having established a high reputation for flour bearing the names "Minneapolis" and "Minnesota" by using a superior quality of hard spring wheat and all of them using the same process and the same kind of machinery and subjecting their product to the same kind of inspection, may have an injunction against the use of such names on flour of lower grade, which is made in Milwaukee from wheat of different grade. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. v. Eagle (C. C. App. 7th C.) 162

11. The fact that one of the mills of complainants who seek an injunction against the deceptive use of the name of a city on a product made elsewhere is situated outside the city limits will not preclude relief, when that mill is for all practical purposes a part of the complainants' plant within the city. Id.

12. An exclusive or proprietary right in words or labels used is not necessary in order to obtain an injunction against unfair competition in trade by the deceptive use of such words or labels. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; by municipal corporations against nuisances affecting public morals, peace, and good order, and health and safety:—(I.) Public morals, peace, and good order: (a) intoxicating liquors; (b) public amusements; 41 L. R. A.

(II.) public health and safety: (a) in general; (b) burial grounds, etc.; (c) hospitals, etc.; (d) garbage, etc.; (e) sewers and drains; (f) trade or business; (g) buildings and other structures. 821

Against use of stream to float logs. 497

Against state officers; by taxpayer. 698

To suspend officers of corporation. 720

Against prosecution for offense. 772

INNOCENCE. See EVIDENCE, 8.

INSANE ASYLUM. See STATE INSTITUTIONS.

INSOLVENCY.

1. An insolvent who makes a deed of trust for creditors is not liable on contracts made by the trustee in administering the trust. Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Grover (N. D.) 252

2. Creditors who join with an insolvent debtor in his deed of trust by which a trustee is to continue the business as long as he shall deem it for the interest of the creditors to do so, with the entire management and control of the business, and, when he deems it best, to sell the property and pay the claims of the creditors from the proceeds,—are not the real proprietors of the business, so as to become liable for goods purchased by the trustee in the prosecution of the business, but their relation to him is that of beneficiary and trustee, and not that of principal and agent. Id.

3. An assignment for benefit of creditors will be annulled by the preference therein of an usurious debt, where there is a statutory right of action to recover back the entire interest when usury has been paid. Hiller v. Ellis (Miss.) 707

4. The release by a creditor of all personal claim against an assignor for creditors who makes a preference in favor of such creditor will not make the creditor a purchaser of the assignment, if the assignor was hopelessly insolvent and the release was executed to uphold the assignment, and not to procure either it or the preference. Id.

5. The release by creditors of personal claims against the assignor in consideration of a preference in their favor in an assignment for benefit of creditors does not entitle the assignee to hold the assigned property as a purchaser for value for the satisfaction of such claims, if he was a party to a fraudulent preference which annulled the assignment. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insolvency; effect of preferring an usurious debt in an assignment for creditors:—(I.) General doctrine stated; (II.) limitation of this note; (III.) deed of assignment rendered void; (IV.) preference of actual debt sustained, but usury rejected; (V.) preference of usurious debt sustained generally; (VI.) who may, and who may not, urge the usurious character of the debt preferred. 707

INSURANCE. See also BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; CORPORATIONS, 8; EVIDENCE, 5, 6; TRIAL, 5.

1. The license of a foreign insurance company for the current year may be revoked by the insurance commissioner, under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 1955, on account of its failure to pay the full license fees required by § 1220 for past years during which it has done business within the state, as its failure to comply with the law is a present, existing failure. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 557

2. An accident insurance policy is not within Pa. act May 11, 1881, providing that no application, constitution, or by-laws referred to in a life or fire insurance policy, shall be received in evidence or considered part of the policy or contract, unless correct copies are contained in or attached to the policy. Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Carroll (C. C. App. 8d C.) 194

3. The rule that all ambiguities, obscurities, and uncertainties in a policy of fire insurance, are to be resolved most favorably to the assured, has no application whatever to plain language used in such connection as to leave no room to say reasonably that the parties might have intended either of two meanings. Thurston v. Burnett & B. D. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 816

Conditions.

4. A proviso exempting an accident insurance company from liability for injuries to a person "in or on any such conveyance not provided for the transportation of passengers" does not include injuries received by a passenger while on a locomotive of a passenger train at the invitation of a railroad official. Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Cal.) 467

5. The use of wood to make power in a steam engine, not only when moving it to the place where it is to operate a threshing machine, but also to run the machine for half an hour before any coal is used, and then continuing to use wood, together with a small quantity of coal, for about fifteen minutes and until a fire occurs,—is not permitted by an insurance policy which requires the use of "coal for fuel, with sufficient wood to kindle or start the fire." Thurston v. Burnett & B. D. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 816

Doubling insurance.

6. A passenger does not, by riding on a railroad engine by invitation of an officer of the road, lose his character as a passenger within the meaning of an accident policy which doubles the amount of the insurance in case of injury to a passenger "in any passenger conveyance using steam," etc. Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Cal.) 467

Increase of hazard.

7. A provision in an accident insurance policy for smaller indemnity in case the insured is injured while engaged in an occupation more hazardous than that specified in the application is reasonable, and will be enforced by the courts. Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Carroll (C. C. App. 3d C.) 194

8. A person insured by an accident policy in a preferred class as a mining expert is not, while riding as a passenger on a railroad locomotive, within a proviso reducing the amount of insurance if he is injured "in any occupation or exposure classed . . . as more hazardous than that here given." Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Cal.) 467

41 L. R. A.

9. An increase of the risk or hazard is not shown by the mere fact of the levy of attachments and executions upon property. Herman v. Katz (Tenn.) 700

Change of title or interest.

10. The word "occupants" in the provision of a policy making it void for change of interest, title, or possession, "except change of occupants without increase of hazard," is not limited to real property, but applies to personal property also. Id.

11. The levy of attachments and subsequent executions on property without increasing the hazard does not avoid an insurance policy which provides that it shall be void for change of interest, title, or possession, except change of occupants without increase of hazard. Id.

Other insurance; prorating.

12. A "standard guaranty to maintain 80 per cent insurance," stamped on the face of a policy of fire insurance, does not supersede a provision that the policy shall be void in case of other insurance, at least when that policy itself is for more than 80 per cent of the value of the property. Cutler v. Royal Ins. Co. (Conn.) 159

13. A provision of an insurance policy as to prorating in case of loss of property covered by several policies controls another provision that the interest of a mortgagee or trustee shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property. Sun Ins. Office v. Varile (Ky.) 798

14. Insurance of a lessor's interest in the premises, on which the lessee also had procured insurance for the lessor's benefit, as his lease required him to do, will cover such part of the loss insured against as remains after the application of the policies taken by the lessee, where they fail to cover the whole loss because of a stipulation in them for prorating with all other insurance on the premises. Id.

Total loss.

15. The total destruction of a building within the meaning of an insurance policy means its complete destruction as a building, but not necessarily the absolute extinction of all its materials, or even that no part of it can be left standing. Corbett v. Spring Garden Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 318

16. Insurance on a leasehold interest against the total destruction of a building which will terminate the lease gives no right of recovery when the roof is burned off, the interior destroyed, and the woodwork, sashes, and glass gone, while the iron front is considerably damaged, but the foundation and four walls remain substantially intact, and the building can be repaired for but little more than one third its value. Id.

Interest of creditors.

17. Creditors of an insolvent have no right to the proceeds of his life insurance made payable to other persons, where he paid the premium therefor only by a worthless check, and never put into the insurance anything upon which the creditors could have had any claim. Roberts v. Winton (Tenn.) 275

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; effect of guaranty to maintain certain per cent of insurance. 160

Effect of attachments and executions upon:
 occupancy of personal property. 700
 On life; rights of creditors to. 274
 Construction of policy. 816
 Construction of policy; effect of negligence of insured. 467
 Total loss; what is. 818

INTENT. See CARRIERS, 9; CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

INTEREST. See also USURY.

Unpaid license fees of a foreign corporation bear legal interest from the date upon which they ought by law to have been paid.
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 557

INTERNAL REVENUE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal or penal liability for act of agent, partner, or servant. 654

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal liability for act of partner, servant,
 or agent. 650

JUDGE. See COURTS, 6.

JUDGMENT. See also ACTION OR SUIT,
 4; ESTOPPEL, 1; EVIDENCE, 8; GARNISH-
 MENT, 2; INFANTS; SET OFF.

1. A motion for judgment non obstante verdicto cannot be made after the judgment is entered. Hurt v. Ford (Mo.) 828

2. Judgment upon the pleadings may be entered after the verdict has been set aside on a motion for judgment non obstante verdicto, which makes the necessary averments, but which cannot be sustained as a motion of the latter kind because it was not made until after the judgment was entered. Id.

Void.

3. A decree of divorce granted without jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the person, or without any cause for divorce stated, and without proof, is absolutely void. Re
Christensen's Estate (Utah) 504

Validating.

4. The law-making power cannot validate void judgments. Id.

5. A judgment may be validated by the legislature if rendered by a court with jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person, and its invalidity is due to the omission of some essential step which the legislature had a right to dispense with. Id.

As a bar.

6. A decree establishing claims against a decedent's estate, and ordering the sale of real estate to pay them, is a complete bar to an action against the executor for a devasavit, and against the claimant to compel a return of the property, so long as it remains in force, when the action is brought by heirs of decedent, who were parties to the former suit in person or by 41 L. R. A.

representation. Harrison v. Turnbull (Va.) 709

Opening; lien.

7. A court in opening a mere money judgment has no power to order that the lien thereof shall continue in existence and attach to such judgment as may subsequently be rendered in the cause. Farmers' Loan & T. Co.
v. Killinger (Neb.) 222

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SET-OFF.

Non obstante verdicto. 824

Power of legislature to validate. 505

Effect of fraudulent decree. 704

Continuing lien of judgment opened or set aside to permit a defense:—(I.) Distinction between opening and setting aside or vacating judgment; (II.) power to continue lien on opening judgment; (III.) the Pennsylvania and Ohio rules; (IV.) effect of continuance of lien; (V.) the second or final judgment; (VI.)
 the final enforcement or collection. 222

JURISDICTION. See EVIDENCE, 8;
 JUDGMENT, 8, 5; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE,
 1.

JURY. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6-8, EVIDENCE, 2; NEW TRIAL, 1; TRIAL, 1-8; 14.

1. The fact that some names on the jury panel were not on the last assessment roll of the county, as the law provides they should be, does not, of itself, sustain a challenge to the panel. People v. Searcey (Cal.) 157

2. The omission of a township in selecting the jury list from the wards and townships of the county, which by Cal. Code Civ.
 Proc. § 206, is to be in proportion to their inhabitants, is not shown by the fact that the list does not include the names of any persons in a town which is within the township but constitutes only a part of it. Id.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. See also
 PROHIBITION, 2.

1. A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of any cause of action unknown at common law and not authorized by statute. Nor- folk & W. R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co. (W. Va.) 414

2. The exclusion of the justices of the peace of a single town from the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction, by N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 22, relieving them of the duty to enforce the criminal law, denying them compensation for such business, and virtually prohibiting all peace officers from obeying the writs of such justices in criminal cases,—is a violation of N.
 Y. Const. art. 6, which provides for justices of the peace, without expressly saying what a justice of the peace shall be. People, Burby,
v. Howland (N. Y.) 838

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Justice of the peace; character of court of;
 constitutional office. 888

LAKE. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 26.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See also HIGHWAYS, 4; INSURANCE, 14, 16.

1. The partial destruction of a building is within the provision of Ky. Stat. § 2297, that a mere agreement of a lessee to repair will not bind him to restore buildings destroyed by fire or other casualty. Sun Ins. Office v. Varble (Ky.) 792

2. A landlord is liable for injury to his tenant from the fall of a porch which, to his knowledge at the time of the lease, had drawn away from the house, and which he attempted to repair, but negligently left unsafe. Willcox v. Hines (Tenn.) 278

3. A landlord is liable to his tenant for such defects and dangers as are in existence when the lease is made, provided he knows of them or ought to know of them, and provided also that the tenant does not know of them, and could not know of them, both parties in the matter exercising reasonable care and diligence. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord's liability for defects in premises. 555

LARCENY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal liability for agent's act in. 652

LAW OF PLACE. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.LEGISLATURE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6.LIBEL.*NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EVIDENCE.

Libel; criminal liability for agent's act in. 658

LIBERTY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

What is. 625

LICENSE. See also CORPORATIONS, 8; INSURANCE, 1; INTEREST.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License of peddlers. 501

Requiring payment for preceding year. 558

LIENS. See also JUDGMENT, 7; PAYMENT, 1; TAXES, 7.

1. An agreement by a contractor for payment in securities, which when accepted would waive a lien, does not before payment prevent an inchoate lien under Ky. act 1888, creating mechanics' liens, but providing that they shall not attach unless a statement is furnished for filing within a time specified. Central Trust Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 458

2. The waiver of a lien by a contractor will not affect subcontractors' liens under Ky. act 1888, which gives liens to "all persons who perform labor or furnish labor or materials . . . by contract . . . or by subcontract thereunder," independent of that of the main contractor. Id.

41 L. R. A.

3. A provision for payment to a contractor in instalments is not binding on subcontractors so as to affect their rights to a lien under a statute giving them liens independent of that of the main contractor. Id.

4. The distribution among subcontractors of the original contract price, which is the limit of aggregate liens, should be made upon the basis of the entire lienable claim of each subcontractor, and payments by the owner to each of them must be applied thereon up to the amount of his share, when made in the progress of the work, although no lien therefor had been perfected. Id.

5. The price for which railroad bonds were sold by a contractor when indorsed by another railroad company in consideration of the stock of the company which issued them is, for the purpose of determining the extent of subcontractors' liens, to be deemed their value to the contractor, where he took the stock and bonds in payment, although the indorsement was afterwards adjudged to be invalid and the stock had no market value. Id.

6. The money value of a contract for railroad construction, calling for payment in bonds and stock is, for the purpose of fixing the limit of subcontractors' liens, the market value of the bonds and shares when actually delivered in pursuance of the contract. Id.

7. The time when the last labor was performed by the claimant, and not by other lienors, is that from which to compute the time for filing his claim under the Kentucky lien act of 1883, § 4, requiring a statement "within sixty days after the last day of the last month in which any labor was performed." Id.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. See MANDAMUS, 8.LIFE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE, 17.LIGHTS. See RAILROADS, 8, NOTES AND BRIEFS.LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also CORPORATIONS, 8.

1. A foreign corporation having its residence in another state is not entitled to the benefit of the statute of limitations. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 557

2. The absence from the state of a principal debtor does not suspend the running of the statute of limitations in favor of his surety. Moisingo v. Ross (Ind.) 612

3. A partial payment by a principal debtor will not suspend the running of the statute of limitations in favor of his surety. Id.

4. Payments by the maker of a note will not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations as to an indorser, under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 6796, which provides that nothing contained in the two preceding sections (which require an acknowledgment or promise to be in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, and that a person shall not be bound by an acknowledgment or promise of a joint obligor) "shall alter, take away, or lessen the effect of the payment of any principal or interest made by any person." Maddox v. Duncan (Mo.) 581

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Payments by maker to interrupt statute as to indorser. 582

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT. See FIRE DEPARTMENT; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LOGS. See WATERS, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LOTTERY. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11; INDICTMENT.

Ignorance of the fact that the articles which a person has in his possession are policy books and slips, which it is an offense for him to have under Md. Laws 1894, chap. 810, § 178, does not constitute any defense. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus to state officers whose terms expire pending the proceeding cannot be enforced against their successors unless they are substituted as parties, and this may be done under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1930. People, Broderick, v. Morton (N. Y.) 381

2. A mandamus will not issue to compel the performance of an act by the governor of the state. Id.

3. Mandamus to the Lieutenant governor and speaker of the assembly may be issued when the legislature is not in session. Id.

4. The duty of railroad companies to construct or repair viaducts within a city may be enforced by mandamus. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

5. The operation of a street railway can be enforced by mandamus where a company which has acquired the right and commenced to perform the service attempts to discontinue it. State, Grinsfelder, v. Spokane Street R. Co. (Wash.) 515

6. One who lives adjacent to a street railway and owns considerable property there, which he has improved, relying upon the facilities afforded by the line, has a material individual interest which entitles him to be a relator in mandamus to enforce the operation of the line. Id.

7. A prior demand for the operation of a street railway is not absolutely necessary to sustain a proceeding for mandamus to compel its operation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; to governor and other state officers. 281

To compel operation of carrier's line. 515

In case of discretion. 817

MANUFACTURES. See TAXES, 3.

MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MARSHALING ASSETS AND SECURITIES.

Claims having a common security take pro rata on their full amount without deduction. 41 L. R. A.

tion for payments made by the debtor on account of his personal liability. Central Trust Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 458

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CIVIL RIGHTS; TRIAL, 12.

1. The fall of an additional staging constructed on the main staging in a building by an employee of the builder, at the request of an employee of a manufacturer who had come to put up ornamental work made on the builder's order, does not render the manufacturer liable to his employee who was injured by the fall of the staging, where he was told when sent to do the work that the builder would see to the staging, although he was assured by his foreman that it would be entirely safe. Channon v. Sanford Co. (Conn.) 200

2. Failure to equip freight cars with self-couplers constitutes negligence per se. Greenlee v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 899

3. An extension of time procured from the Interstate Commerce Commission by railroad companies for placing self-couplers upon freight cars merely relieves the companies from the penalty provided in the Act to Regulate Commerce, but does not relieve them from the legal liability to employees for failure to provide suitable appliances in general use. Id.

Incompetence of servant.

4. A master who has used due care in employing a servant, and has properly instructed him, has no further duty until he receives notice of conduct which denotes incompetency. Walkowski v. Penokes & G. Consoel Mines (Mich.) 88

5. Incompetence which will render an employer liable for the act of an employee injuring a coemployee is not shown by the mere fact that, after operating the machinery correctly for seven months, he, at the time of the injury, forgot and turned it the wrong way. Id.

6. An employer is not chargeable with notice that one employed to manage the brake controlling the passenger cage connected with a mine has become incompetent, from the fact that the engineer thought that he ran the cage too fast, if there is nothing to show that the information had reached the employer. Id.

7. Due care in employing a boy seventeen years old to manage the brake controlling the passenger cage connected with a mine is shown by the facts that the machinery is simple and easily managed, and that the employer makes due inquiry as to the applicant's experience and ability, and receives satisfactory replies before employing him. Id.

8. Negligence is not shown by the mere fact of employing a boy seventeen or eighteen years old to manage the brake controlling the passenger cage connected with a mine. Id.

Assumption of risk.

9. A brakeman's knowledge that cars are not furnished with self couplers does not make him assume the risk by continuing in the service and coupling the cars in the course of his duty. Greenlee v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 398

Contributory negligence.

10. Contributory negligence of a brakeman in coupling cars will not preclude a recovery for injury caused by the absence of self-couplers, which constituted continuing negligence of the master, and existed subsequently to his negligence. Id.

Independent contractor.

11. The negligence of an independent contractor or his employee, in blasting out a ledge of rock which extends close up to the wall of a building on adjoining property is not chargeable to his employer, who engaged him to excavate the lot preparatory to building thereon. Berg v. Parsons (N. Y.) 391

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Relation of servant while working for third person. 202

Negligence of railroad company as to employees. 400

Knowledge as an element of an employer's liability to an injured servant:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) actual knowledge; (III.) constructive knowledge; (IV.) rule when the dangerous condition is due to the act of a stranger or of a fellow servant, or to the operation of some abnormal physical force; (V.) imputed knowledge of probable future events; (VI.) circumstances charging an employer with knowledge of the condition of his instrumentalities; (VII.) duty of active inspection of instrumentalities when first used; (VIII.) duty of active inspection of instrumentalities while in use; (IX.) employer's duty to know the character and capacity of his servants; (X.) employer's duty as to the supervision of appliances not owned by him, but used by his servants; (XI.) assignability of the duty of inspection; (XII.) employer's liability qualified by the servant's duty to acquaint himself with his environment; (XIII.) whose knowledge is imputed to the employer; (XIV.) duties of a master after learning of a danger to which his servant is exposed; (XV.) knowledge as an element of liability under statutes; (XVI.) pleading; (XVII.) burden of proof; opinions as evidence; (XVIII.) instructions. 38

Liability for negligence of independent contractor. 391

Criminal and penal liability for act of servant. 650

MAXIMS.

1. Damnum absque injuria. Barnard v. Shirley (Ind.) 787

2. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Spier v. Baker (Cal.) 196

3. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. Coleman, B. & W. Co. v. Dannenberg Co. (Ga.) 470

4. Ignorance of the law excuses no one. State v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 246

5. One should be prevented from reaping an advantage from his own wrong. Mason v. State, McCoy (Ohio) 291

6. Res ipsa loquitur. Benedick v. Potts (Md.) 478

41 L. R. A.

7. Respondeat superior. Berg v. Parsons (N. Y.) 391

8. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. State v. Griffin (N. H.) 177

MECHANIC'S LIEN. See LIENS.

MERCANTILE AGENCY. See COPY-RIGHT, 3; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

MERGER. See CORPORATIONS, 2.

MERRY-GO-ROUND.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction against, by municipality. 323

MILITIA. See CERTIORARI, 2.

MILL. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 3.

MIMIC RAILWAY. See EVIDENCE, 10.

MINES. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 6-8.

MONOPOLY. See CONTRACTS, 7, 9.

MORTGAGE. See INSURANCE, 13; TAXES, 7.

MOTION. See JUDGMENT, 1.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also BICYCLES; CIVIL SERVICE, 4; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4, 15; EJECTMENT; FIRE DEPARTMENT; HIGHWAYS, 3, 5; INJUNCTION, 6; RAILROADS, 1, 3; STATUTES, 6; STREET RAILWAYS, 1.

1. The legislature may select any means for the administration of a municipal government which it thinks best adapted to that end, and may provide for the election of municipal officers by the people, or authorize any officers or persons to fill the offices by appointment. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

2. Ordinances, to be valid, must be reasonable and must spring from an honest exercise of legislative discretion. Id.

3. The authority of a public corporation is limited to such powers as are expressly granted to it, and such as may become necessary to their exercise. Ogden City v. Bear Lake & R. Waterworks & Irrig. Co. (Utah) 305

Local self-government.

4. The right of local self-government in cities and towns was not surrendered upon the adoption of the Constitution of Nebraska, and cannot be taken away by the legislature. State, Smyth, v. Moores (Neb.) 624

5. The attempt to confer authority upon the governor to appoint fire and police commissioners in cities of the metropolitan class, which is made by Neb. Laws 1897, chap. 10 (Neb. Comp. Stat. chap. 12a), is void as an unlawful attempt to deprive the people of such cities of the right of local self-government. Id.

Requiring lights on railroad tracks.

6. The kind of light that shall be employed by a railroad company to light its track in a city or village may be prescribed by ordinance. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Bowling Green (Ohio) 422

7. The daily period for which electric lights are required to be furnished by a railroad company at crossings is prescribed with sufficient definiteness by an ordinance requiring the lights during the number of hours of each day that the common council requires for electric lamps to light streets. Id.

8. The fact that the particular kind of lamp and attachments which an ordinance requires to be used by a railroad company for lighting its track is subject to patents the exclusive right to use which in that place is owned by a corporation does not make the ordinance unreasonable as subjecting the railroad company to extortion, as the municipality has authority to fix the rates to be charged for lights, and can compel them to be furnished at a reasonable price. Id.

Lease or transfer of waterworks.

9. The right to lease or otherwise transfer its waterworks system or its water right, used in supplying its inhabitants with water, is not conferred upon a city by a charter provision authorizing it in general terms to lease, convey, and dispose of property, real and personal, for its benefit. Ogden City v. Bear Lake & R. Waterworks & Irrig. Co. (Utah) 805

Destruction of property.

10. A village is not liable for the acts of its trustees in destroying property to avert an imminent public injury, as they are not its servants or agents within the principle of respondet superior. Aitken v. Wells River (Vt.) 566

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RAILROADS; WATERS.

Municipal corporations; right of local self-government. 625

Right to transfer waterworks of. 807

Liability for destruction of property by officers of. 567

NAME. See GOODWILL; TRADENAME.

NEGLIGENCE. See also CARRIERS, 2-4; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES; ELEVATORS; EVIDENCE, 9-11, 23; FIRE, 1; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2, 3; MASTER AND SERVANT; TRIAL, 7-10.

1. There can be no actionable negligence where there is no duty. O'Leary v. Brooks Elevator Co. (N. D.) 677

2. Gratuitous lenders of brackets for use in a staging are not liable for injury to a servant of the borrower, caused by a defect in the brackets of which the lender did not know, even though he should have known of it. Gagnon v. Dana (N. H.) 889

3. The negligence of a railroad company in keeping oil on a station platform is not concurrent with the careless act of a man who starts a fire by dropping a match. Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. (Mass.) 794

Toward licensees or trespassers.

4. An owner owes no duty of protection 41 L. R. A.

to a trespasser upon his land, when such trespass is unknown to him and is not in any manner induced by his negligence. O'Leary v. Brooks Elevator Co. (N. D.) 677

5. A landowner is ordinarily under no obligation to a mere licensee or trespasser to keep his premises in a safe condition; and this is the rule even if the licensee or trespasser is an infant of tender years. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich (N. J. Err. & App.) 831

6. An invitation is not extended to children to enter on private premises, by erecting thereon for beneficial use a structure which happens to be attractive to them. Id.

7. A turntable located upon the private property of a railroad company near a public street, though entirely unprotected and unguarded so that children of all ages congregate there to play upon it, does not make the railroad company liable to answer for injury received by a child while playing upon it. Id.

8. The protruding ends of wire which was wound around the knuckle of a shaft or tumbling rod to keep wedges in place, at a place 6 or 8 feet from a driveway to a grain elevator, along which there was a railing, and which was partly boarded up, but not so that people could not pass through, do not render the owner of the premises liable to a child who was injured while trespassing on the premises, although children sometimes went there to play and tramps sometimes resorted there. O'Leary v. Brooks Elevator Co. (N. D.) 677

9. A child is not relieved from the responsibility of its negligence when trespassing, because the trespass was committed under the control or coercion of a parent or guardian. Id.

Imputed.

10. Negligence of the parent or guardian having custody and control of an infant, in exposing it to danger, will not be imputed to the child so as to preclude its right of action against a third person by whose negligence it is injured. Evansville v. Senhenn (Ind.) 728

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; as to condition of article loaned. 389

Toward licensee or trespasser. 678

By parents, imputed to children. 728

As to turntable on which children play. 833

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. See BILLS AND NOTES.

NEGROES. See CIVIL RIGHTS; COMMERCE, 1.

NEW TRIAL.

1. An obvious effort of the court to drive the members of the jury into an agreement requires a new trial, if they agree. People v. Sheldon (N. Y.) 644

2. Refusal of an instruction presenting a question raised by the pleadings and the evidence is sufficient ground for setting aside a verdict. Hurt v. Ford (Mo.) 823

NOTARY.

A woman is ineligible to the office of notary public under Ohio Const. art. 15, § 4, requiring an officer to be an elector, and art. 6, § 1, requiring an elector to be a male citizen. State, Monnett, v. Adams (Ohio) 727

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notaries; eligibility of women to be. 727

NOTICE. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 6.

A payee of checks is not charged with knowledge that they have been stolen or embezzled and collected upon forged indorsements by his clerk, either because the clerk had that knowledge or because the means of such knowledge were in books of account from which the discovery would have been made if monthly trial balances had been made by an honest clerk. Shepard & M. Lumber Co. v. Eldridge (Mass.) 617

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notice; by means of knowledge. 618

NUISANCES. See also INJUNCTION, 6, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisances; criminal or penal liability for maintenance of, by servant, agent, or partner. 655

OFFICE. See CRIMINAL LAW, 2.

OFFICERS. See also CIVIL SERVICE; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 12; MANDAMUS; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5; TRIAL, 1.

1. The ousting of a person from office, declaring the office vacant and his election thereto void, under Ohio act April 8, 1896, § 7, to prevent corrupt practices at elections, is not a punishment, but operates upon the election to the office, and is therefore not in conflict with Ohio Const. art. 6, § 4, giving to the general assembly the power to make a person ineligible to office for conviction of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime. Mason v. State, McCoy (Ohio) 291

2. The trial of charges against officers for their removal is not within the constitutional provision for trial by jury. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

3. The official acts of a de facto officer cannot be collaterally attacked. Cleveland v. McCanna (N. D.) 852

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CIVIL SERVICE.

Officers; removal of. 775

Restricting exercise of constitutional office. 838

OIL. See NEGLIGENCE, 2.

ORDINANCE. See EVIDENCE, 16.

PANEL. See JURY, 1.
41 L. R. A.

PARENT AND CHILD. See DEATH, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PARTIAL PAYMENT. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 3, 4.

PARTIES. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1-4.

PARTNERSHIP. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1.

A partner is not liable for the penalty imposed by Ala. Code, § 8296, for "wilfully and knowingly" cutting trees of another person, when this is done without his consent or knowledge, by his copartner. Williams v. Hendricks (Ala.) 650

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; criminal and penal liability for act of partner. 650

PASS. See CARRIERS, 9, 10.

PASSENGERS. See CARRIERS.

PATENTS. See also CONTRACTS, 2, 3.

A regulation of the sale of patent rights by Kan. Laws 1889, chap. 182, requiring the vendor of such rights to file copies of his patent with the clerk of court, with an affidavit that the patent is genuine and unrevoked and that he is authorized to sell, and providing that the words "given for a patent right" shall be inserted in any written obligation taken from a vendee,—is a reasonable police regulation which does not violate the Federal Constitution or infringe upon the exclusive right secured to a patentee by Federal law. Mason v. McLeod (Kan.) 548

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Patent; state regulation of transfers of rights in. 548

PAYMENT. See also ASSUMPSIT; LIENS, 3; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 3, 4.

1. Partial payments to a subcontractor by the principal contractor should be applied on that portion of the claim which may not be covered by the subcontractor's lien, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the lien. Central Trust Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 458

2. Payments made according to stipulation, of 90 per cent of the estimates, which are subject to correction, of the amount due under a contract to a subcontractor, do not absolutely discharge 90 per cent of the liability for work done up to that time, so as to prevent a subcontractor's lien therefor, but are to be applied merely as partial payments on what is due the subcontractor. 12

PEDDLERS. See also COMMERCE, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Peddlers; who are; requirement of license. 501

PENALTY. See also CARRIERS, 7; CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS; PARTNERSHIP.

A penalty is in the nature of punishment for the nonperformance of an act or for the performance of an unlawful act, and involves the idea of punishment, whether enforced by a civil or criminal action or procedure. Hall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 669

PHYSICIANS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 39; DAMAGES, 2.

1. One already practising medicine by virtue of a license issued under the old law is not entitled to a new certificate and license as a matter of course under the Indiana law of March 8, 1897, but the board of registration and examination can inquire whether his former license was rightfully obtained, and also whether he is a fit person to practise medicine. State, Burroughs, v. Webster (Ind.) 212

2. The practice of Christian Science, consisting of prayer for divine assistance, the encouragement and direction of the thoughts of the patient, without recommending or administering any drug or medicine, or giving him any course of physical treatment, is not a violation of R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 165, prohibiting the practice of medicine or surgery in any of its branches without a certificate from the state board of health. State, Swarts, v. Mylod (R. I.) 428

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Physicians; requiring license; law requiring new license. 212

PLEADING.

1. An allegation of the ownership of a water right is not insufficient because it fails to state how the ownership was acquired, whether by appropriation, adverse user, or purchase. Hagus v. Nephi Irrig. Co. (Utah) 311

2. A general denial is sufficient to raise a defense of the statute of frauds. Hurt v. Ford (Mo.) 828

3. A demurrer does not distinctly specify the objection under Hill's (Or.) Ann. Laws, § 68, by stating that there is "a defect of parties plaintiff and defendant." State, McCain, v. Metcahan (Or.) 692

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading; as to master's knowledge as element of liability. 145

PLUMBERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16, 28.POLES. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 6; STREET RAILWAYS, 1.POLICE POWER. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN, 3.PONDS. See EASEMENTS; WATERS, 3.POOR AND POOR-LAWS.

An action by a county for indemnity 41 L. R. A.

out of the funds belonging to a lunatic may be brought against the lunatic and her guardian, when, by the latter's neglect, the county has been compelled to provide for her as a pauper. McNairy County v. McCain (Tenn.) 862

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Poor; liability of estate of person on implied contract to pay for his support as a poor person. 862

POSSESSION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11; TRIAL, 2.PRESCRIPTION. See EASEMENTS.PRIMARIES. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 4-7.PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal and penal liability for act of agent. 650

PROHIBITION.

1. Prohibition is no longer a matter of sound discretion, but a matter of right, and lies in all proper cases, whether there is other remedy or not, in view of W. Va. Code, chap. 110, § 1, providing that it shall lie as a matter of right in all cases of usurpation and abuse of power, when the inferior court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy, or, having such jurisdiction, exceeds its legitimate powers. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co. (W. Va.) 414

2. A justice of the peace cannot take jurisdiction of a cause of action after the repeal of the statute which conferred jurisdiction upon him in such class of actions, under the pretense of deciding whether such statute has been in fact repealed or not; and he may be restrained by prohibition from entertaining such an action. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Prohibition; against excess of power of court. 415

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. A wind existing at the time a building is set on fire is not an intervening cause of the burning of another building to which the fire is carried. Lillibridge v. McCann (Mich.) 381

2. Negligence in storing oil upon a station platform and permitting it to remain there in violation of statute is not the proximate cause of damage by a fire which is started by the careless dropping of a match by a man who comes to the platform to deliver goods, and who is in no sense a servant, agent, or guest of the railroad company. Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. (Mass.) 794

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause; of damage by fire. 383

Of loss by fire. 794

PUBLICATION. See COPYRIGHT, 2.

QUO WARRANTO.

A proceeding under the Missouri corrupt practices act of March 31, 1893, brought by the attorney general on the initiative of the defeated candidate, who by § 10 is required to specify the charges under the act, is not a proceeding by quo warranto instituted by the attorney general ex officio, but is a special proceeding subject to the limitations and restrictions of the statute. State, Crow, v. Bland (Mo.) 297

RAILROADS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 24; DAMAGES, 1; EMINENT DOMAIN; LIENS, 5, 6; MANDAMUS, 4; MASTER AND SERVANT, 2, 3, 9, 10; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6-8; NEGLIGENCE, 7.

1. Failure to include lessees of railroads in an ordinance requiring the owners of the roads to repair a viaduct over streets does not make the ordinance void, where the charter authorizes the city to require such repairs by the railroad companies "owning or operating" separate lines of track. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, Omaha (Neb.) 481

2. An ordinance requiring the reconstruction by two railroad companies of specific portions of a viaduct previously erected by them jointly with the city is a valid exercise of the power given by the charter of Omaha (Neb. Comp. Stat. chap. 12a, § 48). Id.

3. A railroad company may be required by ordinance to light a road which it operates, at its intersection with certain streets in a city or village, although it is neither the owner nor the lessee of the track. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Bowling Green (Ohio) 422

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Railroads; compelling roads to light their tracks in city. 422

RATES. See CARRIERS, 6-8; CORPORATIONS, 1.

RECEIVERS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 1.

1. A receiver will not be appointed to take possession of property and charge of business in the hands of a defendant, unless the plaintiff's right is sufficiently probable, or when it is not probable that such property will be lost or will sustain injury during the suit if it is left in defendant's hands, or that the business will be mismanaged. Ogden City v. Bear Lake & R. Waterworks & Irrig. Co. (Utah.) 805

2. A receiver appointed in another state may by comity be allowed to sue on a demand due him, when the suit will not injuriously affect the interests of the citizens of the state in which the suit is brought or violate its policy or laws. Castleman v. Templeman (Md.) 367

3. A receiver to whom a court of competent jurisdiction orders the payment of assessments by stockholders has no authority to consent to a decree in another state for the payment of such obligations to the creditor in whose suit he was appointed. Id.

41 L. R. A.

4. The adoption by receivers of a street-railway company of the use of metal safes for receiving fares, into which the passengers are required to put their fare while the conductor presses a button which rings a bell and registers the fare, is a detail in the management of the road which is within the discretion of the receivers, and will not be controlled by the court. Morley v. Snow (Mich.) 817

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receivers; comity as to powers of, in other state. 368

Discretion of court as to control of. 817

REFERENDUM. See STATUTES, 1.

RELEASE. See INSOLVENCY, 4, 5.

RELIGION. See SUNDAY.

REPLEVIN.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

For property severed from realty. 682

RESTAURANT. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

RESUME.

For Resumé of Contents of Book, see 865

REVOCATION. See CORPORATIONS, 3; INSURANCE, 1.

SAFETY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunctions by municipality against nuisance affecting. 322

SALE. See FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, 1.

SAWDUST. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 26.

SCHOOLS. See also GOODWILL; HOUSE OF CORRECTION, 2; TRADENAME.

1. School children may be suspended from a public school by the board of education in charge, although the children have not been guilty of any violation of the rules of school, if their father or mother enters the school during school hours and, in the presence of the assembled scholars, uses offensive or insulting language to a teacher, in undertaking to call in question or interfere with the discipline of the teacher over one of the children. Cartersville Bd. of Edu. v. Puras (Ga.) 593

2. The exclusion of women from the principalships of grammar schools for boys, or mixed or combined grammar schools, is within the discretion of the Philadelphia board of education, which is empowered to determine the qualifications of teachers and classify or grade them. Com., Scott, v. Board of Public Education (Pa.) 498

3. Teachers are not included in the provision of Pa. Const. art. 10, § 8, that "women twenty-one years of age and upwards shall be eligible to any office of control or management under the school laws." Id.

4. The power of the sectional boards of school directors to elect principals of grammar schools under Pa. act May 25, 1871 (P. L. 1157), applicable to Philadelphia, is subject to the prior acts on the same subject which authorize the board of education to provide the qualifications of all teachers, and grade and classify them into principals and others, and to classify each grade. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Schools; regulation as to selection of teachers. 499

Right to exclude, suspend, or expel pupils from school for misconduct of pupil or parent:—(I.) Where the parent's action affects the child; (II.) for misconduct of pupil; (III.) for absence and tardiness; (IV.) for connection with secret societies; (V.) for failure to participate in certain studies and exercises; (VI.) for refusal to perform manual labor; (VII.) controlling conduct of pupil after the relation of teacher and pupil has ceased; (VIII.) questions of pleading and practice. 593

SELF-COUPERS. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 2, 8.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Mutual judgments cannot be set off one against the other in such a manner as to defeat the exemption laws, where all the property of one of the judgment debtors, including his judgment against the other, is less than the amount of property which the statute exempts from seizure. Cleveland v. McCanna (N. D.) 852

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Set-off; of judgments; effect of exemption. 852

SHOOTING. See EVIDENCE, 20; TRIAL, 6.

SIDEWALK. See HIGHWAYS, 4.

SIGNATURE. See BANKS, 6.

SITUS. See GARNISHMENT, 1.

SLAVES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Slaves; criminal liability for dealing of partner, agent, or servant with. 658

SPEAKER OF ASSEMBLY. See MANDAMUS, 3.

STAMP. See BANKS, 6.

STARE DECISIS. See COURTS, 11.

STATE. See also ESTOPPEL, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

State; admission of, as recognition of its government. 625

STATE INSTITUTIONS. See also COURTS, 5.

An insane asylum maintained by the 41 L. R. A.

state is a public institution of the state, within the meaning of Or. Const. art. 14, § 8, locating such institutions at the seat of government. State, McCain, v. Metchan (Or.) 692

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See CONTRACTS, 1.

STATUTES. See also CORPORATIONS, 1; COURTS, 4; DEFINITION.

1. An unconstitutional provision for disqualifying a person convicted under civil service law from holding office can be eliminated without invalidating its other provisions. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

2. The words "for other purposes," in the title of a statute, have no effect under Cal. Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that a statute shall have but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, and provisions on other subjects shall be void. Spier v. Baker (Cal.) 196

3. Provisions as to political conventions, and nominations thereby and voting therein, and as to expenditures by candidates and the placing of names on official ballots, are void when made in a statute providing for general primary elections. Id.

4. A statute to operate only in cities which adopt it by vote of the people is not unconstitutional as special legislation. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

5. Penal statutes must be construed strictly. Hall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 669

6. Legislation making municipalities liable to actions where no liability existed at common law should be construed most favorably to such corporations and against the claimant for damages. Schaefer v. Fond du Lac (Wis.) 287

7. The clearly expressed prohibition of free transportation of favored passengers in N. C. Acts 1891, chap. 320, cannot be modified by any practical construction put upon the law by the carrier and officials who have received passes. State v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 246

8. Strict construction should be given to the Missouri corrupt practices act of 1898, which provides not only for the forfeiture of office, but for punishment of violations of the law as felonies and misdemeanors. State, Crow, v. Bland (Mo.) 297

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CURATIVE ACTS.

Statutes; special acts as to corporations. 338

STEAM ENGINE. See INSURANCE, 5.

STEPPATHER. See DEATH, 2, 8.

STREET RAILWAYS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14; CORPORATIONS, 1; ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5; HIGHWAYS, 1, 2; INTERJUNCTION, 2; MANDAMUS, 5-7; RECEIVERS, 4.

1. A municipal corporation has no power to make a contract with a street-railroad company which will prevent the legislature from regulating its rates of fare. Indianapolis v. Navin (Ind.) 387

2. A street-railway company which has received from the state, and entered upon the enjoyment of, a franchise for its business, cannot cease to operate the line without the consent of the granting power. State, Grinsfelder, v. Spokane Street R. Co. (Wash.) 515

8. The absence of any grant or privilege or franchise to operate a street railway will not relieve a company which has occupied the streets for such purpose for several years, without objection, from the duty to continue the service. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; compelling operation of. 515

SUBCONTRACTOR. See LIENS; PAYMENT, 1.

SUBROGATION. See TAXES, 7.

SUCCESSION TAX. See TAXES, 8, 9.

SUICIDE. See EVIDENCE, 5.

SUNDAY. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 25.

The prohibition of baseball playing on Sunday by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 7082a, does not require or prohibit any religious observance, and therefore does not violate the right of conscience in matters of religion secured to the individual by the Ohio Bill of Rights, § 7. State v. Powell (Ohio) 854

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sunday; criminal liability for Sabbath breaking by agent or servant. 658, 670

Prohibiting ball playing upon. 855

SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE. See CRIMINAL LAW, 8, 4.

SYPHILIS. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 7, 8.

TAXES.

1. Remission or abatement of taxes is within the prohibition of a constitution against exemptions. State, Richards, v. Armstrong (Utah) 407

2. Authority to remit or abate the taxes of any insane, idiotic, infirm, or indigent person to an amount not exceeding $10 for the current year, given to a board of equalization by Utah Rev. Stat. § 2579, is in violation of Utah Const. art. 18, § 2, requiring all property not exempt under the laws of the United States or under that Constitution to be taxed in proportion to value. Id.

8. A corporation is not engaged in "carrying on manufacture," within the meaning of an exemption from taxes, when its business is that of purchasing, slaughtering, and selling sheep and lambs, although it utilizes the hides, wool, tallow, and offal, as well as the carcasses of the animals, and prepares and sells them as refrigerated mutton, rendered tallow, pulled wool, untanned hides, and fertilizer made of the offal, including the blood and legs. People, New England Dressed Meat & W. Co., v. Roberts (N. Y.) 228

4. No distinction between dividends earned in a state and those earned out of it can be made in the assessment of a foreign corporation under N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 908. Id.

5. The determination of the state controller that an assessment for taxes should be canceled on the ground that the property was not subject to assessment is not res judicata, and does not estop his successor from assessing the same property or franchise in subsequent years. Id.

6. A tax cannot be assessed on nonresident trustees for property held by them outside of the state, under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 6, § 14, cl. 6, as amended by Me. Laws 1889, chap. 175, providing for the assessment of trustees in the place where the person to whom the income is payable is an inhabitant, notwithstanding the fact that they derive their title from a devise under a Maine will through confirmation by a Maine probate court to which they have agreed to render accounts. Augusta v. Kimball (Me.) 475

LIEN.

7. A lien for taxes on property mortgaged for more than it is worth, and afterward conveyed absolutely to the mortgagee in part payment of the debt, cannot be subsequently asserted by the sheriff for previous years during which he failed to collect but accounted for the taxes, when the owner had personal property on the premises from which collection could have been made, as his right of subrogation, if any, is subject to the prior equity of the mortgagee. Allen v. Perrins (Ky.) 351

SUCCESSION TAX.

8. A tax on the succession to property of a deceased person is not a tax upon the property itself, but on the right of succession thereto. Kochersperger v. Drake (Ill.) 446

9. A statute creating classes of the property of deceased persons for the purpose of a succession tax, although it exempts some classes from taxation and provides different rates for other classes, but is uniform as to all property in the same class, does not violate Ill. Const. 1870, art. 9, requiring property to be taxed according to value, since no person can take property by inheritance or devise except by statute, and the power of the state to regulate the question includes the power to create classes of such property. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tax; on trust property held for nonresidents. 475

On inheritance or succession; exemptions. 446

Exemptions, prohibited; contract for remission or abatement. 407

Exemption of manufacturing corporations; what is manufacture. 228

TELEGRAPHS. See also DAMAGES, 1; EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telegraph; use of railroad right of way; exclusive right; compensation. 404

TELEPHONES. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

TERRITORIES. See COURTS, 3.

TIMBER. See PARTNERSHIP.

TOLL ROADS.

Toll from a bicycle rider traveling along a turnpike upon his wheel cannot be collected under authority to collect toll for every carriage drawn by one or more beasts, and to stop any person driving any carriage of burden or pleasure who attempts to pass without paying the toll specified. Gloucester & S. Turnpike Co. v. Leppes (N. J. Sup.) 457

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Toll roads; charge for bicycles. 457

TORT. See CASE.

TRADEMARK. See INJUNCTION, 9, 10, 12.

TRADE NAME. See also GOODWILL.

1. The use of the name "William Bingham School," by the widow and children of William Bingham, does not give cause for complaint to one who conducts a school called the "Bingham School" in another part of the same state. Bingham School v. Gray (N. C.) 248

2. The incorporation of a school under the name of the proprietor does not confer the exclusive right to use that name for a school, or prohibit other persons bearing the same name from using it in connection with other schools which they may establish. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trade name; use of family name for private school. 248

TRANSFER TAX. See TAXES, 8, 9.

TRESPASS. See PARTNERSHIP; WATERS 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

On banks to float logs. 496
Criminal liability for act of servant, agent, or partner. 657

TRIAL. See also BICYCLES; CONTEMPT; OFFICERS, 2.

1. The right to trial by jury does not extend to a proceeding to oust a person from office, as there is no property right involved in the inquiry. Mason v. State, McCoy (Ohio) 291

2. The constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed by a statute making the mere possession of prohibited articles, even without knowing what they were, an offense. Ford v. State (Md.) 551

3. The constitutional provision for trial
41 L. R. A

by jury does not apply to special summary jurisdictions unknown to the common law and not providing for that mode of trial. People, Akin, v. Kipley (Ill.) 775

4. Taking the testimony of the plaintiff at her own home, to which the presiding judge and the jurors go for that purpose, against the defendant's objection, although it cannot be regarded as done in open court, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction or nullify the judgment, but is, at most, an irregularity. Selleck v. Janesville (Wis.) 563

Questions of law or fact.

5. The construction of the words "using coal for fuel, with sufficient wood to kindle or start the fire," when used with reference to steam engines on insured premises, is solely for the court. Thurston v. Burnett & B. D. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 816

6. The reasonableness of an excuse for shooting firearms within the limits of a municipality is a question of fact for the jury, and not for the court. Chesterfield v. Raliff (S.C.) 503

7. Whether the consequences of a negligent act ought to have been foreseen is a question for the jury. Lillibridge v. McCann (Mich.) 381

8. The question of the negligence of a depositor in keeping a rubber stamp which will make a fac simile of his signature, and which is unlawfully obtained and used in forging checks, is a question for the jury. Robb v. Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lives, etc. (Pa.) 695

9. Negligence of a conductor in seizing a passenger to save himself as he stumbled is a question for the jury in an action by the passenger, although the cause of the stumbling is not shown. Whalen v. Consolidated Traction Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 886

10. The negligence or carelessness of a railroad company, and the unfitness or gross negligence or carelessness of its servants or agents, should be submitted to the jury on evidence that a train running at extraordinary speed struck a person as he was attempting to get on a somewhat crowded platform from which passengers were accustomed to take trains, which was across the track from a station, and which was narrow and insufficient for the accommodation of the passengers accustomed to use it. Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) 193

Instructions.

11. If there is any evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that a certain fact exists pertinent to the issues, the trial judge must, if requested, instruct the jury what the law arising from such fact is, even though he may be of the opinion that such fact is not established by a preponderance of the whole evidence. Evansville v. Senhenn (Ind.) 728

12. An instruction that the relation of master and servant did not exist between plaintiff and defendant at the time of an injury to the former should be given where such relation did not in fact exist at such time although it had previously existed, and the accident is alleged to have happened because of defects in brackets gratuitously loaned by defendant to plaintiff's employer at the time for use in a staging. Gagnon v. Dana (N. H.) 889

18. The use by the court of the expression, "where the state makes out such a case as would sustain a verdict of guilty," will not justify an understanding by the jury that guilt may be found upon a preponderance of evidence, if they are expressly told that to convict they must be satisfied of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Thornton (S. D.) 580

Verdict.

14. The old rule permitting coercion of a jury in order to secure a verdict has been swept away, and under our present method the independence of a jury is respected. People v. Sheldon (N. Y.) 644

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; validity of proceedings in course of a trial outside of the courtroom. 563

Temporary absence of judge, when fatal to trial:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) when court consists of single judge; (III.) when court consists of more than one judge. 569

Coercion of jury. 646

Question of negligence on. 288

TROLLEY. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

TROVER.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

For property severed from realty. 632

TRUSTS. See also CHAMPERTY, 3, 4; TAXES, 6.

1. A trustee is liable on contracts made by him in the discharge of the trust, unless he lawfully restricts his liability in the contract itself. Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Grover (N. D.) 252

3. A trustee under a will, who files a bill for the construction of certain clauses in the will, will not be allowed his costs out of the trust fund; if the prayer of a cross bill by the beneficiaries that their action in removing him, which, under the will, they had the power to do, and he had no power to resist, be ratified, is granted, and no construction of the will made. May v. May (D. C. App.) 767

Removal of trustee.

3. A provision in a will creating a trust, giving the beneficiaries power to remove the trustee and appoint another without aid of the courts, for what they may deem good and sufficient cause, is valid, and will be given effect by the courts. Id.

4. Power of removal of a trustee, given the beneficiaries by the will creating the trust, must not be exercised wantonly, capriciously, or arbitrarily, and its exercise may be reviewed by a court of equity. Id.

5. Failure of one of the beneficiaries of a trust to participate in the removal of the trustee under a power contained in a will creating it, required to be exercised by all the beneficiaries, will not render the removal invalid, where such beneficiary is represented by another under a power of attorney, and subsequently ratifies it and all action in the premises. Id.

6. Deep seated and irreconcilable dissension between the beneficiaries of a trust and the trustee, not superinduced for the mere purpose of getting rid of the latter, is sufficient to justify his removal under a power given the beneficiaries by will, even if his conduct is otherwise unobjectionable. Id.

Spendthrift trusts.

7. The interest of the beneficiary under a trust may be made by the author of the trust unassignable and free from subjection to the claims of the beneficiary's creditors. Seymour v. McAvoy (Cal.) 544

8. No interest which can be subjected to the claims of other creditors is given to a testator's widow and unmarried daughter while the widow lives and the daughter remains unmarried, by a will creating a trust under which the trustee is to pay for the widow's support during life and for the daughter's support until her marriage, where he is not directed to pay any money to either of them until the daughter's marriage, although the daughter is given an interest to one fourth of the property contingent upon her marriage, and a right to another fourth contingent upon her surviving her mother. Id.

9. A person cannot place his property in trust with remainder over, reserving to himself the beneficial interest for his life, subject to the expenses of the trust, and thereby put his life interest beyond the reach of subsequent creditors. Schenck v. Barnes (N. Y.) 395

10. A trust created by a debtor under which he is the beneficiary is not affected by 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 780, § 63, which prohibits a person beneficially interested in a trust for the receipt of rents and profits of lands, from assigning, or in any manner disposing of such interest. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; created for benefit of grantor for life; rights of creditors as to. 396

For support; rights of creditors of beneficiary. 544

Removal of trustee; when authorized. 767

TURNTABLE. See also NEGLIGENCE, 7.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Turntables; liability for injury to child on. 832

UNBORN CHILDREN. See also WILLS, 2.

Unborn heirs of a person against whose estate an action is brought to establish claims to which living heirs of the same class are made parties will be regarded as parties by representation, and will be bound by the decree rendered as effectually as if they had actually been parties to the action. Harrison v. Turnbull (Va.) 708

USAGE. See CUSTOM.

USURY. See also INSOLVENCY, 8.

The device of an agreement to pay interest on a loan from the time application is made for it, when the loan is not consummated until some time afterwards, cannot be resorted to for the purpose of preventing the reservation of interest in advance at the highest legal rate from the date to the maturity of the notes from being usurious. Hiller v. Ellis (Miss.) 707

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INSOLVENCY.

Usury; by building association; statute curing taint of. 589

VAULT. See HIGHWAYS, 4.

VIADUCTS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 24; MANDAMUS, 4; RAILROADS, 1, 2.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS. See also QUO WARRANTO; STATUTES, 8.

1. The expenditure to secure the nomination and election of a candidate, of more money than the law permits, if it is done without his knowledge or consent, will not avoid his election under the Missouri corrupt practices act of 1893. State, Crow, v. Bland (Mo.) 297

2. Procuring the withdrawal of a candidate, and the substitution of the name of the candidate of another party as the nominee of the former party also, although it is done by the payment of money and by giving other valuable inducements, and results in procuring additional votes for the fusion candidate, does not constitute a bribery of voters within the meaning of the Missouri corrupt practices act of 1893. Id.

3. A petition in a proceeding under the Missouri corrupt practices act of March 31, 1893, by the attorney general on the application of the defeated candidate, is demurrable if it does not clearly state charges which are made actionable by the act, although it alleges that the defendant is usurping the office. Id.

4. The power of the legislature to require an oath of a bona fide, present intention to support the nominees selected by the delegates there elected, as a test of the right to vote at a primary election, presents a matter demanding most serious consideration, but is not decided in this case. Spier v. Baker (Cal.) 196

5. A primary election provided for by statute is an election "authorized by law," within the meaning of Cal. Const. art. 2, § 1, prescribing the qualifications of electors at all elections authorized by law. Id.

6. The restriction of the right to vote at the primary elections by Cal. act March 13, 1897, § 22, to those whose names appear upon the great or precinct registers, or the supplements thereto, used at the last general election, is unconstitutional, as it excludes various classes of electors who have a constitutional right to vote. Id.

7. The qualifications as to residence of voters at primary elections prescribed by Cal. act March 13, 1897, do not comply with the Constitution, as the only condition they provide is thirty days' residence in the county prior to the election, whereas the Constitution requires residence in the state for one year, in the county ninety days, and in the precinct thirty days, and that naturalized citizens must have been such ninety days. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Elections; legislative regulation of; corrupt practices act. 292, 298

WARRANTS. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

WATERS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 26; EASEMENTS; EMINENT DOMAIN, 2, 3; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9.

1. The right of passage on a navigable stream is a common and paramount one, but must be exercised with due regard to the rights of riparian owners and with ordinary care and skill. Oynes v. Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. (Minn.) 494

2. Floating logs in a navigable stream, if they are driven in an ordinarily careful and prudent manner, will not render the party driving them liable for damage to riparian owners. Id.

3. The right to cross the unimproved land of another person bordering on a great pond, for the purpose of cutting and carrying away ice from the pond, is not conferred by the ordinance of 1641-49, adopted by the Massachusetts Bay Colony, making it "free for any man to fish and fowl there," and to "pass and re-pass on foot through any man's propriety for that end, so he trespass not on any man's corn or meadow." Slater v. Gunn (Mass.) 268

4. Raising the waters of a river beyond the natural, usual, and ordinary high-water mark, for the purpose of improving the navigation, gives a riparian owner whose lands are thereby overflowed a right to damages, although the water is raised by dams constructed under legislative authority. Carlson v. St. Louis River Dam & I. Co. (Minn.) 871

5. The discharge of mineral water from an artesian well, which has been used in a public bath house in bathing and cleansing persons afflicted with infectious, syphilitic, or other similar disorders, by causing it to flow through a tile drain or otherwise into a stream which constitutes the only available drainage therefor unless a sewer is built to a river more than a mile distant, which would cost from $3,500 to $4,000 exclusive of the cost of the right of way, which the owners of the land refuse to grant,—cannot be prevented by injunction at the suit of an owner of land through which such stream runs, even if he is damaged thereby. Barnard v. Shirley (Ind.) 737

Appropriation.

6. The use for domestic and irrigation purposes of larger quantities of water than are necessary therefor does not prevent the subsequent appropriation of the excess by the owner of a mill for manufacturing purposes. Hague v. Nephi Irrig. Co. (Utah) 811

7. The appropriation of more water than is necessary for the beneficial use intended does not prevent the excess from being appropriated by a subsequent appropriator for a useful purpose. Id.

8. A change of the place of diversion of water can be made only when it is done so as not injuriously to affect the rights of other appropriators. Id.

Rates.

9. A schedule of maximum rates in a contract by city with a water company does not bind consumers to the payment of such maximum rates, if they are unreasonable. Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. (N. Y.) 240

10. Discrimination in rates charged to consumers by a water company is unlawful, as the business is affected with a public use. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public right of access to water:—For fishing; for general purposes. 268

Adverse use of stream; place of diversion; for what may be appropriated. 812

Right to use stream for floating logs:—Stream floatable in natural state; what streams are floatable; necessity; artificial channel; construction of statutes; manner of use; as public highways; correlative rights of log and riparian owners; regulations; conflict with other navigation; conflicting rights of floatage; log-driving companies. 871

Liability for injuries to riparian owner by running logs in stream:—Trespass on banks; flooding land; other injuries; excessive floods; contributory negligence; statutes; injunction. 494

41 L. R. A.

Correlative rights of upper and lower proprietors as to use and flow of water in stream:—(I.) General statement of the right; (II.) right to use; (III.) right to flow; (IV.) use for sewer; (V.) right to relief. 737

Statutory protection of water used for supplying municipality. 177

Prohibiting pollution of. 178

Unlawful discrimination in rates; reasonableness of rates. 240

WILLS. See also COURTS, 9; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 5; TRUSTS, 8, 8.

1. The intention to make no provision for a child already born need not be shown by the will itself, under How. (Mich.) Ann. Stat. § 5810, giving such child the right to share as in case of intestacy if "it shall appear that such omission was not intentional but was made by mistake or accident." Carpenter v. Snow (Mich.) 820

2. The intention of a testator that no provision should be made for a child afterwards born, which must "be apparent from the will," under How. (Mich.) Ann. Stat. § 5809, in order to prevent such child from taking as in case of intestacy, is not shown by a provision which gives all property of every kind and nature to testator's wife. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; effect of failure to provide for child; as to children afterwards born. 820

WOMEN. See NOTARY; SCHOOLS, 2, 2.

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 41 L. R. A.

41 L. R. A. 33, WALKOWSKI v. PENOKEE & G. CONSOL. MINES, 115 Mich. 629, 73 N. W. 895.

Master's duty in selection of servants.

Annotation in 41 L. R. A. 33, referred to particularly in Bell v. Globe Lumber Co. 107 La. 734, 31 So. 994, holding railway company liable for negligence of engineer employed without due care.

Duty of warning employees.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 34) on duty of master to instruct and warn servant as to perils of employment.

Duty of observing rules of employment.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 306, 320) on duty of master and servant as to rules promulgated for safe conduct of business.

Assumption of risk.

Cited in notes (49 L. R. A. 34) on contributory negligence in entering or remaining in employment; (47 L. R. A. 165) on volenti non fit injuria, as defense to actions by injured servants.

Burden of explaining accident.

Cited in footnote to Spees v. Boggs, 52 L. R. A. 933, which holds employer not bound to explain cause of elevator injuring employee.

Violation of statutory duty.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 836) on statutory liability of employers for defects in condition of their plant; (48 L. R. A. 71) on liability of employer for injuries received by servants owing to want of blocking at switches.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in footnote to Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 99, which holds miner intrusted with duties of mine boss not fellow servant of other miners.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 435, 436) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment, apart from statutes, where no questions as to vice principalship arise; (54 L. R. A. 52, 55, 75, 102, 166) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury; (51 L. R. A. 568) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

Action by servant against third party.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 45, 50) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties.

41 L. R. A. 154, KIDD v. BATES, 120 Ala. 79, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735.

Qualifications of executors.

Approved on later appeal in 124 Ala. 673, 27 So. 491, sustaining dissolution of injunction against coexecutor on unsubstantiated charges of fraud.

Cited in Re Van Vleck, 123 Iowa, 90, 98 N. W. 557, holding court not bound to appoint executor nominated in will, where he has converted part of property to his own use, and otherwise placed himself in hostility to provisions of will.

Construction of devise.

Approved in Barr v. Weaver, 132 Ala. 218, 31 So. 488, holding devise of "such portion as entitled to under laws" measured by statute of dower and descent.

41 L. R. A. 157, PEOPLE v. SEARCEY, 121 Cal. 1, 53 Pac. 359.

41 L. R. A. 159, CUTLER v. ROYAL INS. CO. 70 Conn. 566, 40 Atl. 529.

41 L. R. A. 162, PILLSBURY-WASHBURN FLOUR MILLS CO. v. EAGLE, 30 C. C. A. 386, 58 U. S. App. 490, 86 Fed. 608.

Injunction against trade names.

Approved in Heller & M. Co. v. Shaver, 102 Fed. 888, and Shaver v. Heller & M. Co. 65 L. R. A. 881, 48 C. C. A. 53, 108 Fed. 826, sustaining injunction against use of term "American," designating washing compound, for unfair competition; California Fruit Cannery Assn. v. Myer, 104 Fed. 83, granting injunction against use of word "California" in designating fruit grown elsewhere; Atwater v. Castner, 32 C. C. A. 80, 50 U. S. App. 394, 88 Fed. 645, sustaining preliminary injunction restraining use of geographic name as trademark, where locality gained its name from trade using it; Colgate v. Adams, 88 Fed. 900, granting injunction restraining use of name "Cashmere" in designating soap manufactured by another; La Republique Francaise v. Saratoga Vichy Springs Co. 65 L. R. A. 832, 46 C. C. A. 420, 107 Fed. 461, granting injunction against use of geographic name "Vichy" in designating mineral waters artificially produced elsewhere; La Republique Francaise v. Schultz, 42 C. C. A. 235, 102 Fed. 155, holding use of geographical name "Vichy (Grand Grille)" for artificial mineral water, unfair competition; Illinois Watch Case Co. v. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. 35 C. C. A. 240, 94 Fed. 609, refusing injunction restraining use of geographic name "Elgin" as trademark, without intention to defraud; Williams v. Mitchell, 45 C. C. A. 268, 106 Fed. 171, holding injunction proper to restrain use of descriptive name "Carbons" when used for deception; Draper v. Sherrett, 116 Fed. 208, granting injunction against use of words "French Tissue," designating medicinal paper, when used in unfair competition; Russia Cement Co. v. Katzenstein, 109 Fed. 316, granting injunction restraining use of trade name by retailer in designating inferior article manufactured by same company.

Cited in American Washboard Co. v. Saginaw Mfg. Co. 50 L. R. A. 615, 43 C. C. A. 239, 103 Fed. 286, denying injunction against use of word "Aluminum," where no injury shown; Bauer v. Siegert, 56 C. C. A. 490, 120 Fed. 84, holding geographical name cannot be usurped by manufacturer, who so dresses his goods as to palm them off for those of another manufacturer having established reputation under same name; Chickering v. Chickering & Sons, 56 C. C. A. 479, 120 Fed. 73, holding one may not use own name to designate goods in manner calculated to confuse them with those of another manufacturer having established reputation.

Cited in footnote to Fuller v. Huff, 51 L. R. A. 332, which sustains right to enjoin use of term "health food" for foods previously known as "sanitarium foods."

Distinguished in Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Fred Miller Brewing Co. 87 Fed. 865, granting injunction restraining use of geographical name when adopted for unfair competition.

Enjoining use of distinctive trade bottle.

Approved in Van Hoboken v. Mohns, 112 Fed. 530, granting injunction against refilling distinctive gin bottles with inferior article; Charles E. Hires Co. v. Consumers' Co. 41 C. C. A. 74, 100 Fed. 812, granting injunction restraining use of peculiar bottle, for deception.

Parties to actions.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 C. C. A. 7, 128 Fed. 7, holding railroad company having right of action of equitable nature against number of land owners interfering in same manner with right of way entitled to have right determined as to all in one suit.

41 L. R. A. 175, COMMERCIAL BANK v. CHESHIRE PROVIDENT INST. 59 Kan. 361.

Acts ultra vires.

Approved in Ward v. Joslin, 186 U. S. 149, 46 L. ed. 1098, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 807, Affirming 44 C. C. A. 458, 105 Fed. 226, holding ultra vires, guaranty of paper by loan and trust company not in due course of business; Morissette v. Howard, 62 Kan. 467, 63 Pac. 756, holding corporation may dispose of property with view of discontinuing, when necessary, stockholders consenting thereto.

41 L. R. A. 177, STATE v. GRIFFIN, 69 N. H. 1, 76 Am. St. Rep. 139, 39 Atl. 260.

Legislative police regulations.

Approved in State v. Dow, 70 N. H. 288, 53 L. R. A. 316, 47 Atl. 734, sustaining statute prohibiting trout fishing for trade purposes; Gooch v. Exeter, 70 N. H. 414, 85 Am. St. Rep. 637, 48 Atl. 1100, sustaining statute creating town board of police commissioners authorized to employ officers and fix pay; State v. Aldrich, 70 N. H. 392, 85 Am. St. Rep. 631, 47 Atl. 602, sustaining statute prohibiting bicycle riding on sidewalks by persons over twelve years of age.

Liability for polluting stream.

Cited in footnotes to Weston Paper Co. v. Pope, 56 L. R. A. 899, which sustains liability for pollution of stream by discharge from strawboard works, though business skilfully conducted; People v. Hulbert, 64 L. R. A. 265, which sustains right of upper riparian owner to bathe in lake from which municipality takes its water supply.

41 L. R. A. 185, LUFKIN RULE CO. v. FRINGELI, 57 Ohio St. 596, 63 Am. St. Rep. 736, 49 N. E. 1030.

Contracts in restraint of trade.

Cited in footnotes to Clark v. Needham, 51 L. R. A. 785, which holds void, lease of manufacturing machinery with agreement against lessor engaging in business for five years; Tuscaloosa Ice Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 50 L. R. A. 175, which holds void, contract by owner of ice machine to abandon manufacture of ice in certain town for five years, giving other party monopoly of business; Anchor Electric Co. v. Hawks, 41 L. R. A. 189, which sustains contract by officers of different corporations not to engage for five years in any competing business; Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 46 L. R. A. 255, which sustains vendor's agreement not to engage in competitive business for fifty years within United States, except specified states and territories; Swigert v. Tilden, 63 L. R. A. 608, which sustains contract by seller of good will of business not to be connected with competing business for ten years; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co. 64 L. R. A. 298, which sustains contract by one selling right to manufacture and sell machine invented by him to make, or transfer to others right to make, such machines; Steichen v. Fehleisen, 51 L. R. A. 412, which holds individual partners not bound by firm agreement not to re-engage in certain business for specified period; Pohlman v. Dawson, 54 L. R. A. 913, which holds agreement on sale of business, not to engage in barber business in any manner, violated by working as employee in other shop.

41 L. R. A. 189, ANCHOR ELECTRIC CO. v. HAWKS, 171 Mass. 101, 68 Am. St. Rep. 403, 50 N. E. 509.

Contracts in restraint of trade.

Approved in Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 74, 58 N. E. 174, sustaining contract prohibiting sale of proprietary medicine by retailer below stipulated price; Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L. R. A. 919, 53 C. C. A. 489, 116 Fed. 309, granting injunction restraining violation of covenant not to engage in competing business for five years within 1,500 miles; National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Haberman, 120 Fed. 417, sustaining contract in restraint of competition, unlimited as to time and covering entire country; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co. 72 N. H. 406, 64 L. R. A. 300, footnote p. 298, 57 Atl. 97, upholding validity of contract of inventor not to engage for twenty years in business of manufacturing machine sold, where customers limited and scattered; Swigert v. Tilden, 121 Iowa, 658, 63 L. R. A. 612, 100 Am. St. Rep. 374, 97 N. W. 82, holding agreement of vendor of shirt factory not to engage in same business within limited territory for ten years, not invalid; Trentman v. Wahrenburg, 30 Ind. App. 313, 65 N. E. 1057, holding agreement of dealer in building material, upon sale of business, not to engage in same business in county, nor purchase commodity of other persons than vendee, for five years, reasonable restriction.

Cited in footnotes to Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli, 41 L. R. A. 185, which holds void, agreement by seller not to engage in same business for twenty-five years in United States; Tuscaloosa Ice Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 50 L. R. A. 175, which holds void, contract by owner of ice machine to abandon manufacture of ice in certain town for five years, giving other party monopoly of business; Clark v. Needham, 51 L. R. A. 785, which holds void, lease of manufacturing machinery with agreement against lessor engaging in business for five years; Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 46 L. R. A. 255, which sustains vendor's agreement not to engage in competitive business for fifty years within United States, except specified states and territories; Swigert v. Tilden, 63 L. R. A. 608, which sustains contract by seller of good will of business not to be connected with competing business for ten years; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co. 64 L. R. A. 298, which sustains contract by one selling right to manufacture and sell machine invented by him to make, or transfer to others right to make, such machines; Pohlman v. Dawson, 54 L. R. A. 913, which holds agreement on sale of business, not to engage in barber business in any manner, violated by working as employee in other shop; Steichen v. Fehleisen, 51 L. R. A. 412, which holds individual partners not bound by firm agreement not to re-engage in certain business for specified period.

41 L. R. A. 193, YOUNG v. NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. CO. 171 Mass. 33, 50 N. E. 455.

What constitutes passenger.

Cited in footnotes to Exton v. Central R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 509, which holds purchaser of ticket a passenger while using depot for purpose of journey; Phillips v. Southern R. Co. 45 L. R. A. 163, which holds one coming to station with intent to take next train, a passenger; Keator v. Scranton Traction Co. 44 L. R. A. 546, which holds woman with transfer ticket, injured by breaking of trolley pole while she is approaching car, a passenger; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 54 L. R. A. 827, which holds one with ticket, crossing tracks on highway to board train on further track, not a passenger; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Laloge, 62 L. R. A. 405, which holds intending passenger resorting to station unreasonable time before train's departure not entitled to protection as passenger from assaults of strangers.

Rights of passengers.

Cited in footnote to Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. King, 49 L. R. A. 102, which sustains alighting passenger's right to presume against dangerous operation of trains.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Judge v. Elkins, 183 Mass. 230, 66 N. E. 708, holding person negligent in walking upon track in front of stationary electric coal car, which, if he had looked, he might have seen was about to start.

41 L. R. A. 194, STANDARD LIFE & ACCI. INS. CO. v. CARROLL, 30 C. C. A. 253, 58 U. S. App. 76, 86 Fed. 567.

What constitutes extra hazard.

Cited in footnotes to Willey Casualty Co. v. Sheppard, 47 L. R. A. 650, which holds barber not engaged in more hazardous occupation while hunting rabbits as incident to daily life; Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 41 L. R. A. 467, which holds riding on locomotive by invitation will not prevent being passenger within accident policy.

Evidence; application for insurance.

Approved in National Acci. Soc. v. Dolph, 38 C. C. A. 2, 94 Fed. 744, holding accident insurance contract not within statute against admissibility of application or by-law in evidence.

Distinguished in Zimmer v. Central Acci. Ins. Co. 207 Pa. 475, 56 Atl. 1003, holding policy against loss of life by accident is life policy within act excluding evidence of application, unless attached to policy.

41 L. R. A. 196, SPIER v. BAKER, 120 Cal. 370, 52 Pac. 659.

Statutes; sufficiency of title.

Distinguished in People v. Linda Vista Irrig. District, 128 Cal. 485, 61 Pac. 86, holding title of irrigation statute sufficient to include provision for ascertaining validity of organization of district contemplating issue of bonds.

Legislative regulation of primaries.

Approved in Britton v. Election Comrs. 129 Cal. 340, 61 Pac. 1115, holding unconstitutional, statute interfering with free choice of delegates by political party.

Cited in Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 180, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457, 66 Pac. 714, sustaining statute requiring primary elections for selection of delegates to nominating conventions; Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 188, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457, 66 Pac. 714, sustaining statute imposing restrictions upon right to vote at party primaries.

41 L. R. A. 200, CHANNON v. SANFORD CO. 70 Conn. 573, 66 Am. St. Rep. 133, 40 Atl. 462.

Duty to furnish safe place and implements.

Cited in McBeath v. Rawle, 192 Ill. 629, 61 N. E. 847, sustaining recovery for death of workman by scaffold breaking; Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co. 140 Cal. 570, 74 Pac. 147, holding foundry company sending servant to premises of electric company to roll tubes for defective boiler entitled to assume boiler without defect making it dangerous place to work when steam turned off.

Cited in footnote to Gagnon v. Dana, 41 L. R. A. 389, which denies liability of gratuitous lender of brackets for injury to borrower's servants from unknown defect.

Who liable as master.

Cited in footnotes to Stewart v. California Improv. Co. 52 L. R. A. 205, which holds owner of steam roller liable for engineer's neglect to warn travelers, though roller hired by city; Swackhamer v. Johnson, 54 L. R. A. 625, which holds hirer of workmen furnished to third person not liable for their trespass in cutting stranger's timber.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in footnote to Murray v. Dwight, 48 L. R. A. 673, which holds servant of truckman unloading goods at warehouse not fellow servant of warehouseman's servants.

41 L. R. A. 204, CHAMBERLIN'S APPEAL, 70 Conn. 363, 39 Atl. 734.

Construction of wills by probate courts.

Approved in Mack's Appeal, 71 Conn. 129, 41 Atl. 242, holding probate courts may determine validity of bequests, only as incident to order of distribution; Eliot's Appeal, 74 Conn. 601, 51 Atl. 558, holding that in absence of objection to form of proceeding in probate court to determine validity of devise, reasons of appeal from decree of that court would be given effect of complaint in equitable action.

Title of administrator de bonis non.

Cited in Ives v. Beecher, 75 Conn. 154, 52 Atl. 746, holding executor or administrator de bonis non necessary party to suit to foreclose lien of judgment rendered in favor of predecessor in title.

41 L. R. A. 208, MOORE v. DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, 12 App. D. C. 537.

Reasonableness of ordinance or regulation.

Approved in District of Columbia v. Hazel, 16 App. D. C. 287, holding apportionment of cab stands presumed reasonable, subject to proof to contrary.

Bicycle law.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 289, 292) on bicycle law.

41 L. R. A. 211, MARSHALL v. MACON SASH, DOOR & LUMBER CO. 103 Ga. 725, 68 Am. St. Rep. 140, 30 S. E. 571.

Parent's action for death of child.

Cited in Robinson v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 117 Ga. 169, 60 L. R. A. 556, 97 Am. St. Rep. 156, 43 S. E. 452, holding statute giving mother right of action for homicide of child will not support action for death of illegitimate child.

Cited in footnotes to Brink v. Wabash R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 811, which denies right to recover for nonperformance of contract to support parent, through negligent killing of son; Hennessy v. Bavarian Brewing Co. 41 L. R. A. 385, which sustains mother's right of action for wrongful death of child notwithstanding remarriage and stepfather's assumption of parental obligations.

41 L. R. A. 212, STATE ex rel. BURROUGHS v. WEBSTER, 150 Ind. 607, 50 N. E. 750.

Statutes regulating practice of medicine.

Approved in Ferner v. State, 151 Ind. 251, 51 N. E. 360, sustaining statute creating board of dental examiners, though not providing appeal; People v. Reetz, 127 Mich. 89, 86 N. W. 396, sustaining statute regulating practice of medicine; Bragg v. State, 134 Ala. 182, 58 L. R. A. 931, 32 So. 767, upholding constitutionality of statute prohibiting practice of medicine without certificate of qualification from board of medical examiners; State v. Wilcox, 64 Kan. 792, 68 Pac. 634, upholding constitutionality of statute regulating practice of medicine, surgery, and osteopathy; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 503, 47 L. ed. 565, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, upholding power of state to make reasonable provisions for determining qualifications of those engaging in practice of medicine, and to punish violation of such statutes; Parks v. State, 159 Ind. 221, 59 L. R. A. 195, 64 N. E. 862, upholding validity of statute regulating practice of medicine, which in effect prohibits one from practising magnetic healing; Curryer v. Oliver, 27 Ind. App. 426, 60 N. E. 364, sustaining action for revocation of physician's license; Parks v. State, 159 Ind. 221, 59 L. R. A. 195, 64 N. E. 862, sustaining statute requiring license of persons holding themselves out as healers or medical practitioners; Bragg v. State, 134 Ala. 182, 58 L. R. A. 931, 32 So. 767, sustaining statute forbidding practice of medicine without license from medical examiners; State Bd. of Health v. Roy, 22 R. I. 542, 48 Atl. 802, sustaining statute permitting state board to refuse or revoke physician's certificate; Meffert v. State Bd. of Medical Registration, 66 Kan. 715, 72 Pac. 247, holding board of medical examiners does not perform judicial functions in trial of charges against physician.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Wilson, 52 L. R. A. 679, which holds one prosecuted for unlawful practice of medicine required to prove compliance with statute; Scholle v. State, 50 L. R. A. 411, which sustains statute requiring license for physicians, except certain classes of persons; Mathews v. Murphy, 54 L. R. A. 415, which holds void, statute authorizing state health board to revoke physician's license for unprofessional conduct, without fixing standard; State ex rel. Kellogg v. Currans, 56 L. R. A. 253, which sustains requirement of examination of graduate of foreign medical college not required of graduates of college in state; State v. Bair, 51 L. R. A. 776, which sustains statute requiring examination before state board of examiners practise for five years, or certificate from medical school, as condition to right to practise medicine.

Jurisdiction of appeal from medical examiners.

Approved in Re Coffin, 152 Ind. 440, 53 N. E. 458, holding circuit court proper tribunal of appeal from decision of state board of medical examiners refusing to license.

Separation of powers.

Cited in Ellis v. Steuben County, 153 Ind. 92, 54 N. E. 382, holding statute requiring exercise of judgment by county surveyor in re-allotment of county drains not unconstitutional as imposing judicial functions on ministerial officers.

Class legislation.

Distinguished in Dixon v. Poe, 159 Ind. 498, 60 L. R. A. 310, 95 Am. St. Rep. 309, 65 N. E. 518, holding statute prohibiting issue of checks or tokens, by merchants to coal miners which may be payable otherwise than in money, invalid as class legislation.

41 L. R. A. 219, NEAF v. PALMER, 103 Ky. 406, 45 S. W. 506.

Injunction for suppression of criminal acts.

Cited in footnotes to Blagen v. Smith, 44 L. R. A. 522, which sustains right to injunction against maintenance of house of ill fame; Weakley v. Page, 46 L. R. A. 552, which sustains right of person specially injured to have house of ill fame abated as nuisance; State v. O'Leary, 52 L. R. A. 299, which denies state's right to injunction to suppress gambling house.

Enjoining prosecution under ordinance.

Cited in footnote to Paulk v. Sycamore, 41 L. R. A. 772, which denies injunction against prosecution for violation of statute or ordinance.

41 L. R. A. 219, KNAUER v. LOUISVILLE, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 193, 45 S. W. 510, 46 S. W. 701.

41 L. R. A. 222, FARMERS' LOAN & T. CO. v. KILLINGER, 46 Neb. 677, 65 N. W. 790.

Followed without discussion in Baker v. Killinger, 46 Neb. 682, 65 N. W. 791.

Effect of opening judgment.

Cited in McAnulty v. National Life Asso. 6 Lack. Legal News, 129, holding opening of default judgment against corporation does not vacate it so as to bar further prosecution of action, where corporation dissolved since entry of default.

41 L. R. A. 228, PEOPLE ex rel. NEW ENGLAND DRESSED MEAT & WOOL CO. v. ROBERTS, 155 N. Y. 408, 50 N. E. 53.

Followed without discussion in People ex rel. Schwarzschild & S. Co. v. Roberts, 156 N. Y. 690, 50 N. E. 1121.

What constitutes manufacturing.

Approved in People ex rel. L. E. Waterman Co. v. Morgan, 48 App. Div. 400, 63 N. Y. Supp. 76, holding domestic corporation exempt from taxation as manufacturer when producing fountain pen from purchased parts; Hernischel v. Texas Drug Co. 26 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 61 S. W. 419, holding wholesale drug company engaged in bottling drugs purchased not "factory" within ordinance requiring fire escapes; Re White Star Laundry Co. 117 Fed. 571, holding laundry not within statute giving Federal courts jurisdiction, for adjudication of bankruptcy over corporations "engaged principally in manufacturing," etc.; People ex rel. Eastern Bermudez Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morgan, 61 App. Div. 379, 70 N. Y. Supp. 516 (dissenting opinion), majority holding corporation exempt from taxation as manufacturing when producing paving compound from asphalt, sand, etc.

Cited in footnote to Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co. 64 L. R. A. 645, which holds building, sale, and repairing of vessels employed in commerce within statute permitting institution of bankruptcy proceedings against corporations engaged principally in manufacturing and mercantile pursuits.

Taxation of capital stock and franchises.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 45, 107) on taxation of corporate franchises in United States; (58 L. R. A. 549, 587, 604) on taxation of capital stock of corporations in United States; (64 L. R. A. 40, 55, 65) on taxation of manufacturing corporations in United States.

Assessment of property for purposes of taxation.

Approved in People ex rel. Journeay & B. Co. v. Roberts, 37 App. Div. 3, 55 N. Y. Supp. 317, holding that comptroller cannot arbitrarily reject testimony as to value of foreign corporation's assets in determining tax; Rockefeller v. Taylor, 28 Misc. 462, 59 N. Y. Supp. 1038, holding that town assessors may properly incur expense of defending assessment when attacked.

Cited in People ex rel. Eckerson v. Zundel, 157 N. Y. 518, 52 N. E. 570, holding assessors not bound by judgment against predecessors on former assessment.

Interpretation of official duty.

Cited in People ex rel. State Charities v. New York Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to children, 161 N. Y. 271, 55 N. E. 1063, dissenting opinion by Martin, J., who holds public officers not relieved from plain duty by predecessor's erroneous interpretation.

41 L. R. A. 231, PEOPLE ex rel. BRODERICK v. MORTON, 156 N. Y. 136, 66 Am. St. Rep. 547, 50 N. E. 791.

Application denied on second mandamus to reinstate in Re Broderick, 25 Misc. 536, 56 N. Y. Supp. 99.

Judicial supervision of acts of state officials.

Approved in People ex rel. Smith v. Hoffman, 166 N. Y. 476, 54 L. R. A. 601, 60 N. E. 187, holding governor not proper party to certiorari to review determination of military board of examination; Hartigan v. West Virginia University, 49 W. Va. 17, 38 S. E. 698, holding courts cannot review action of state board of regents removing professor.

Cited in State ex rel. State Pub. Co. v. Smith, 23 Mont. 49, 57 Pac. 449, holding mandamus lies against governor to control exercise of ministerial duty; State ex rel. Trauger v. Nash, 66 Ohio St. 617, 64 N. E. 558, sustaining mandamus compelling governor to perform ministerial act, though not controlling discretion in performance thereof.

Referred to in State ex rel. Higdon v. Jelks, 138 Ala. 122, 35 So. 60, for discussion of question whether courts have right by mandamus to compel action by governor in any case.

Coercing judicial action.

Approved in Gough v. Satterlee, 32 App. Div. 39, 52 N. Y. Supp. 492, holding private individuals cannot by contract require courts to decide irrelevant issues; Re Atty. Gen. 32 Misc. 8, 66 N. Y. Supp. 129, holding expression "order shall be granted" means "may be," as legislature cannot coerce judicial action.

Cited in Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 102, 56 L. R. A. 860, 61 N. E. 118, sustaining statute requiring granting of attorney general's application for order of examination "to secure" testimony.

Abatement of mandamus by change of officers.

Cited in People ex rel. Cunliffe v. Cram, 30 Misc. 564, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1027, holding mandamus proceeding not abated by appointment of new dock board; People ex rel. Hatch v. Lantry, 88 App. Div. 584, 85 N. Y. Supp. 193, Reversing 40 Misc. 429, 82 N. Y. Supp. 261, holding where mandamus proceedings against head of municipal department, for reinstatement of employee, is abated by retirement of defendant, successor in office cannot be substituted as defendant before further demand for reinstatement.

Jurisdiction in mandamus.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 866) on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus case.

41 L. R. A. 240, GRIFFIN v. GOLDSBORO WATER CO. 122 N. C. 206, 30 S. E. 319.

Discrimination by public service companies.

Cited in Mobile v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 130 Ala. 385, 30 So. 445, granting injunction preventing discriminations in terms and rates for water service; Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co. 130 Fed. 252, holding water company cannot refuse to furnish water to person engaged in street sprinkling, on ground that he is not inhabitant of city; Snell v. Clinton Electric Light, H. & P. Co. 196 Ill. 631, 58 L. R. A. 286, 89 Am. St. Rep. 341, 63 N. E. 1082, holding lighting company cannot make discriminations in conditions for supplying electricity; Snell v. Clinton Electric Light, H. & P. Co. 196 Ill. 631, 58 L. R. A. 286, 89 Am. St. Rep. 341, 63 N. E. 1082, holding electric lighting company charging consumer for "transformer," when same furnished free to other patrons, guilty of unjust discrimination; Solomon v. Wilmington Sewerage Co. 133 N. C. 150, 45 S. E. 536, refusing to dissolve before trial, special injunction against sewer corporation threatening to cut plaintiff's connection, in default of payment of unreasonable and discriminative rates.

Actions for breach of municipal contract.

Approved in Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 124 N. C. 334, 46 L. R. A. 516, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, 32 S. E. 720, sustaining action by citizen damaged by fire through breach of municipal contract for water supply; Guardian Trust & D. Co. v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 115 Fed. 190, holding citizen may sue in tort or on contract when damaged by breach of municipal contract for water supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 114) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Evidence of value of water works plant.

Cited in Kennebec Water District v. Waterville, 97 Me. 207, 60 L. R. A. 804, 54 Atl. 6, holding, upon condemnation proceedings to acquire plant of water company, proof of actual cost of the property, with allowance for depreciation, is competent evidence of present value.

41 L. R. A. 243, BINGHAM SCHOOL v. GRAY, 122 N. C. 699, 30 S. E. 304.

Use of personal name in trade.

Cited in footnotes to Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb Glove & Mitten Co. 44 L. R. A. 841, which denies right to use own name so as to deceive public as to business rightfully engaged in by another; Nolan Bros. Shoe Co. v. Nolan, 53 L. R. A. 384, which sustains right of one using family name as trade name to prevent deceptive use of name by other member of same family; Ranft v. Reimers, 60 L. R. A. 291, which holds seller of good will of business entitled to resume business under own name.

41 L. R. A. 246, STATE v. SOUTHERN R. CO. 122 N. C. 1052, 30 S. E. 133.

Later appeal in 126 N. C. 1073, 35 S. E. 619, dismissing appeal for lack of jurisdiction.

Followed without discussion in State v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 122 N. C. 1074, 30 S. E. 1005.

Discrimination by carriers.

Cited in State v. Southern R. Co. 125 N. C. 670, 34 S. E. 527, sustaining statute making it indictable offense to furnish free transportation; McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 720, 67 L. R. A. 229, 47 S. E. 765 (dissenting opinion), majority reversing 132 N. C. 513, 95 Am. St. Rep. 641, 44 S. E. 34, and holding pass issued to editor in exchange for advertising within statute imposing penalty for "unjust discrimination," and that person riding thereon not passenger for hire.

41 L. R. A. 252, WELLS-STONE MERCANTILE CO. v. GROVER, 7 N. D. 460, 75 N. W. 911.

Liability of trustee.

Cited in Scott v. Jones, 9 N. D. 551, 84 N. W. 479, holding trustee not liable for loss under terms of trust deed; Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Aultman, M. & Co. 9 N. D. 522, 84 N. W. 375, holding that trustee may require beneficiaries to refund dividends to reimburse himself for necessary expenses.

L. R. A. AV.—VOL. IV.—50.

total loss to be such injury as destroys identity and specific character of building, as such.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 790, 793) on constructive total loss of insured building.

Distinguished in McCready v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 61 App. Div. 586, 70 N. Y. Supp. 778, holding total loss not established when remnant of structure justifies rebuilding.

41 L. R. A. 321, RED WING v. GUPTIL, 72 Minn. 259, 71 Am. St. Rep. 485, 75 N. W. 234.

Abatement of public nuisance.

Cited in footnotes to St. Louis v. Galt, 63 L. R. A. 778, which sustains ordinance requiring cutting of weeds on city lots; State v. Hyman, 64 L. R. A. 637, which holds prohibition against use of room in tenement or dwelling house for manufacture of clothing, except by immediate member of family, within police power.

Cited in notes (42 L. R. A. 825) on injunctions by municipalities against nuisances on highways and streets; (51 L. R. A. 657, 660) on right of municipality to maintain suit to enjoin or abate nuisance.

41 L. R. A. 331, LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. NASH, 118 Ala. 477, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181, 23 So. 825.

Effect of judgment against garnishee.

Cited in footnote to Balk v. Harris, 45 L. R. A. 257, which holds debtor garnished outside of state not protected in paying debt after returning to domicile.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 134) on effect of judgment against garnishee to merge or satisfy liability of principal debtor.

Garnishment proceedings against nonresidents.

Approved in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Steiner, 128 Ala. 354, 30 So. 741, holding garnishment not applicable to debt of foreign corporation neither made nor performed within state; Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 109 Ga. 355, 77 Am. St. Rep. 382, 34 S. E. 597, holding debt subject to garnishment is one due and payable at creditor's domicile; Kress v. Porter, 132 Ala. 581, 31 So. 377, holding situs of property levied on determines validity of attachment against nonresident neither served nor appearing; Boyle v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 88 Minn. 464, 97 Am. St. Rep. 538, 93 N. W. 520, holding judgment not subject to attachment by garnishment in court of another state having no jurisdiction of judgment creditor, and referring particularly to annotation in 41 L. R. A. 331; Stewart v. Northern Assur. Co. 45 W. Va. 742, 44 L. R. A. 105, footnote p. 101, 32 S. E. 218, which holds judgment against garnishee on contract utterly void at domicile of nonresident debtor not personally served, no protection.

Cited in footnotes to Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 62 L. R. A. 178, which holds nonresident summoned as garnishee while temporarily within state not subject to further proceedings unless he has property within state; Swedish American Nat. Bank v. Bleecker, 42 L. R. A. 283, which denies jurisdiction of garnishment of foreign insurance company for loss occurring in other state, where defendant served by publication, and company by service on insurance commissioner; Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L. R. A. 120, which holds right to garnish debtor not limited to situs of chose in action; Strause Bros. v. Ætna Ins. Co. 48 L. R. A. 452, which holds debt of insurance company for loss in other state without situs, where company has agent, for garnishment purposes, in third state; Hawley v. Hurd, 52 L. R. A. 195, which sustains discrimination between banks in and out of state as to attachment of negotiable paper.

What constitutes due process.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 581) on what service of process is sufficient to constitute due process of law.

41 L. R. A. 333, KANSAS CITY, P. & G. R. CO. v. STATE, 65 Ark. 363, 67 Am. St. Rep. 933, 46 S. W. 421.

Carrier's liability for loss of baggage.

Cited in footnote to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Matthews, 60 L. R. A. 846, which holds carrier liable for loss of or damage to samples in possession of traveling salesman, checked as baggage.

41 L. R. A. 335, SAN FRANCISCO v. GROTE, 120 Cal. 59, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155, 52 Pac. 127.

Right of ejectment.

Approved in Fresno Street R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 135 Cal. 203, 67 Pac. 773, holding right of ejectment not sustained by proof of right of way over highway, based upon mere incorporeal franchise or easement under grant of county board of supervisors; Southern P. Co. v. Hyatt, 132 Cal. 246, 54 L. R. A. 526, 64 Pac. 272, holding ejectment lies against wrongful possession of any part of railroad company's right of way.

Cited in footnotes to Cahill v. Cahill, 60 L. R. A. 706, which holds possessory rights only will not sustain ejectment without showing legal title; Bork v. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. 64 L. R. A. 836, which sustains right of owner to maintain ejectment against steam railroad constructed in street without legislative authority.

What constitutes dedication.

Cited in Los Angeles v. Kysor, 125 Cal. 465, 58 Pac. 90, holding dedication for park not established by designation on recorded map, in absence of acceptance.

41 L. R. A. 337, INDIANAPOLIS v. NAVIN, 151 Ind. 139, 156, 51 N. E. 80, 47 N. E. 525.

Municipal control of public utilities.

Approved in Coverdale v. Edwards, 155 Ind. 381, 58 N. E. 495, sustaining right of municipality to impose restrictions upon use and duration of lighting franchise.

Cited in footnotes to Pingree v. Michigan C. R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 274, which denies power of legislature to fix rates of carrier upon which previous legislature conferred exclusive power to fix its rates; Re Janvrin, 47 L. R. A. 319, which sustains action empowering court to fix maximum water rates on petition of party aggrieved; State ex rel. Bump v. Omaha & C. B. R. & Bridge Co. 52 L. R. A. 315, which holds void, ordinance requiring sale of tickets to residents of city as condition of extending street railway franchise.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 144) on privilege of using streets as a contract with in constitutional provision against impairing obligation of contracts.

Population as basis of classification.

Approved in Campbell v. Indianapolis, 155 Ind. 203, 57 N. E. 920, sustaining statute concerning schools in cities of 100,000 inhabitants, though but one such when adopted; Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 175, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457, 66 Pac. 714, sustaining law regulating primaries in cities having 10,000 inhabitants at "last state or Federal census;" Harmon v. Madison County, 153 Ind. 72, 54 N. E. 105, sustaining statute making salaries dependent upon amounts turned into county treasury, though not graded directly according to population.

Exercise of legislative discretion.

Cited in Carolina Grocery Co. v. Burnet, 61 S. C. 211, 58 L. R. A. 689, 39 S. E. 381, holding applicability of general law judicial, and not legislative, question; Re Bank of Commerce, 153 Ind. 462, 47 L. R. A. 491, 53 N. E. 950, holding neither local nor general law subject of legislative judgment when involving powers expressly withdrawn; State ex rel. Lewis v. Smith, 158 Ind. 577, 63 L. R. A. 131, 63 N. E. 25, referring to force attaching to construction of Constitution by session of legislature having in its personnel a considerable number of members of constitutional convention.

Disapproved in State v. Hammond, 66 S. C. 223, 44 S. E. 797, holding it to be judicial question whether general law can be made applicable to particular subject of legislation.

What constitutes local or special legislation.

Approved in Schneck v. Jeffersonville, 152 Ind. 226, 52 N. E. 212, sustaining act legalizing city bonds as not local or special legislation; Owen County v. Spangler, 159 Ind. 579, 65 N. E. 743, holding act making statute limiting authority to issue bonds for improvement of highway inapplicable to counties having population between 15,000 and 15,050, within constitutional provision prohibiting local or special highway legislation; Smith v. Indianapolis Street R. Co. 158 Ind. 435, 63 N. E. 849, holding act authorizing certain city to contract with street railway for extension of rights and franchises not violation of constitutional requirement that corporations be organized under general laws.

Conflicts between state and Federal decisions.

Approved in Re Morgan, 26 Colo. 440, 47 L. R. A. 62, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, holding state courts may disregard Federal decree sustaining statute, when validity under state Constitution questioned; Central Trust Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 82 Fed. 5, holding Federal courts not bound by state decisions where controversy involves Federal and contractual questions.

Validity of act creating office.

Cited in Roth v. State, 158 Ind. 266, 63 N. E. 460, holding office of policeman not within constitutional provision prohibiting legislature creating office with longer term than four years.

41 L. R. A. 345, SNYDER v. FT. MADISON STREET R. CO. 105 Iowa, 284, 75 N. W. 179.

Electric railway as additional servitude.

Cited in Peck v. Schnectady R. Co. 170 N. Y. 312, 63 N. E. 357 (dissenting opinion), majority holding added burden imposed upon property rights in use of street by electric railway.

Cited in footnote to La Crosse City R. Co. v. Higbee, 51 L. R. A. 923, which holds electric street railroad pole in city street not additional burden.

Pleading foreign statutes.

Approved in Green v. Equitable Mut. L. & Endowment Asso. 105 Iowa, 635, 75 N. W. 635, holding foreign statutes need not be pleaded when merely evidence of ultimate facts.

41 L. R. A. 349, WERNER v. WERNER, 59 Kan. 399, 68 Am. St. Rep. 372, 53 Pac. 127.

41 L. R. A. 351, ALLEN v. PERRINE, 103 Ky. 516, 45 S. W. 500.

41 L. R. A. 353, ROSE v. ROSE, 104 Ky. 48, 84 Am. St. Rep. 430, 46 S. W. 524.

Referred to for history of case in Deposit Bank v. Rose, 113 Ky. 948, 69 S. W. 967.

Legislation affecting vested rights.

Approved in Mitchell v. Violet, 104 Ky. 81, 47 S. W. 195, holding vested right of curtesy initiate not divested by subsequent legislation; Phillips v. Farley, 112 Ky. 839, 66 S. W. 1006, upholding power of legislature to take away husband's estate by the curtesy in wife's realty before birth of child; Mundo v. Anderson, 109 Ky. 149, 58 S. W. 520, holding married woman, awarded right by judgment to deal with own property as if single, may be bound as husband's surety, notwithstanding prohibition of married woman's act.

Cited in footnote to Gladney v. Sydnor, 60 L. R. A. 880, which holds right to convey or encumber homestead without wife's co-operation, a vested one which cannot be destroyed by legislature.

41 L. R. A. 362, HAGGETT v. HURLEY, 91 Me. 542, 40 Atl. 561.

Contracts between husband and wife.

Approved in Pinkham v. Pinkham, 95 Me. 76, 85 Am. St. Rep. 392, 49 Atl. 48, holding wife cannot release dower right during coverture, under statutes permitting contracts with husband.

Distinguished in Peaks v. Hutchinson, 96 Me. 533, 53 Atl. 38, sustaining contract between husband and wife whereby former retains title to stable erected on latter's land.

Disapproved in Hoagland v. Henderson, 119 Iowa, 728, 61 L. R. A. 759, footnote p. 750, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247, holding that husband and wife have power to enter into contract of copartnership with each other.

41 L. R. A. 367, CASTLEMAN v. TEMPLEMAN, 87 Md. 546, 67 Am. St. Rep. 363, 40 Atl. 275.

Rights of foreign receivers.

Approved in Stockley v. Thomas, 89 Md. 666, 43 Atl. 766, denying receivership for insolvent foreign insurance corporation when only asset within state consists of unenforceable assessments; Barley v. Gittings, 15 App. D. C. 439, holding foreign receiver may be permitted to sue or intervene as matter of privilege;

Small v. Smith, 14 S. D. 623, 86 Am. St. Rep. 807, 86 N. W. 649, permitting foreign receiver of foreign corporation to sue for assets, no rights of resident creditors intervening.

Cited in Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Price, 88 Md. 164, 42 L. R. A. 208, 41 Atl. 53, holding creditor may proceed by attachment notwithstanding appointment of foreign receiver; Linville v. Hadden, 88 Md. 598, 43 L. R. A. 224, 41 Atl. 1097, holding creditor of foreign corporation may proceed by attachment, excepting as to citizens of state appointing receiver.

41 L. R. A. 371, CARLSON v. ST. LOUIS RIVER DAM & IMPROV. CO. 73 Minn. 128, 72 Am. St. Rep. 610, 75 N. W. 1044.

Use of streams for floating logs.

Approved in Gravel v. Little Falls Improv. & Nav. Co. 74 Minn. 419, 77 N. W. 217, holding public right of navigation does not permit erections necessarily producing "log jams" and overflow of lands; Charnley v. Shawano Water Power & River Improv. Co. 109 Wis. 569, 53 L. R. A. 902, 85 N. W. 507, holding lawful, unauthorized dam erected by riparian owner without injuring stream used for floating logs, and referring particularly to annotation in 41 L. R. A. 371; Smith v. Atkins, 110 Ky. 123, 53 L. R. A. 791, footnote p. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 424, 60 S. W. 930, denying right of one navigating stream to fasten booms to trees on bank.

Cited in footnotes to Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co. 58 L. R. A. 495, which denies right to discharge water stored along stream to aid drive of logs, so as to overflow banks to injury of riparian owners; Nester v. Diamond Match Co. 52 L. R. A. 950, which holds one running logs down streams estopped to maintain action for obstruction by one whose booms and dams used.

Cited in notes (41 L. R. A. 494, 497) on liability for injuries to riparian owner by running logs in stream; (42 L. R. A. 318) on what waters are navigable.

Liability for damming stream.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 827, 829) on liability for damming back water of stream.

41 L. R. A. 379, DEVLIN v. DALTON, 171 Mass. 338, 50 N. E. 632.

When certiorari lies.

Approved in Sears v. Worcester, 180 Mass. 289, 62 N. E. 269, denying certiorari to quash levy of assessment exceeding adjudged betterment by half a cent.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. Smith v. Hoffman, 54 L. R. A. 597, which holds military examining board a judicial body whose determination is reviewable by certiorari.

41 L. R. A. 381, LILLIBRIDGE v. McCANN, 117 Mich. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 553, 75 N. W. 288.

Liability for unforeseen consequences.

Cited in footnotes to Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlin, 60 L. R. A. 462, which sustains liability for negligence likely to produce injury, though particular injury not anticipated; Hoffman v. King, 46 L. R. A. 672, which denies liability of one negligently starting fire, for damage to lands of remote proprietors to which fire spreads; Osborne v. Van Dyke, 54 L. R. A. 367, which holds one unlawfully beating another liable for injury by unintentional blow on bystander.

Proximate cause of fire.

Cited in footnote to Owen v. Cook, 47 L. R. A. 646, which holds one starting back fire to protect own property not liable for loss which would have resulted from original fire.

41 L. R. A. 385, ZACKERY v. MOBILE & O. R. CO. 75 Miss. 746, 65 Am. St. Rep. 617, 23 So. 434.

Carrier's duty to blind passenger.

Cited in footnote to Southern R. Co. v. Hobbs, 63 L. R. A. 68, which holds carrier liable to partially blind passenger carried beyond her station without having reasonable opportunity to alight, despite conductor's promise to assist her.

41 L. R. A. 385, HENNESSY v. BAVARIAN BREWING CO. 145 Mo. 104, 68 Am. St. Rep. 554, 46 S. W. 966.

Statutory rights of action for personal injury.

Cited in Cole v. Mayne, 122 Fed. 840, holding that under statute giving right of action to widow and lineal heirs, for death of minor, children cannot maintain suit for death of father, if latter leaves widow.

Cited in footnotes to McGarr v. National & P. Wensted Mills, 60 L. R. A. 122, which holds mother caring for family entitled to sue for loss from negligent injuries to minor child; Brink v. Wabash R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 811, which denies right to recover for nonperformance of contract to support parent, through negligent killing of son.

Distinguished in Sharp v. National Biscuit Co. 179 Mo. 558, 78 S. W. 787, holding measure of damages for killing of minor child is compensation for net loss of services, comfort, society, and love of child.

Effect of appellate court decisions.

Approved in Bealey v. Smith, 158 Mo. 522, 81 Am. St. Rep. 317, 59 S. W. 984, holding circuit court bound by decision of court of appeals unless facts essentially differ on retrial; Paddock v. Missouri P. R. Co. 155 Mo. 534, 56 S. W. 453; State ex rel. Funkhouser v. Spencer, 166 Mo. 275, 65 S. W. 981; Brummell v. Harris, 162 Mo. 403, 63 S. W. 497,—holding circuit court bound by decision of court of appeals on retrial of same cause; Paddock v. Missouri P. R. Co. 155 Mo. 534, 56 S. W. 453, holding supreme court not bound by decision of Kansas City court of appeals upon appeal after retrial.

Cited in footnote to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Benz, 58 L. R. A. 691, which holds decision on reversal and remanding of action for personal injuries removed to Federal court, not law of case if action dismissed and new one begun.

Amount in dispute as determining jurisdiction.

Approved in Kane v. Kane, 146 Mo. 607, 48 S. W. 446, holding supreme court without appellate jurisdiction where judgment for defendant on petition not demanding specific amount.

41 L. R. A. 389, GAGNON v. DANA, 69 N. H. 264, 76 Am. St. Rep. 170, 39 Atl. 982.

When relation of master and servant exists.

Cited in footnotes to Stewart v. California Improv. Co. 52 L. R. A. 205, which holds owner of steam roller liable for engineer's neglect to warn travelers, though roller hired by city; Murray v. Dwight, 48 L. R. A. 673, which holds servant of truckman unloading goods at warehouse not fellow servant of warehouseman's servants.

What constitutes waiver of exception.

Approved in Burnham v. Concord R. Co. 69 N. H. 282, 45 Atl. 563, holding exception to refusal of nonsuit for deficiency of evidence waived by proceeding with trial, if either party subsequently supplies deficiency.

41 L. R. A. 391, BERG v. PARSONS, 156 N. Y. 109, 66 Am. St. Rep. 542, 50 N. E. 957.

Liability for independent contractor's negligence.

Approved in Hauser v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 27 Misc. 539, 58 N. Y. Supp. 286, holding company not liable for injury to horse falling through street excavation improperly guarded by independent contractor; Burke v. Ireland, 166 N. Y. 314, 59 N. E. 914, Reversing 47 App. Div. 444, 62 N. Y. Supp. 453, holding owner not liable for collapse of building erected under competent supervising architect and contractor; Uppington v. New York, 165 N. Y. 233, 53 L. R. A. 555, footnote p. 551, 59 N. E. 91, denying city's liability for failure to select best possible route or adopt best possible plan for sewer.

Cited in Deyo v. Kingston Consol. R. Co. 94 App. Div. 581, 88 N. Y. Supp. 487, holding railroad company contracting with fireworks manufacturer for exhibition not liable as master for negligence of latter's employee; Duerr v. Consolidated Gas Co. 86 App. Div. 23, 83 N. Y. Supp. 714, holding owner liable for act of independent contractor done under direction of former's engineer; Hoff v. Shockley, 122 Iowa, 726, 64 L. R. A. 541, footnote p. 538, 101 Am. St. Rep. 289, 98 N. W. 573, holding property owner not liable for injuries to traveler by obstructions placed in street, without danger signals, by independent contractor for construction of building; Hesketh v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 37 App. Div. 89, 55 N. Y. Supp. 898 (dissenting opinion), majority holding company bound to utmost care in using new signal device erected by construction company.

Cited in footnote to Boomer v. Wilbur, 53 L. R. A. 172, which denies owner's liability for injury by fall of bricks through negligence of independent contractor repairing chimney.

Distinguished in Deming v. Terminal R. Co. 169 N. Y. 12, 88 Am. St. Rep. 521, 61 N. E. 983, Affirming 49 App. Div. 496, 63 N. Y. Supp. 615, holding company liable for independent contractor's failure to properly guard or light embankment in highway; O'Rourke v. Feist, 42 App. Div. 137, 59 N. Y. Supp. 157, Affirming 24 Misc. 762, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1110, holding apartment-house owner liable for damage from rain while independent contractor repairing roof; Duerr v. Consolidated Gas Co. 86 App. Div. 21, 83 N. Y. Supp. 714, intimating, without deciding, that owner making artificial accumulation of water is liable for damage from its precipitation upon premises of another in unnatural manner.

Liability for injury by blasting.

Cited in Sullivan v. Dunham, 161 N. Y. 299, 47 L. R. A. 720, 76 Am. St. Rep. 274, 55 N. E. 923, holding owner liable for death of traveler injured on highway by blast upon abutting premises.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. Day, 49 L. R. A. 108, which holds assumption of risk from blasting near by, assumed by one going to sleep on boat at wharf.

Negligence in guarding excavation.

Approved in Dwyer v. McLaughlin, 31 Misc. 512, 64 N. Y. Supp. 380, holding question of negligence in guarding excavation, for jury.

41 L. R. A. 395, SCHENCK v. BARNES, 156 N. Y. 316, 50 N. E. 967.

Rights of creditors in trust property.

Approved in Re Baudouine, 96 Fed. 538, holding surplus income of trust subject to creditor's claims when without directions for accumulation.

Cited in Raymond v. Harris, 84 App. Div. 548, 82 N. Y. Supp. 689, holding beneficiary under trust created by herself may make valid mortgage upon interest; Marshall v. United States Trust Co. 42 Misc. 310, 86 N. Y. Supp. 617, upholding creditor's right to follow debtor's life estate in mortgaged property, after trustee's purchase at foreclosure sale with trust fund, net income of which was payable to debtor.

Cited in footnotes to Scott v. Keane, 42 L. R. A. 359, which holds trust by conveyance and reconveyance for grantor's benefit void as against his creditors; Seymour v. McAvoy, 41 L. R. A. 544, which sustains right of author of trust to make beneficiary's interest unassignable and free from creditors' claims; Murphy v. Delano, 55 L. R. A. 727, which holds income of spendthrift trust not within reach of creditors by void agreement of trustees to pay certain portion of income absolutely to beneficiary; Re Qua v. Graham, 52 L. R. A. 641, which holds annuity in wife's will in lieu of other interest, accepted by husband, not trust beyond reach of creditors; Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 57 L. R. A. 384, which denies power to create equitable life estate free from debts of beneficiary.

Distinguished in Ullman v. Cameron, 92 App. Div. 94, 87 N. Y. Supp. 148, holding testamentary trust giving beneficiary right to principal fund upon contingency named entitles creditor to subject property to payment of debt of beneficiary.

Review by court of appeals.

Approved in Steinway v. von Bernuth, 167 N. Y. 499, 60 N. E. 757, and Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 156 N. Y. 459, 51 N. E. 301, holding court of appeals cannot review abstract questions.

Cited in Blaschko v. Wurster, 156 N. Y. 446, 51 N. E. 363 (concurring opinion), holding certified questions on appeal should be material to controversy.

41 L. R. A. 399, GREENLEE v. SOUTHERN R. CO. 122 N. C. 977, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 30 S. E. 115.

Master's duty as to safety of appliances.

Approved in Elmore v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 875, 44 S. E. 620, on Second Rehearing, Reversing First Rehearing, 131 N. C. 573, 42 S. E. 989, Affirming Original Opinion, 130 N. C. 506, 41 S. E. 786, and holding that where law requires railroad to use automatic coupler, allowing same to be out of repair for unreasonable time is continuing negligence, and cuts off defense of contributory negligence; Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 362, 35 S. E. 611, holding it negligence per se for employer not to furnish approved safety appliances in general use; Harden v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 355, 55 L. R. A. 785, footnote p. 784, 85 Am. St. Rep. 747, 40 S. E. 184, holding owner of interstate railroad liable for injury to employee from use of old style couplers; Troxler v. Southern R. Co. 124 N. C. 191, 44 L. R. A. 314, footnote p. 313, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 32 S. E. 550, holding failure to furnish automatic car coupler for freight cars continuing negligence; Fleming v. Southern R. Co. 131 N. C. 479, 42 S. E. 905, denying that May, 1898, is time fixed as beginning of liability of railroad companies for injuries to employees through failure to equip cars with automatic couplers.

What constitutes assumption of risk.

Cited in Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 415, 57 L. R. A. 843, 40 S. E. 195, holding use of machinery obviously defective no bar to recovery unless amounting to reckless indifference; Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 618, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492, holding employee continuing work does not assume risks arising from master's omission to furnish statutory appliances; Walker v. Carolina C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 741, 47 S. E. 675, and Orr v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 693, 44 S. E. 401, holding that master's failure to furnish reasonably safe appliances is continuing negligence, and servant injured in attempting to perform work with tool furnished does not assume risk; Ausley v. American Tobacco Co. 130 N. C. 40, 40 S. E. 819 (dissenting opinion), majority holding risk assumed by undertaking work with knowledge of defective machinery; Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 128 N. C. 537, 57 L. R. A. 824, 39 S. E. 43, holding doctrine of "assumption of risk" of defective appliance inapplicable to engineer by statute.

41 L. R. A. 403, MOBILE & O. R. CO. v. POSTAL TELEG. CABLE CO. 101 Tenn. 62, 46 S. W. 571.

Exercise of right of eminent domain.

Approved in Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 119, 45 L. R. A. 307, 50 S. W. 744, holding company chartered to facilitate public convenience, etc., charged with public use authorizing exercise of right of eminent domain; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 30 Ind. App. 660, 66 N. E. 919, holding telegraph company authorized to exercise power of eminent domain may acquire right of way along railroad right of way, if use shown not inconsistent with that of railroad.

Cited in footnotes to Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 60 L. R. A. 145, which sustains right to condemn telegraph line over railroad right of way; Diamond Jo Line Steamers v. Davenport, 54 L. R. A. 859, which authorizes condemnation for public wharf of land used by carrier as landing place; Denver Power & Irrig. Co. v. Colorado & S. R. Co. 60 L. R. A. 383, which denies power of reservoir company to condemn land devoted to purpose of railroad unless public necessity requires.

Damages on condemnation of telegraph right of way.

Cited in Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 76 Miss. 746, 45 L. R. A. 226, 26 So. 370, holding diminution by use is measure of damages on condemnation of right of way for telegraph line.

Distinguished in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ohio Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 68 Ohio St. 306, 62 L. R. A. 946, footnote p. 941, 67 N. E. 890, holding measure of damage for taking part of railroad right of way for telegraph is decrease in value in use of right of way for railroad purposes.

41 L. R. A. 407, STATE ex rel. RICHARDS v. ARMSTRONG, 17 Utah, 166, 53 Pac. 981.

41 L. R. A. 410, ANDERSON v. INLAND TELEPH. & TELEG. CO. 19 Wash. 575, 53 Pac. 657.

Liability for injury from electric wires.

Approved in Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 405, 64 S. W. 705, holding that telephone lineman must exercise active diligence to discover defective insulation; Wagner v. Portland, 40 Or. 404, 67 Pac. 300, holding omission to adopt suitable rules for removal of cut electric wires, with view to keeping place to work safe, not in itself negligence.

Cited in footnotes to Mitchell v. Raleigh Electric Co. 55 L. R. A. 398, which sustains telephone company employee's right to presume that electric light wires properly insulated; Boyd v. Portland General Electric Co. 52 L. R. A. 509, which holds want of sufficient assistance to promptly replace wires broken by severe storm not excuse, as matter of law, for delay.

Safety of place and tools, and assumption of risk.

Distinguished in Johnson v. Tacoma Mill Co. 22 Wash. 92, 60 Pac. 53, holding carpenter making repairs in mill entitled to recover for injury from stepping into barrel of hot water having top level with ground; Morton v. Moran Bros. Co. 30 Wash. 368, 70 Pac. 968, holding master liable for injury to land laborer stepping into hole in lower deck of vessel while descending ladder to make repairs, where foreman knew of danger, but failed to give warning; Goldthorpe v. Clark-Nickerson Lumber Co. 31 Wash. 473, 71 Pac. 1091, holding employee using defective appliance under orders from vice principal does not assume risk, where danger not apparent; McDannald v. Washington & C. River R. Co. 31 Wash. 590, 72 Pac. 481, holding conductor thrown against cattle guard in dangerous proximity to track did not assume risk, where danger not known to him.

41 L. R. A. 414, NORFOLK & W. R. CO. v. PINNACLE COAL CO. 44 W. Va. 574, 30 S. E. 196.

Effect of exceeding statutory jurisdiction.

Approved in Hall v. Vernon, 47 W. Va. 301, 49 L. R. A. 467, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 764, holding void, decree of partition of oil and gas owned by co-owners by assignment of gas and oil under sections of surface; Ritchie v. Sayers, 100 Fed. 530, holding void, decree of sale by court having jurisdiction of cause, rendered without requiring statutory bond.

Writ of prohibition.

Approved in Hassinger v. Holt, 47 W. Va. 351, 34 S. E. 728, granting prohibition against judicial interference with ministerial duty of board of education; Board of Education v. Holt, 51 W. Va. 437, 41 S. E. 337, granting prohibition restraining enforcement of injunction against exercise of lawful powers by board of education; Simmons v. Thomasson, 50 W. Va. 660, 41 S. E. 335, granting prohibition preventing enforcement of default judgment rendered without notice or appearance; Yates v. Taylor County Court, 47 W. Va. 383, 35 S. E. 24, granting prohibition restraining enforcement of judgment upon appeal from judgment by justice without jurisdiction; Charleston v. Beller, 45 W. Va. 50, 30 S. E.

152, granting prohibition preventing enforcement of unauthorized judgment for costs.

Cited in Hartigan v. West Virginia University, 49 W. Va. 49, 38 S. E. 698 (dissenting opinion), majority denying writ of prohibition preventing execution of resolution removing professor.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 71, 109) on superintending control and supervisory jurisdiction of superior over inferior or subordinate tribunals.

Distinguished in Ward v. Evans, 49 W. Va. 186, 38 S. E. 524, denying prohibition for error of judgment by justice having jurisdiction, though amount too small for appeal; King v. Doolittle, 51 W. Va. 95, 41 S. E. 145, denying prohibition where full remedy supplied by right of appeal.

41 L. R. A. 419, STACY v. LABELLE, 99 Wis. 520, 67 Am. St. Rep. 879, 75 N. W. 60.

41 L. R. A. 422, CINCINNATI, H. & D. R. CO. v. BOWLING GREEN, 57 Ohio St. 336, 49 N. E. 121.

Followed without discussion in Railway Co. v. Clyde, 45 Ohio St. 572, 63 N. E. 1132.

Compelling railroad to light track.

Approved in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. St. Bernard, 15 Ohio C. C. 594, sustaining statute authorizing municipality to require lighting of railroad tracks; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. St. Bernard, 19 Ohio C. C. 300, holding that statute and ordinance contemplates lighting track without reference to location of lamps.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. St. Bernard, 15 Ohio C. C. 599, holding light required on track must not be of such power as to obscure head lights.

Duties of electric light companies.

Cited in Snell v. Clinton Electric Light, H. & P. Co. 196 Ill. 631, 58 L. R. A. 286, footnote p. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 341, 63 N. E. 1082, denying right to require, as condition of furnishing electricity to building wired by third person, payment for transformer furnished free for building wired by company.

41 L. R. A. 428, STATE ex rel. SWARTS v. MYLOD, 20 R. I. 632, 40 Atl. 753.

Regulation of practice of medicine.

Cited in State v. Taft, 20 R. I. 645, 40 Atl. 758, holding "metaphysical healing" for reward not within statute requiring registration and license of medical practitioner; Nelson v. State Bd. of Health, 108 Ky. 781, 50 L. R. A. 387, 57 S. W. 501, and Hayden v. State, 81 Miss. 299, 95 Am. St. Rep. 471, 33 So. 653, holding osteopathy not within statute requiring certificate for practising medicine; State v. Beck, 21 R. I. 291, 45 L. R. A. 271, 43 Atl. 366, holding physicians and surgeons exempt from statutory restrictions upon practice of dentistry; Kansas City v. Baird, 92 Mo. App. 210, holding ordinance imposing penalty upon "every physician" treating certain diseases, and failing to report same, not applicable to "Christian Scientist."

Cited in footnotes to Parks v. State, 59 L. R. A. 190, which sustains requirement that magnetic healer procure license; State v. Liffing, 46 L. R. A. 334, which denies necessity of certificate from medical board for practice of osteopathy; State v. Biggs, 64 L. R. A. 140, which denies right to require license for treatment of diseases by baths, physical culture, manipulation of muscles, bones, spine, and solar plexus, and advice as to diet.

Distinguished in People v. Gordon, 194 Ill. 569, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165, 62 N. E. 858, holding osteopathy or magnetic healing within statute requiring license for practising medicine.

Medical attendance as necessary sustenance.

Cited in footnote to Justice v. State, 59 L. R. A. 601, which holds refusal to permit administration of medicine to minor children while sick not deprival of necessary sustenance.

41 L. R. A. 432, SMITH v. STATE, 100 Tenn. 494, 46 S. W. 566.

Rights of colored passengers.

Cited in footnote to Bowie v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 50 L. R. A. 632, which sustains rule of street railway company requiring colored and white passengers to occupy different ends of car.

Police power.

Approved in Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 441, 56 L. R. A. 320, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, sustaining statute requiring payment in money of all merchandise or other orders issued for wages; Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 532, 48 L. R. A. 174, 53 S. W. 962, sustaining statute enforcing use of uniform text books in public schools.

41 L. R. A. 436, SOUTHERN EXP. CO. v. COM. 92 Va. 59, 22 S. E. 809.

Affirmed in 168 U. S. 705, 42 L. ed. 1212, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 947.

Cruel or unusual punishments.

Cited in State v. Laredo Ice Co. 96 Tex. 467, 73 S. W. 951, refusing to hold fines imposed by statute for violation of anti-trust law within constitutional prohibition against "excessive" fines.

Cited in notes (35 L. R. A. 563, 564, 577, 579) on cruel and unusual punishments; (45 L. R. A. 137) on effect of excessive sentence.

Raising question of constitutionality on appeal.

Approved in Adkins v. Richmond, 98 Va. 92, 47 L. R. A. 584, 81 Am. St. Rep. 702, 34 Atl. 967, holding unconstitutionality of law may be assigned on appeal, though not previously specially pleaded.

Constitutional appropriation of fines.

Disapproved in Ex parte McMahon, 26 Nev. 246, 66 Pac. 294, holding statute appropriating only portion of fines received under game law to educational purposes not in conflict with constitutional provision setting apart all fines to such use.

41 L. R. A. 439, UNITED STATES NAT. BANK v. GEER, 53 Neb. 67, 73 N. W. 266.

41 L. R. A. 446, KOCHERSPERGER v. DRAKE, 167 Ill. 122, 47 N. E. 321.

Writ of error from United States Supreme Court dismissed in 170 U. S. 303, 42 L. ed. 1046, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 942.

Validity of inheritance tax law.

Cited in Walker v. People, 192 Ill. 108, 61 N. E. 489, holding validity of inheritance tax law settled; Dixon v. Ricketts, 26 Utah, 226, 72 Pac. 947, holding inheritance tax, being imposed upon right of succession, and not upon property, is not in conflict with constitutional provision requiring uniformity.

Cited in footnote to Ferry v. Campbell, 50 L. R. A. 92, which holds succession tax void for want of notice of proceedings to fix amount of tax.

Classification for taxation purposes.

Approved in Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 482, 59 L. R. A. 813, footnote p. 807, 59 N. E. 798, sustaining inheritance tax statute though discriminating between lineal and collateral heirs; Black v. State, 113 Wis. 223, 90 Am. St. Rep. 853, 89 N. W. 522, holding inheritance tax law unconstitutional in discriminating between estates of $10,000 and those of less amount; Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 482, 59 L. R. A. 813, footnote p. 807, 59 N. E. 798, sustaining transfer tax on lineal descendants, to whom life estate given with remainder to lineal descendants, but exempting lineal descendants taking fee.

Cited in footnote to Drew v. Tift, 47 L. R. A. 525, which requires uniformity and equal application in exemption from inheritance tax.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 340) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

What estates subject to tax.

Approved in Ayers v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 187 Ill. 57, 58 N. E. 318, holding "estates in expectation" subject to inheritance tax; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 122, 44 L. ed. 1003, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, sustaining inheritance tax law though property involved consists, wholly or in part, of Federal securities.

Right of inheritance.

Approved in Storrs v. St. Luke's Hospital, 180 Ill. 375, 72 Am. St. Rep. 211, 54 N. E. 185, holding that right to file bill contesting will does not pass by descent or inheritance; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. McGlew, 90 Ill. App. 63, holding distribution of estate entirely regulated by statute; Sayles v. Christie, 187 Ill. 432, 58 N. E. 480, sustaining special adoption act giving adopted child right to inherit.

41 L. R. A. 449, SUPREME COUNCIL, G. S. F. v. CONKLIN, 60 N. J. L. 565, 38 Atl. 659.

41 L. R. A. 457, GLOUCESTER & S. TURNP. CO. v. LEPPEE, 62 N. J. L. 92, 40 Atl. 681.

Bicycle law.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 303) on bicycle law.

41 L. R. A. 458, CENTRAL TRUST CO. v. RICHMOND, N. L. & B. R. CO. 15 C. C. A. 273, 31 U. S. App. 675, 68 Fed. 90.

Later appeal in 45 C. C. A. 61, 105 Fed. 804.

What constitutes waiver of lien.

Approved in Ohio Falls Car Mfg. Co. v. Central Trust Co. 18 C. C. A. 390, 37 U. S. App. 523, 71 Fed. 921, holding lien waived by agreement to accept new security in form of note secured by mortgage bonds; Reynolds v. Manhattan Trust Co. 27 C. C. A. 629, 55 U. S. App. 96, 83 Fed. 602, holding lien for labor and material not waived by unperformed promise of payment in any form; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 91 Tex. 82, 40 S. W. 876, holding mechanic's lien not waived by taking note and mortgage without intention of waiving.

Cited in footnote to Kirchman v. Standard Oil Co. 52 L. R. A. 318, which holds lienor not estopped to enforce lien by mistaken statement of its payment, without knowledge of other's person's intention to buy property.

Priority of liens.

Separate appeal in Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 627, 15 C. C. A. 291, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 107, holding subcontractor not entitled to principal contractor's statutory lien notwithstanding owner's consent to substitution.

Approved in Central Trust Co. v. Louisville, St. L. & T. R. Co. 70 Fed. 287, holding statute declaring railroad construction liens prior to others "theretofore or thereafter created," makes such liens superior only to those created after passage.

Effect of principal contract upon subcontractor's lien.

Approved in Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. 30 C. C. A. 122, 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. 384, sustaining statute giving subcontractor lien without regard to amount unpaid principal contractor, limited only by owner's contract price.

Distinguished in Herrell v. Donovan, 7 App. D. C. 338, holding subcontractor's lien rights dependent upon principal contract and accounts between owner and contractor.

Interest on funds under court's control.

Approved in Jourolmon v. Ewing, 29 C. C. A. 44, 56 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. 106, holding interest allowable to date of decree upon fund in court, subject to liens of different priorities.

Cited in Solomons v. American Bldg. & L. Asso. 116 Fed. 677, holding lien creditor not entitled to interest after receiver appointed, when paid from general fund.

41 L. R. A. 467, BERLINER v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO. 121 Cal. 458, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49, 53 Pac. 918.

What constitutes passenger.

Cited in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 116 Ga. 267, 59 L. R. A. 109, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125, 42 N. E. 522, holding paymaster not entitled to double indemnity as "passenger" when traveling in course of duty.

Distinguished in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 116 Ga. 267, 59 L. R. A. 109, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125, 42 S. E. 522, holding railroad paymaster not "passenger" within accident policy providing for double indemnity in case of accident while traveling in that relation.

Insurance; extra hazard.

Cited in footnote to Wilkey Casualty Co. v. Sheppard, 47 L. R. A. 650, which holds barber not engaged in more hazardous occupation while hunting rabbits as incident to daily life.

41 L. R. A. 470, COLEMAN, B. & W. CO. v. DANNENBERG CO. 103 Ga. 784, 68 Am. St. Rep. 143, 30 S. E. 639.

What constitutes deception.

Cited in Nolan Bros. Shoe Co. v. Nolan, 131 Cal. 277, 53 L. R. A. 386, 82 Am. St. Rep. 346, 63 Pac. 480, sustaining right to use corporate name, though use of same by individual stockholder for two years prior to incorporation may have deceived public.

41 L. R. A. 472, WEBER v. STATE, 58 Ohio St. 616, 51 N. E. 116.

Right to suspend sentence.

Cited in footnotes to People ex rel. Smith v. Allen, 41 L. R. A. 473, which denies power of court to subsequently sentence prisoner whose sentence indefinitely suspended without recognizance; Neal v. State, 42 L. R. A. 190, which holds void, attempt to suspend execution of sentence after pronouncing it; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 63 L. R. A. 82, which denies court's power to indefinitely suspend sentence after conviction.

Denied in Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 103, 56 L. R. A. 102, footnote p. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198, denying defendant's right to relief for failure to execute mittimus under judgment sentencing to imprisonment on failure to pay fine, until lapse of time of imprisonment.

41 L. R. A. 473, PEOPLE ex rel. SMITH v. ALLEN, 155 Ill. 61, 39 N. E. 568,

Right to suspend sentence.

Cited in People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 296, 63 L. R. A. 85, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23, holding suspension of sentence for over two years pending motion for new trial, accused being allowed his liberty meanwhile on own recognizance, deprives court of jurisdiction; Re Flint, 25 Utah, 341, 95 Am. St. Rep. 853, 71 Pac. 531, holding jurisdiction over convicted criminal lost by court suspending judgment indefinitely, and discharging defendant from custody.

Cited in footnotes to Miller v. Evans, 56 L. R. A. 101, which denies defendant's right to relief for failure to execute mittimus under judgment sentencing to imprisonment on failure to pay fine, until lapse of time of imprisonment; Neal v. State, 42 L. R. A. 190, which holds void, attempt to suspend execution of sentence after pronouncing it; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 63 L. R. A. 82, which denies court's power to indefinitely suspend sentence after conviction; Weber v. State, 41 L. R. A. 472, which sustains power of court to suspend sentence and set aside suspension at any time during term.

41 L. R. A. 475, AUGUSTA v. KIMBALL, 91 Me. 605, 40 Atl. 666.

Taxation of grain in elevators.

Cited in footnote to Minneapolis & N. Elevator Co. v. Traill County, 50 L. R. A. 267, which sustains statute taxing grain in elevators, etc., in proprietor's name.

41 L. R. A. 478, BENEDICK v. POTTS, 88 Md. 52, 40 Atl. 1067.

Presumption of negligence from fact of accident.

Cited in Kohner v. Capital Traction Co. 22 App. D. C. 186, 62 L. R. A. 876, holding that doctrine of res ipsa loquitur means that surrounding circumstances of accident contain, without further proof, sufficient evidence of negligence; State use of Arnold v. Green, 95 Md. 230, 52 Atl. 673, holding no recovery for death from unexplained elevator accident; Western Maryland R. Co. v. State, 95 Md. 652, 53 Atl. 969, holding no presumption of negligence from mere unexplained killing of passenger; Griffen v. Manice, 166 N. Y. 196, 52 L. R. A. 926, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630, 59 N. E. 925, sustaining finding of negligence where death resulted from breaking of elevator weights; Fink v. Slade, 66 App. Div. 110, 72 N. Y. Supp. 821, holding master's negligence not established by employee's injury from unexplained falling of platform on which working; South Baltimore Car Works v. Schaefer, 96 Md. 106, 94 Am. St. Rep. 560, 53 Atl. 665, holding inference of negligence does not arise from breaking of machinery in which there was no visible defect, and in manner never before occurring; Paynter v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 67 N. J. L. 625, 52 Atl. 367, holding fall while alighting from street car not of itself sufficient to raise presumption of negligence of railway company.

Cited in footnote to Springer v. Ford, 52 L. R. A. 930, which sustains presumption of negligence from injury to passenger by unexplained breaking of elevator appliance.

Distinguished in Tall v. Baltimore Steam Packet Co. 90 Md. 257, 47 L. R. A. 123, 44 Atl. 1007, holding carrier not liable for unexpected assault on one passenger by another; Fisher v. New York Dock Co. 91 App. Div. 528, 87 N. Y. Supp. 117, holding collision of cars of dock company with stationary car from which plaintiff was unloading freight, sufficient evidence of negligence to go to jury.

41 L. R. A. 481, CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. v. STATE, 47 Neb. 549, 53 Am. St. Rep. 557, 66 N. W. 624.

Legislative control of public welfare.

Approved on later appeal in 170 U. S. 57, 42 L. ed. 948, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513, holding public safety justifies legislature in controlling municipal agreement for maintenance of railroad crossing viaduct.

Cited in Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 503, 63 N. E. 1013, holding that police power may be exercised for public welfare without compensation for individual rights destroyed; Edgerton v. Goldsboro Water Co. 126 N. C. 99, 48 L. R. A. 446, 35 S. E. 243 (dissenting opinion), majority holding maintenance of water works not necessary municipal expense.

Cited in footnotes to Bailey v. People, 54 L. R. A. 839, which holds void, restriction on number which lodging-house keeper may permit to occupy one room; Bessette v. People, 56 L. R. A. 558, which holds void, requirement that horse-shoers practise business for four years, submit to examination, and pay license fee.

What constitutes "due process of law."

Approved in Cummings v. Hyatt, 54 Neb. 44, 74 N. W. 411, sustaining irrigation tax statute as not being a taking of property without "due process of law;"

Howard v. Clay County, 54 Neb. 446, 74 N. W. 953, holding no taking without "due process" when opportunity afforded for judicial determination of damages and payment thereof; Hanson v. Krehbiel, 68 Kan. 675, 64 L. R. A. 793, holding remedy by due course of law means reparation for injury, ordered by tribunal having jurisdiction, in due course of procedure, and after fair hearing; August v. Gilmer, 53 W. Va. 67, 44 S. E. 143, holding decision in summary proceeding adjudging title of purchaser at execution sale invalid, and ordering return of property to sheriff, not taking property without due process of law.

Right to consider wisdom of statute.

Cited in Henley v. State, 98 Tenn. 724, 39 L. R. A. 142, 41 S. W. 352 (dissenting opinion), majority holding courts cannot annul statute for any reason whatever unless violating some constitutional provision.

Cited in footnote to Com. ex rel. Elkin v. Moir, 53 L. R. A. 837, which holds wisdom, propriety, justice, or motive for passage not considered in determining validity of statute for government of cities.

Mandamus to enforce corporate duty.

Cited in State ex rel. Bridgeton v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 62 N. J. L. 603, 45 L. R. A. 842, 43 Atl. 715, granting mandamus compelling street railway company to maintain line for public benefit, according to franchise.

41 L. R. A. 487, MALLOY v. NEW YORK REAL ESTATE ASSO. 156 N. Y. 205, 50 N. E. 853.

Liability for elevator accidents.

Distinguished in Weinberger v. Kratzenstein, 71 App. Div. 159, 75 N. Y. Supp. 537, Reversing 35 Misc. 77, 71 N. Y. Supp. 244, holding owner of building liable to person falling into elevator shaft by reason of breaking of defective guard chain; Baker v. Otis Elevator Co. 78 App. Div. 514, 79 N. Y. Supp. 663, holding factory owner not liable for injury to city fireman falling into elevator well while fighting fire in darkness.

Cited in footnote to Gibson v. International Trust Co. 52 L. R. A. 928, which denies liability for injury to passenger from involuntary starting of elevator by conductor grasping mechanism to prevent falling.

41 L. R. A. 490, JONES v. NEW YORK C. & H. R. R. CO. 156 N. Y. 187, 50 N. E. 856.

Carrier's duty towards passengers.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 494) on starting car before passenger is seated.

41 L. R. A. 494, COYNE v. MISSISSIPPI & R. RIVER BOOM CO. 72 Minn. 531, 71 Am. St. Rep. 508, 75 N. W. 748.

Right to use stream for floating logs.

Approved in Smith v. Atkins, 110 Ky. 123, 53 L. R. A. 791, footnote p. 791, 96 Am. St. Rep. 424, 60 S. W. 930, denying right of one navigating stream to fasten booms to trees on bank.

Cited in Smith v. Atkins, 110 Ky. 123, 53 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 424, 60 S. W. 930, holding person erecting boom across navigable stream not entitled to fasten same to land of riparian owner, and overflow banks to latter's damage.

Cited in footnotes to Watkins v. Dorris, 54 L. R. A. 199, which holds one floating logs down stream liable to abutter for injuries to land by jams; Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co. 58 L. R. A. 495, which denies right to discharge water stored along stream to aid drive of logs, so as to overflow banks to injury of riparian owners.

Cited in note (64 L. R. A. 983) on liability for injuries caused by attempted exercise of rights of navigation.

Liability for consequential injuries.

Cited in Lund v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 31 Wash. 293, 61 L. R. A. 508, 96 Am. St. Rep. 906, 71 Pac. 1032, holding street railroad company not liable for obstructing street for over one year, under authority of city council, to damage of property owner.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 635) on extent of trespasser's liability for consequential injuries resulting from trespass.

41 L. R. A. 498, COM. ex rel. SCOTT v. BOARD OF PUBLIC EDUCATION, 187 Pa. 70, 40 Atl. 806.

41 L. R. A. 501, STATE v. COOP, 52 S. C. 508, 30 S. E. 609.

Statutes affecting interstate commerce.

Approved in Laurens v. Elmore, 55 S. C. 479, 45 L. R. A. 250, footnote p. 249, 33 S. E. 560, holding license tax on occupations invalid, as against seller of frames on pictures made in other state.

Cited in footnotes to Re Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 417, which holds void as applied to sale of original packages, territorial statute requiring license for sale of coal oil; Adkins v. Richmond, 47 L. R. A. 583, which holds license tax on merchandise brokers void as to brokers selling goods by sample for principal in other state; Williams v. Fears, 50 L. R. A. 685, which sustains license tax on emigrant agent; Brownback v. North Wales, 49 L. R. A. 446, which holds valid as to residents, ordinance requiring license for sale of goods on street or by soliciting orders from house to house.

What constitutes peddler.

Cited in footnote to State v. Wells, 48 L. R. A. 99, which holds one soliciting orders for goods and carrying goods to fill previous sales, not a peddler.

41 L. R. A. 503, CHESTERFIELD v. RATLIFF, 52 S. C. 563, 30 S. E. 593.

41 L. R. A. 504, Re CHRISTENSEN, 17 Utah, 412, 70 Am. St. Rep. 794, 53 Pac. 1003.

Validity of divorce decree.

Cited on later appeal in 23 Utah, 209, 63 Pac. 896, as being the law of the case.

41 L. R. A. 511, RICHMOND & A. R. CO. v. R. A. PATTERSON TOBACCO CO. 92 Va. 670, 24 S. E. 261.

Affirmed in 169 U. S. 311, 42 L. ed. 759, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335.

Carrier's liability for loss beyond line.

Approved in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Reeves, 97 Va. 292, 33 S. E. 606, holding that common carriers may limit liability to damages from negligence prior to delivery to connecting carrier; Central R. Co. v. Murphey, 116 Ga. 868, 60 L. R. A. 820, 43 S. E. 265, upholding validity of statute imposing liability for loss of freight upon initial carrier failing to trace same within thirty days after request therefor.

Cited in footnotes to Union State Bank v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 939, which sustains initial carrier's right to limit liability to own line; Taffe v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 58 L. R. A. 187, which denies initial carrier's liability under bill of lading beyond own line; Courteeh v. Kanawha Despatch, 55 L. R. A. 182, which denies carrier's liability for accidental destruction of property while in warehouse on pier, awaiting arrival of vessel of connecting carrier.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 530) on conflict of laws as to carrier's contracts.

Statutes affecting interstate commerce.

Approved in Lacey v. Palmer, 93 Va. 170, 31 L. R. A. 826, 57 Am. St. Rep. 795, 24 Atl. 930, sustaining statute prohibiting pool selling on races in another state.

41 L. R. A. 515, STATE ex rel. GRINSFELDER v. SPOKANE STREET R. CO. 19 Wash. 518, 67 Am. St. Rep. 739, 53 Pac. 719.

Compelling operation of street railway line.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Bridgeton v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 45 L. R. A. 837, which holds street railway company's duty to operate road enforceable by mandamus; State ex rel. Knight v. Helena Power & Light Co. 44 L. R. A. 692, which denies power to compel operation of abandoned street railway line.

Lot owner's right of action against street railway.

Distinguished in Schwede v. Hemrich Bros. Brewing Co. 29 Wash. 26, 69 Pac. 362, holding abutting lot owner entitled to sue for injunction against unlawful construction of railroad in street.

41 L. R. A. 520, JOHNSON v. VAN WYCK, 4 App. D. C. 294.

Validity of champertous contracts.

Approved in Campbell v. Dexter, 17 App. D. C. 463, setting aside champertous assignment upon repayment of money advanced; Peck v. Heurich, 167 U. S. 630, 42 L. ed. 305, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 927, holding void for champerty, agreement to prosecute suit to recover land in consideration of proportion of recovery.

Cited in footnote to Irwin v. Curie, 58 L. R. A. 830, which sustains right of person placing demands in attorney's hands to recover agreed compensation, though statute forbids such agreements.

41 L. R. A. 530, STATE v. THORNTON, 10 S. D. 349, 73 N. W. 196.

Burden of proving alibi.

Approved in People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 328, 57 Pac. 1067, holding erroneous instruction as to proof of alibi cured by charging that defendant is entitled to benefit of reasonable doubt.

Cited in State v. McClellan, 23 Mont. 538, 75 Am. St. Rep. 558, 59 Pac. 924, holding erroneous instruction as to proof of alibi not cured by charging that defendant is entitled to benefit of reasonable doubt.

41 L. R. A. 544, SEYMOUR v. McAVOY, 121 Cal. 438, 53 Pac. 946.

Rights of creditors in trust funds.

Cited in footnotes to Scott v. Keane, 42 L. R. A. 359, which holds trust by conveyance and reconveyance for grantor's benefit void as against his creditors; Re Qua v. Graham, 52 L. R. A. 641, which holds annuity in wife's will in lieu of other interests, accepted by husband, not trust beyond reach of creditors; Murphy v. Delano, 55 L. R. A. 727, which holds income of spendthrift trust not within reach of creditors by void agreement of trustees to pay certain portion of income absolutely to beneficiary; Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 57 L. R. A. 384, which denies power to create equitable life estate free from debts of beneficiary.

41 L. R. A. 548, MASON v. McLEOD, 57 Kan. 105, 57 Am. St. Rep. 327, 45 Pac. 76.

Statutory regulation of patent-right notes.

Approved in Eclipse Wind Engine Co. v. Zimmerman Mfg. Co. 16 Ind. App. 500, 44 N. E. 1115, and State v. Cook, 107 Tenn. 506, 62 L. R. A. 176, 64 S. W. 720, sustaining statute regulating form and negotiability of notes given for patent rights; State v. Cook, 107 Tenn. 499, 62 L. R. A. 176, footnote p. 174, 64 S. W. 720, holding statute requiring notes for patent rights to so state on their faces, within police power.

Rights under prohibited contracts.

Approved in Stansfield v. Kunz, 62 Kan. 801, 64 Pac. 614, holding that illegal contract for sale of intoxicants may be rescinded and advances recovered by vendee before consummation.

41 L. R. A. 551, FORD v. STATE, 85 Md. 465, 60 Am. St. Rep. 337, 37 Atl. 172.

Exercise of police power.

Cited in Ex parte McClain, 134 Cal. 113, 54 L. R. A. 780, footnote p. 779, 86 Am. St. Rep. 243, 66 Pac. 69, sustaining city's right to make mere possession of lottery ticket a misdemeanor; State v. Hyman, 64 L. R. A. 645, upholding validity of statute prohibiting use of room in tenement for manufacture of clothing, except by members of family and under permit.

Cited in footnotes to Bailey v. People, 54 L. R. A. 839, which holds void, restriction on number which lodging-house keeper may permit to occupy one room; People v. Adams, 63 L. R. A. 406, which sustains statute making possession of papers used in playing policy, penal offense.

41 L. R. A. 554, CANANDAIGUA v. FOSTER, 156 N. Y. 354, 66 Am. St. Rep. 575, 50 N. E. 971.

Lessor's liability for injuries from defective premises.

Approved in Brogan v. Hanan, 55 App. Div. 93, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1066, holding landlord and tenant jointly liable to person falling down unguarded basement steps.

Cited in Curran v. Flammer, 49 App. Div. 297, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1061, holding landlord not liable to person falling through sidewalk grating in front of leased premises; West Chicago Masonic Asso. v. Cohn, 192 Ill. 217, 55 L. R. A. 239, footnote p. 235, 85 Am. St. Rep. 327, 61 N. E. 439, Reversing 94 Ill. App. 336, denying landlord's liability for injury by defective condition of coalhole in sidewalk; Leaux v. New York, 87 App. Div. 404, 84 N. Y. Supp. 514, holding lessor not liable for injury to tenant's servant from fall into sewer defectively covered, where premises in proper condition at beginning of term.

Cited in footnotes to Gardner v. Rhodes, 57 L. R. A. 749, which denies landlord's liability for fall on ice which tenant permits to accumulate on sidewalk; Barrett v. Lake Ontario Beach Improv. Co. 61 L. R. A. 829, which sustains owner's liability for insufficiency of railing of leased toboggan slide; Langenbaugh v. Anderson, 62 L. R. A. 948, which denies liability of lessor of lot for production of oil or gas therefrom, for injury to adjoining owner's property through escape of oil by lessee's negligence.

Liability for injuring sidewalk.

Approved in Parish v. Baird, 160 N. Y. 307, 54 N. E. 724, holding abutting owner may recover damages for material injury to sidewalk.

Municipal liability for using space under street.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 585, 591) on liability of municipality for injuries to travelers caused by persons using space under street.

41 L. R. A. 557, TRAVELERS' INS. CO. v. FRICKE, 99 Wis. 367, 74 N. W. 372, 78 N. W. 407.

Rights of licensees.

Cited in State ex rel. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Fricke, 102 Wis. 116, 77 N. W. 732, holding foreign accident insurance companies required to pay license fee imposed upon life companies and additional fee for accident business.

Cited in footnotes to Bankers' L. Ins. Co. v. Howland, 57 L. R. A. 374, which denies insurance commissioners' power to question foreign company's mode of computing reserve set forth in statement for license; Wallace v. Reno, 63 L. R. A. 338, which authorizes revocation of liquor license by legislature or municipal officers, with or without notice to licensee.

Taxation of corporate franchises.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 72) on taxation of corporate franchises in United States.

Right of foreign corporation to plead statute of limitations.

Cited in State v. National Acci. Soc. 103 Wis. 217, 79 N. W. 220, holding foreign insurance corporation not entitled to benefit of statute of limitations; Burns v. White Swan Min. Co. 35 Or. 308, 57 Pac. 637, holding foreign corporation "person without state," entitled to plead statute of limitations; Williams v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 68 Kan. 27, 64 L. R. A. 799, footnote p. 794, 74 Pac. 600, holding foreign corporation "out of state," within provision as to running of statute of limitations.

Practical construction of statutes and contracts.

Cited in State ex rel. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Fricke, 102 Wis. 112, 77 N. W. 732, denying mandamus to compel issuance of corporation license without payment of certain arrearages, notwithstanding practical construction of statute by state officers that same not required; State v. National Acci. Soc. 103 Wis. 219, 79 N. W. 220 (dissenting opinion), majority holding insurance company liable in action of assumpsit for license fees for past years, not then exacted because of misconstruction of statute by state officers; Hurley Water Co. v. Vaughn, 115

Wis. 475, 91 N. W. 971, holding, where construction of water works statute is in doubt, practical construction given to it for twenty years is important; Hart v. Hart, 117 Wis. 654, 94 N. W. 890, refusing to charge partnership with taxes and insurance on property belonging to member of firm according to understanding of such member, where contract to contrary perfectly plain.

Interest upon litigated claims.

Approved in Laycock v. Parker, 103 Wis. 188, 79 N. W. 327, holding interest allowable on claim from time of demand before action.

41 L. R. A. 563, SELLECK v. JANESVILLE, 100 Wis. 157, 69 Am. St. Rep. 906, 75 N. W. 975.

Physical exhibition of injury.

Approved in Arkansas River Packet Co. v. Hobbs, 105 Tenn. 35, 58 S. W. 278, holding proper, exhibition and exercise of injured limb before jury two years after accident.

Hypothetical questions to medical experts.

Approved in Crouse v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 102 Wis. 204, 78 N. W. 446, holding proper question as to cause of condition described in detail; Werner v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 105 Wis. 309, 81 N. W. 416, holding proper, question based upon assumed truth of all facts in evidence.

Distinguished in Schaidler v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 102 Wis. 570, 78 N. W. 732, holding improper, question as to cause of death without revealing pre-existent disease.

Aggravation of injury.

Approved in Selleck v. Janesville, 104 Wis. 579, 47 L. R. A. 694, 76 Am. St. Rep. 892, 80 N. W. 944, holding husband's recovery for wife's injury not barred by mistakes of reputable physicians carefully selected; Arkansas River Packet Co. v. Hobbs, 105 Tenn. 45, 58 S. W. 278, holding full duty of lessening damages discharged when using ordinary care, though without medical advice; Elliott v. Kansas City, 174 Mo. 567, 74 S. W. 617, and Joliet v. Le Pla, 109 Ill. App. 340, holding aggravation of injury by treatment of unskilful physician no defense, when plaintiff used ordinary care in selection.

Cited in footnote to Texas & P. R. Co. v. White, 62 L. R. A. 90, which denies liability of person causing injury for aggravation due to injured person's neglect to obtain necessary surgical assistance.

— Injury aggravated by existing disease.

Cited in footnote to Maguire v. Sheehan, 59 L. R. A. 496, which sustains liability for entire injury through negligence, though shock brought on delirium tremens, retarding recovery.

41 L. R. A. 566, AITKEN v. WELLS RIVER, 70 Vt. 308, 67 Am. St. Rep. 672, 40 Atl. 829.

41 L. R. A. 569, ELLERBEE v. STATE, 75 Miss. 522, 22 So. 950.

Temporary absence of judge.

Approved in Durden v. People, 192 Ill. 497, 55 L. R. A. 241, footnote p.

240, 61 N. E. 317, holding change of judge during trial without consent of accused, is mistrial.

Cited in Gibson v. State, 76 Miss. 140, 23 So. 582, holding judge's absence from trial cannot be reviewed unless excepted to.

Cited in footnote to Horne v. Rogers, 49 L. R. A. 176, which holds judge's absence during trial not prejudicial error.

Erroneous instruction as reversible error.

Approved in Owens v. State, 80 Miss. 515, 32 So. 152, holding criminal conviction reversible for vital, substantial errors.

Later appeal in 79 Miss. 10, 30 So. 57, reversing criminal conviction for substantial erroneous instructions.

Cited in Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 616, 23 So. 210 (dissenting opinion), majority reversing criminal conviction for material erroneous instruction.

41 L. R. A. 575, ZEHREN v. MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC R. & LIGHT CO. 99 Wis. 83, 67 Am. St. Rep. 844, 74 N. W. 538.

Additional highway servitudes.

Approved in Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 106 Wis. 103, 50 L. R. A. 302, 81 N. W. 1041, holding telephone line additional servitude which cannot be erected without compensation.

Cited in La Crosse City R. Co. v. Higbee, 107 Wis. 393, 51 L. R. A. 926, 83 N. W. 701, holding electric railway not additional burden upon city street; Allen v. Clausen, 114 Wis. 249, 90 N. W. 181, sustaining injunction by abutting owner against unauthorized laying of street car tracks; Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co. 63 L. R. A. 640, holding interurban railway not "street railway" within constitutional provision requiring franchise to be sold to lowest bidder, but is "trunk railway."

Cited in footnotes to Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 39 L. R. A. 751, which holds trolley railway an additional burden on street; Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 43 L. R. A. 233, which holds electric-motor railway not additional servitude on highway.

Disapproved in Ehret v. Camden & T. R. Co. 60 N. J. Eq. 248, 46 Atl. 578, refusing injunction against construction of electric railway on county highway without compensation to abutting proprietors; Ehret v. Camden & T. R. Co. 61 N. J. Eq. 173, 47 Atl. 562, holding trolley line not additional servitude upon country highway.

Right of eminent domain.

Cited in Younkin v. Milwaukee Light, Heat & Traction Co. 112 Wis. 20, 87 N. W. 861, holding street railways powerless to condemn land prior to statute of 1891, conferring such power.

41 L. R. A. 581, MADDOX v. DUNCAN, 143 Mo. 613, 65 Am. St. Rep. 678, 45 S. W. 688.

Parties to action on note.

Approved in Hill v. Combs, 92 Mo. App. 253, holding maker and guarantor cannot be joined in same action without statutory permission; Hill v. Coombs, 93 Mo. App. 267, holding joint action lies against indorsers and guarantors.

Cited in footnote to Edgerly v. Lawson, 51 L. R. A. 432, which authorized action against maker by transferee of note after maturity without consideration.

Payments affecting statute of limitations.

Approved in Corbyn v. Brokmeyer, 84 Mo. App. 653, holding statute not interrupted as to guarantor by payments of payee and indorser; Regan v. Williams, 88 Mo. App. 585, holding statute not interrupted as to maker by payments of collateral promisor.

Waiver of statutory privilege.

Approved in Keller v. Home L. Ins. Co. 95 Mo. App. 638, 69 S. W. 612, holding patient may waive privilege of secrecy accorded to professional information.

41 L. R. A. 584, FIRST NAT. BANK v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 58 Ohio St. 207, 65 Am. St. Rep. 748, 50 N. E. 723.

Recovery of payments upon forged instruments.

Cited in Woods v. Colony Bank, 114 Ga. 685, 56 L. R. A. 931, footnote p. 929, 40 S. E. 720, holding presumption of drawee knowing drawer's signature not available to negligent holder; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 68 Ohio St. 48, 67 N. E. 91, holding indorser of negotiable note liable to indorsee compelled to pay same because of forgery of prior indorsement.

Cited in footnote to Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Bingham, 60 L. R. A. 955, which sustains drawee's right to recover amount of forged check payable to fictitious person, from one cashing same on indorsement purporting to be payee's, without requiring identification.

41 L. R. A. 587, JOHNS v. NORTHWESTERN MUT. RELIEF ASSO. 90 Wis. 332, 63 N. W. 276.

Later appeal in 94 Wis. 431, 69 N. W. 160.

Presumption as to death of insured.

Approved in Butero v. Travelers' Acci. Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 541, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 N. W. 811, denying right of recovery upon policy exempting "intentional injuries," where evidence of homicide preponderates.

Cited in footnotes to Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 49 L. R. A. 116, which holds accident, not suicide, presumed where sleeping car passenger found dead on track; Boynton v. Equitable Life Assur. Co. 52 L. R. A. 687, which requires insurer, claiming suicide of insured, to exclude every reasonable hypothesis of accidental death; Cox v. Royal Tribe of Joseph, 60 L. R. A. 620, which authorizes consideration of presumption of death from natural causes, in determining cause of death of insured found dead in water; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Freeman, 54 L. R. A. 680, which holds suicide of insured not conclusively shown by evidence.

Causes of death within policy.

Cited in footnotes to Brown v. Sun L. Ins. Co. 51 L. R. A. 252, which sustains recovery on policy of one whose death caused by taking overdose of morphine; Courtemanche v. Supreme Court, I. O. O. F. 64 L. R. A. 668, which holds accidental death of assured from taking poison to frighten wife into giving him money not within provision that policy does not include assurance against self-destruction.

41 L. R. A. 589, SMOOT v. PEOPLE'S PERPETUAL LOAN & BLDG. ASSO. 95 Va. 686, 29 S. E. 746.

Statutory validation of usurious contracts.

Approved in Bosang v. Iron Belt Bldg. & L. Asso. 96 Va. 122, 30 S. E. 440, holding legislature may validate invalid usurious contracts.

Cited in Atlanta Sav. Bank v. Spencer, 107 Ga. 632, 33 S. E. 878, holding unconstitutional, special charter authorizing making of contracts otherwise invalid for usury.

Cited in footnotes to Iowa Sav. & Loan Asso. v. Heidt, 43 L. R. A. 689, which sustains statute taking away defense of usury; Borrowers' & I. Bldg. Asso. v. Eklund, 52 L. R. A. 637, which requires strict adherence to mode fixed by statute exempting loan associations from usury laws.

What constitutes usury.

Cited in footnotes to Gray v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 54 L. R. A. 217, which holds percentage payable to loan association indefinitely, usurious, though called "premium;" Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 58 L. R. A. 816, which holds exaction of monthly premium which, with interest, exceeds legal rate, unauthorized; Pacific States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Hill, 56 L. R. A. 163, which holds requirement that borrower bid for stock and pay dues on same, device to cover usury.

What law governs question of usury.

Cited in footnotes to Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. 54 L. R. A. 536, which holds contract with foreign loan association not within exemption of domestic associations as to usury, unless in conformity to local law; National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Braham, 57 L. R. A. 793, which holds usury in loan by foreign loan association to resident, secured by mortgage on land in state, determined by local law.

Liability of officer for shortage in accounts.

Approved in Safe Deposit Bank v. Schuylkill County, 190 Pa. 192, 42 Atl. 539, holding payment to commissioners' clerk having possession of note, to be treated as made to county, although treasurer never received proceeds; Equitable Sav. & Loan Asso. v. Roland, 198 Pa. 649, 48 Atl. 866, holding association not estopped from enforcing security against treasurer by secretary's long concealment of deficit.

41 L. R. A. 593, BOARD OF EDUCATION v. PURSE, 101 Ga. 422, 65 Am. St. Rep. 812, 28 S. E. 896.

Control of pupils in public schools.

Approved in Samuel Benedict Memorial School v. Bradford, 111 Ga. 802, 36 S. E. 920, holding that school authorities, not courts, must determine suitability of subjects for composition and debate.

Cited in footnote to Board of Education v. Booth, 53 L. R. A. 787, which denies power of court to review question of guilt or innocence of pupil expelled from school.

Cited in note (62 L. R. A. 162) on right of school authorities to control pupils when going to and from school.

41 L. R. A. 609, DENNEHY v. McNULTA, 30 C. C. A. 422, 59 U. S. App. 264, 86 Fed. 825.

Illegality of corporation as defense.

Approved in Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L. R. A. 919, 53 C. C. A. 488, 116 Fed. 308, holding illegality of corporation no defense to one voluntarily contracting therewith; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 547, 46 L. ed. 685, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, holding illegality of combine no defense to action for goods purchased.

Illegality of contract as defense.

Approved in Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Berlin, 33 C. C. A. 277, 62 U. S. App. 223, 90 Fed. 782, holding promise to extend note discharged by promisee's failure to perform unlawful condition imposed; Gilbert v. American Surety Co. 61 L. R. A. 257, 57 C. C. A. 623, 121 Fed. 503, holding seller of property in furtherance of illegal combination in restraint of trade cannot set up illegality of contract in action for its enforcement.

41 L. R. A. 612, MOZINGO v. ROSS, 150 Ind. 688, 65 Am. St. Rep. 387, 50 N. E. 867.

Payment suspending statute of limitations.

Approved in Koontz v. Hammond, 21 Ind. App. 80, 51 N. E. 506, holding that principal's payment of interest will not suspend statute as to surety; McBride v. Ulmer, 30 Ind. App. 157, 65 N. E. 610, holding credit on indebtedness of husband as part payment on debt which creditor was owing former's wife not such payment as would remove bar of statute.

41 L. R. A. 614, LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. WHITLOW, 105 Ky. 1, 43 S. W. 711.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Reed, 158 Ind. 28, 56 L. R. A. 470, 92 Am. St. Rep. 293, 62 N. E. 488, holding in action for injury caused by negligence of coemployee in another state, common-law rule presumed to prevail in latter state, in absence of showing to contrary.

Cited in notes (56 L. R. A. 221) on conflict of laws as to action for death or bodily injury; (56 L. R. A. 313) on conflict of laws as to measure of damages.

41 L. R. A. 617, SHEPARD & M. LUMBER CO. v. ELDRIDGE, 171 Mass. 516, 68 Am. St. Rep. 446, 51 N. E. 9.

What constitutes estoppel.

Approved in Winslow v. Everett Nat. Bank, 171 Mass. 534, 51 N. E. 16, holding negligence in affording opportunity for forging indorsement no defense in action to recover deposit; Scollans v. Rollins, 173 Mass. 281, 73 Am. St. Rep. 284, 53 N. E. 863, holding rightful owner of bond fraudulently pledged by depositary not estopped from asserting title thereto; Dallinger v. Richardson, 176 Mass. 83, 57 N. E. 224, holding executor not estopped from denying testator's residence by statements not relied upon nor so intended; Welch v. Walsh, 177 Mass. 558, 52 L. R. A. 784, 83 Am. St. Rep. 302, 59 N. E. 440, holding lessor not negligent as to guarantor in failing to use diligence in collecting rent.

41 L. R. A. 624, STATE ex rel. SMYTH v. MOORES, 55 Neb. 480, 76 N. W. 175.

Cited for history of litigation in State ex rel. Wright v. Savage, 64 Neb. 695, 90 N. W. 898.

Right of local self-government.

Cited in State ex rel. Rosewater v. Holcomb, 56 Neb. 583, 77 N. W. 1117, denying mandamus compelling governor to conduct trial of charges against fire and police commissioners authorized by void statute; State ex rel. White v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 104, 57 L. R. A. 250, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222, 89 N. W. 204, holding municipality has right to establish and control water works without legislative interference; Lexington v. Thompson, 113 Ky. 551, 57 L. R. A. 778, 68 S. W. 477, holding legislature cannot fix salaries of firemen in municipalities; State ex rel. Smyth v. Kennedy, 60 Neb. 303, 83 N. W. 87, denying writ of ouster against fire and police commissioners deprived of office by void statute; State ex rel. White v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 104, 57 L. R. A. 250, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222, 89 N. W. 204, holding statute authorizing appointment of board of water works trustees for cities of first class by judges of district court, infringement on right of local self-government; McDonald v. Louisville, 113 Ky. 437, 68 S. W. 413, holding amendment to city charter requiring levy of tax to create fund for pensioning members of fire department and families of deceased members, invalid.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. McCausland v. Freeman, 47 L. R. A. 67, which sustains statute arbitrarily establishing high school and requiring its maintenance by people of county.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 480) on power of legislature to impose burdens on municipalities and to control their local administration and property.

Disapproved in Americus v. Perry, 114 Ga. 879, 57 L. R. A. 234, 40 S. E. 1004, holding right of local self-government within municipalities entirely dependent upon legislative judgment and discretion; Newport v. Horton, 22 R. I. 207, 50 L. R. A. 338, 47 Atl. 312, sustaining statute empowering governor to appoint police commissioners for city.

Overruled in Redell v. Moores, 63 Neb. 225, 55 L. R. A. 744, 93 Am. St. Rep. 431, 88 N. W. 243, holding legislature may empower governor to appoint fire and police commissioners in cities of metropolitan class.

Cited as overruled in State ex rel. Wright v. Savage, 64 Neb. 701, 90 N. W. 898, holding that although decision is not law, it is res judicata as to right of major's appointees to hold offices of fire and police commissioners; State ex rel. Wright v. Savage, 64 Neb. 703, 90 N. W. 898, holding question of legislative power to impose upon governor duty of appointing board of fire and police commissioners for city, regarded as settled.

41 L. R. A. 644, PEOPLE v. SHELDON, 156 N. Y. 268, 66 Am. St. Rep. 564, 50 N. E. 840.

Effect of coercion on verdict.

Approved in Twiss v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 61 App. Div. 288, 70 N. Y. Supp. 241, setting aside verdict reached as result of coercion by trial judge; Hagen v.

New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 79 App. Div. 526, 80 N. Y. Supp. 580, holding language of court insisting upon agreement of jury, abuse of discretion.

41 L. R. A. 650, WILLIAMS v. HENDRICKS, 115 Ala. 277, 67 Am. St. Rep. 32, 22 So. 439.

Liability for cutting trees.

Approved in Glenn v. Adams, 129 Ala. 191, 29 So. 836, holding no liability incurred for cutting trees from lands of another under mistaken belief of ownership; Owens v. Fullington, 139 Ala. 663, 33 So. 1014, affirming judgment for defendant in action to recover statutory penalty for cutting trees from lands of another without his consent.

Liability for another's torts.

Approved in Southern R. Co. v. Wildman, 119 Ala. 571, 24 So. 764, holding employer liable for tortious acts of servant done within scope of employment.

Cited in footnote to Shapard v. Hynes, 52 L. R. A. 675, which denies liability for tortious act of former partner.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 464, 472) on liability of partnership for torts.

41 L. R. A. 658, BRYAN v. ADLER, 97 Wis. 124, 65 Am. St. Rep. 99, 72 N. W. 368.

Liability for servant's wrongful acts.

Approved in Bergman v. Hendrickson, 106 Wis. 437, 80 Am. St. Rep. 47, 82 N. W. 304, holding saloonkeeper liable for assault by bartender attempting to enforce payment for liquor; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. People, 103 Ill. App. 563, holding company jointly liable with agent unlawfully transacting business; Gaertner v. Bues, 109 Wis. 171, 85 N. W. 388, holding landlord not liable in punitive damages for unauthorized or unratified acts of officer executing writ; Rueping v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 116 Wis. 630, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 93 N. W. 843, holding recovery of compensatory damages for injury inflicted by servant in performance of duties unauthorized, unless wrongful act directed or subsequently affirmed by master.

41 L. R. A. 669, HALL v. NORFOLK & W. R. CO. 44 W. Va. 36, 67 Am. St. Rep. 757, 28 S. E. 754.

Liability for servant's wrongful acts.

Cited in State use of Burt v. Allen, 48 W. Va. 161, 50 L. R. A. 287, 86 Am. St. Rep. 29, 35 S. E. 990, holding justice of peace and sureties liable for double value of exempt property sold by special constable under process.

41 L. R. A. 677, O'LEARY v. BROOKS ELEVATOR CO. 7 N. D. 554, 75 N. W. 919.

Liability for injury to trespassing children.

Cited in footnotes to Brinkley Car Works Mfg. Co. v. Cooper, 57 L. R. A. 724, which denies liability for injury to six-year-old boy from carelessly walking into pool of hot water; Paolino v. McKendall, 60 L. R. A. 133, which denies duty of occupier of land burning rubbish to guard from fire young children accustomed to play there; Ryan v. Towar, 55 L. R. A. 310, which denies land owner's duty to make premises safe for one attempting to rescue trespassing child caught in water wheel in unused building; Uttermohlen v. Bogg's Run Min. & Mfg. Co. 55 L. R. A. 911, which denies liability of mine owner for injury to trespassing child by cable and pulleys hauling coal cars; Kopplekom v. Colorado Cement Pipe Co. 54 L. R. A. 284, which holds owner of uninclosed city lot liable for injury to young child by toppling over of large cement pipe used by children as plaything; Biggs v. Consolidated Barb-Wire Co. 44 L. R. A. 655, which holds owner liable for maintaining dangerous machinery on private grounds unprotected from visits of trespassing children.

Liability of infant for torts.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 673) on liability of infant for torts.

41 L. R. A. 681, KEYS v. PITTSBURG & W. COAL CO. 58 Ohio St. 246, 65 Am. St. Rep. 754, 50 N. E. 911.

41 L. R. A. 689, STATE v. GARDNER, 58 Ohio St. 599, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785, 51 N. E. 136.

State regulation of trades and professions.

Approved in State v. Gravett, 65 Ohio St. 309, 55 L. R. A. 793, 87 Am. St. Rep. 605, 62 N. E. 325, holding legislature may require established practitioners of osteopathy to conform to reasonable standard of qualifications; State v. Biggs, 133 N. C. 739, 64 L. R. A. 144, 94 Am. St. Rep. 731, 46 S. E. 401, holding statute attempting to confer exclusive right to treat disease upon licensed doctors, not within police power; State ex rel. Winkler v. Benzenberg, 101 Wis. 177, 16 N. W. 345, sustaining statutory provision requiring examination of plumbers as to practical knowledge before issuing license.

Cited in footnote to State v. Hyman, 64 L. R. A. 637, which holds prohibition against use of room in tenement or dwelling house for manufacture of clothing, except by immediate member of family, within police power.

Equality of rights and privileges.

Cited in State v. Gravett, 65 Ohio St. 312, 55 L. R. A. 794, 87 Am. St. Rep. 605, 62 N. E. 325, holding statute void in discriminating against osteopaths by requiring longer term of study than is required of physicians; Hubbard v. State (Ohio) 58 L. R. A. 659, 64 N. E. 109, holding unconstitutional, statute creating public school teachers' pension fund by deduction of percentage of salaries; French v. Shirley, 7 Ohio N. P. 32, holding invalid, statute authorizing summary seizure and destruction of unlicensed fishing nets; Yensen v. State, 7 Ohio N. P. 23, holding unconstitutional, statute discriminating against small vessels in imposing tax for use of gill nets; State v. Mitchell, 97 Me. 74, 94 Am. St. Rep. 481, 53 Atl. 887, holding statute imposing license tax on peddlers not paying tax of $25 on stock in trade, and exempting those paying such tax, invalid; State ex rel. Lewis v. Smith, 158 Ind. 572, 63 L. R. A. 129, 63 N. E. 25 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining statute authorizing deduction of mortgages not exceeding $700 from assessed valuation for taxation purposes.

Cited in footnotes to Harrodsburg v. Renfro, 51 L. R. A. 897, which holds void, ordinance imposing greater license fee for sale of liquors on main street of town than elsewhere; Com. use of Titusville v. Clark, 57 L. R. A. 348, which holds void, exemption from license tax of contractors and real-estate dealers, but not others. whose business less than $1,000; Knisely v. Cotterel, 50 L. R. A. 87, which sustains statute fixing different rates of license for retailers, wholesalers and sellers on board of trade; State v. Garbroski, 56 L. R. A. 570, which holds void, statute exempting veterans from requirement for peddling license.

41 L. R. A. 692, STATE ex rel. MCCAIN v. METSCHAN, 32 Or. 372, 46 Pac. 791, 53 Pac. 1071.

Amending complaint upon remandment.

Approved in Lieuallen v. Mosgrove, 33 Or. 291, 54 Pac. 664, holding privilege of pleading over must be determined by court below upon remandment for further proceedings; McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 281, 74 Pac. 491, holding, upon remand of case affirmed on appeal from judgment on demurrer, it is open to trial court whether or not to allow defeated party to plead further.

Actions maintained by state.

Approved in State v. Ohio Oil Co. 150 Ind. 38, 47 L. R. A. 634, 49 N. E. 809, sustaining right of state, as such, to maintain injunction against unlawful escape of natural gas.

41 L. R. A. 695, ROBB v. PENNSYLVANIA CO. FOR INS. ON LIVES & G. A. 186 Pa. 456, 42 W. N. C. 313, 475, 65 Am. St. Rep. 868, 40 Atl. 969, 41 Atl. 49.

Which of two innocent parties must suffer loss.

Approved in Vanderslice v. Royal Ins. Co. 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 237, 43 W. N. C. 384, holding that insurer must suffer loss of payments induced through fraud of third party intrusted with policy; Harvey v. Schuylkill Real Estate, Title Ins. & T. Co. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 599, holding that use of corporation letterhead by solicitor does not justify belief that he is empowered to act for company in a particular transaction; Googe v. Gaskill, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 43, holding that loss must be borne by party relying on assignment of mortgage forged by attorney in fact, authorized only to receipt for payments and enter satisfaction of record; Grasselli Chemical Co. v. Biddle Purchasing Co. 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 429, holding principal liable for goods sold and delivered to agent, according to previous dealing, by person without notice of revocation of agency.

41 L. R. A. 700, HERMAN BROS. v. KATZ BROS. 101 Tenn. 118, 47 S. W. 86.

Insurance; change of possession.

Cited in McClelland v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 107 La. 129, 31 So. 691, holding mere formal seizure by sheriff not such change of possession as invalidates policy.

41 L. R. A. 703, HARRISON v. TURNBULL, 95 Va. 721, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830, 30 S. E. 372.

Appeal by infant during minority.

Approved in Seymour v. Alkire, 47 W. Va. 305, 34 S. E. 953, and Lockhart v. Vandyke, 97 Va. 363, 33 S. E. 613, holding that infant aggrieved by adverse decree may sue out writ of error, bill of review, or original bill by next friend, or resort to same remedies within six months after attaining majority.

Collateral attack upon decrees.

Approved in Turnbull v. Mann, 99 Va. 45, 37 S. E. 288, holding decree confirming report of receiver as to delivery of trust note to custodian appointed by court cannot be collaterally questioned in proceeding for discharge of lien because of presumption of payment.

Effect of decree upon rights of unborn heirs.

Cited in Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 406, 40 S. E. 490, holding unborn children standing in same class and having same rights as persons living, deemed before court by representation in proceedings for sale of their interest in estate.

41 L. R. A. 707, HILLER v. ELLIS, 72 Miss. 701, 18 So. 95.

Overstating preferred claim.

Distinguished in Goodbar Shoe Co. v. Montgomery, 73 Miss. 75, 19 So. 196, holding assignment not invalidated by overstatement of preferred claim, when assignee directed to pay "true" amount due.

41 L. R. A. 714, MERRILL v. HARRIS, 65 Ark. 355, 67 Am. St. Rep. 929, 46 S. W. 538.

Rights of child in parent's homestead.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 62) on rights of child or children in homestead of parent.

41 L. R. A. 718, STATE v. CALDWELL, 50 La. Ann. 666, 69 Am. St. Rep. 465, 23 So. 869.

Constitutional provisions; methods of procedure.

Approved in State v. Cook, 52 La. Ann. 117, 26 So. 751, holding constitutional change of method of drawing petit jury applicable to offense committed before adoption; State v. Marceaux, 50 La. Ann. 1139, 24 So. 611, holding constitutional provision reducing number of trial jurors applicable to one indicted before its adoption.

Cited in State ex rel. Sherburne v. Baker, 50 La. Ann. 1248, 69 Am. St. Rep. 472, 24 So. 240, holding constitutional provision for trial without jury inapplicable to offense committed before its adoption.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Vincent, 52 L. R. A. 83, which holds indictment found by less than twenty-three grand jurors demurrable; State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which sustains statute authorizing prosecution by information of crimes already committed.

Overruled in State v. Ardoin, 51 La. Ann. 172, 24 So. 802, holding constitutional provision reducing number of trial jurors invalid as applied to offenses committed before its adoption.

Self-operative constitutional provisions.

Approved in State v. Favre, 51 La. Ann. 437, 25 So. 93, holding self-operative constitutional provision for indictment by grand jury of twelve persons; Globe Lumber Co. v. Griffeth, 107 La. 623, 31 So. 1010, holding self-operative, constitutional provision as to delay for suspensive appeal.

41 L. R. A. 720, SUPREME LODGE, O. OF G. C. v. SIMERING, 88 Md. 276, 71 Am. St. Rep. 409, 40 Atl. 723.

Judicial interference with corporate elections.

Approved in Walker v. Johnson, 17 App. D. C. 169, sustaining preliminary injunction against holding corporate election; Garmire v. American Min. Co. 93 Ill. App. 333, sustaining interlocutory injunction against persons acting as directors until title determined by quo warranto.

41 L. R. A. 724, PIPER v. NEW YORK C. & H. R. R. CO. 156 N. Y. 224, 66 Am. St. Rep. 559, 50 N. E. 851.

Cited as Reversing 89 Hun, 75, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1072, in Connor v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 77 App. Div. 389, 79 N. Y. Supp. 294.

Carrier's duty to passenger.

Cited in Koehne v. New York & Q. C. R. Co. 32 App. Div. 422, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1088, holding railroad company bound to exercise very high degree of care and skill in operation of its cars, to avoid injury to passengers.

Contributory negligence.

Approved in Mearns v. Central R. Co. 163 N. Y. 114, 57 N. E. 292, denying recovery to one injured by stepping from moving train after station called by guard; Brugher v. Buchtenkirch, 167 N. Y. 157, 60 N. E. 420, denying recovery to caller at apartment house, injured while passing along unfamiliar dark hallway; Meinrenken v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 81 App. Div. 137, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1074, holding it negligence to stand near track while noise and smoke of one train obscures approach of another; Bentley v. Loverock, 102 Ill. App. 171, denying recovery to licensee falling down elevator shaft in unfamiliar, poorly lighted building; McCarthy v. Emerson, 77 App. Div. 566, 79 N. Y. Supp. 180, holding hod carrier ascending plank without regarding proximity of overhead timbers, guilty of contributory negligence.

41 L. R. A. 727, STATE ex rel. MONNETT v. ADAMS, 58 Ohio St. 612, 65 Am. St. Rep. 792, 51 N. E. 135.

Civil rights of women.

Cited in footnotes to Re Maddox, 55 L. R. A. 298, which denies right of woman to practise law; Oren v. Abbott, 47 L. R. A. 92, which denies eligibility of woman as prosecuting attorney.

41 L. R. A. 728, EVANSVILLE v. SENHENN, 151 Ind. 42, 68 Am. St. Rep. 218, 47 N. E. 634, 51 N. E. 88.

Doctrine of imputed negligence.

Approved in McNamara v. Beck, 21 Ind. App. 484, 52 N. E. 707; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Kowalski, 34 C. C. A. 4, 92 Fed. 313; Jeffersonville v. McHenry, 22 Ind. App. 15, 53 N. E. 183, — holding parent's negligence not imputable to child suing for own benefit; Warren v. Manchester Street R. Co. 70 N. H. 361, 47 Atl. 735, holding parent's negligence not imputable to child in action by parent as administrator.

Cited in Bias v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 362, 33 S. E. 240 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining parent's recovery for killing of child fifteen months old, while trespassing on tracks.

Municipal liability for street obstruction.

Later appeal in 26 Ind. App. 364, 59 N. E. 863, holding municipality bound to overcome presumption that lumber pile on street is unlawful obstruction.

Cited in Anderson v. Fleming, 160 Ind. 599, 67 N. E. 443, holding city liable for injury from fall into excavation across sidewalk, made by independent contractor under contract with city.

41 L. R. A. 737, BARNARD v. SHIRLEY, 151 Ind. 160, 47 N. E. 671.

Riparian rights.

Cited in footnotes to Meng v. Coffey, 60 L. R. A. 910, which requires use by riparian owners of water for irrigation to be reasonable; People v. Hulbert, 64 L. R. A. 265, which sustains right of upper riparian owner to bathe in lake from which municipality takes its water supply.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 737) on state and Federal ownership of waters; (58 L. R. A. 240) on acquisition of water supply by right of eminent domain; (59 L. R. A. 333) on liability for facilitating evaporation from stream.

41 L. R. A. 760, COX v. STATE, 117 Ala. 103, 67 Am. St. Rep. 166, 23 So. 806.

41 L. R. A. 762, MEYER v. SAN DIEGO, 121 Cal. 102, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22, 53 Pac. 434.

Disqualification of judges.

Approved in Meyer v. San Diego, 121 Cal. 114, 53 Pac. 1128, holding judge owning real estate taxable for city's bonded indebtedness, disqualified to sit in suit to test validity of contract involving creation of bonded debt.

Cited in Adams v. Minor, 121 Cal. 374, 53 Pac. 815, holding judge who is stockholder in bank holding bonds issued by irrigation district, disqualified from sitting in action involving validity of bonds; State ex rel. Hart v. Call, 41 Fla. 445, 79 Am. St. Rep. 189, 26 So. 1014, holding tax-paying judge disqualified to sit in suit to declare election establishing school subdistrict illegal, and to restrain assessment and collection of tax for school purposes; State ex rel. Schaw v. Noyes, 25 Nev. 49, 56 Pac. 946, holding tax-paying judge not disqualified from sitting in suit to enjoin city executing contract for construction of water works to be paid for with municipal bonds.

Cited in footnote to First Nat. Bank v. McGuire, 47 L. R. A. 413, which holds judge disqualified to try case in which plaintiff is corporation of which his wife is a shareholder.

Distinguished in Higgins v. San Diego, 126 Cal. 308, 58 Pac. 700, holding possible contingency of such financial situation of city arising as may affect judge as taxpayer not disqualification to sit in action for money demand against city; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 133 Cal. 532, 65 Pac. 1049, holding contingency of possible future increase of taxation in city, too remote and indistinct to disqualify judge who is taxpayer; State ex rel. Smith v. Pitts, 139 Ala. 156, 36 So. 20, holding judge who has purchased property from alleged lunatic not disqualified from sitting in proceedings of inquisition of lunacy.

41 L. R. A. 767, MAY v. MAY, 5 App. D. C. 552.

Effect of removal of trustee.

Affirmed in 167 U. S. 318, 42 L. ed. 183, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, holding upon removal of trustee, surrender of possession and control of trust property follows as necessary incident.

41 L. R. A. 772, PAULK v. SYCAMORE, 104 Ga. 24, 69 Am. St. Rep. 128, 30 S. E. 417.

Equitable interference with enforcement of penal statutes.

Approved in O'Brien v. Harris, 105 Ga. 736, 31 S. E. 745, holding that equity cannot enjoin criminal acts not apparently affecting petitioner's property rights; Moultrie v. Patterson, 109 Ga. 373, 34 S. E. 600, denying injunction against enforcement of ordinance imposing penalty for selling meats and fish elsewhere than in city market, when adequate legal remedy exists; Bainbridge v. Reynolds, 111 Ga. 759, 36 S. E. 935, denying injunction against prosecution under penal ordinance; Bainbridge v. Reynolds, 111 Ga. 759, 36 S. E. 935, holding that equity will not consider question of validity of criminal ordinance upon petition for injunction; Cannon v. Merry, 116 Ga. 294, 42 S. E. 274, holding dispensary selling liquors openly under color of lawful authority not subject to abatement by injunction under "blind tiger" statute.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Kenamore v. Wood, 48 L. R. A. 596, which denies right to injunction against enforcing alleged unconstitutional statute for inspection of beer.

Criminal nature of ordinance prosecutions.

Cited in Barnett v. Atlanta, 109 Ga. 168, 34 S. E. 322, holding prosecution for violation of municipal penal ordinance, criminal case within statutory provision as to time for signing bill of exceptions.

41 L. R. A. 775, PEOPLE ex rel. AKIN v. KIPLEY, 171 Ill. 44, 49 N. E. 229.

Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction in 170 U. S. 182, 42 L. ed. 998, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550, on ground that no question under Constitution and laws of United States raised by pleadings.

Constitutionality of civil service act.

Followed without special discussion in People ex rel. Akin v. Kraus, 171 Ill. 131, 48 N. E. 1052.

Approved in People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 606, 51 N. E. 785, holding civil service act not violative of guaranteed constitutional "privileges and immunities;" Morrison v. People, 196 Ill. 463, 63 N. E. 989, sustaining civil service act authorizing president of county board to appoint civil service commission without consulting county commissioners; Kipley v. Luthardt, 178 Ill. 526, 53 N. E. 74, sustaining validity of civil service act as applied to police department of city of Chicago.

Who within civil service act.

Approved in Brenan v. People, 176 Ill. 623, 52 N. E. 353, holding civil service act applicable to employment under Chicago board of education; People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 598, 51 N. E. 785, holding civil service act applicable to subordinates in Chicago city clerk's office; Atty. Gen. v. Trehy, 178 Mass. 195, 59 N. E. 659, holding almoner of Chicopee, appointed annually by overseers of poor, subordinate officer subject to civil service rules.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. Leary v. Knox, 54 L. R. A. 589, which holds promotion of police officer for personal heroism not prohibited by civil service law.

Judicial interference with proceedings in election contest.

Cited in People ex rel. Malley v. Barrett, 203 Ill. 109, 96 Am. St. Rep. 296, 67 N. E. 742, holding right to office not property right entitling de jure officer to injunction against production and canvassing of ballots in election contest.

Cited in footnote to Taylor v. Beckham, 49 L. R. A. 258, which denies power of court to review legislative determination of contest as to office of governor.

Delegation of legislative powers.

Cited in Walker v. Towle, 156 Ind. 643, 53 L. R. A. 751, 59 N. E. 20, holding ordinance empowering mayor to require temporary muzzling of dogs under certain circumstances, not delegation of legislative power.

Cited in footnote to Adams v. Beloit, 47 L. R. A. 441, which sustains option giving specially chartered cities power to adopt provisions of general law.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in People ex rel. Krause v. Harrison, 191 Ill. 267, 61 N. E. 99, Affirming 92 Ill. App. 651, holding that statutes will be construed with regard to existing circumstances, contemporaneous conditions, and object and necessity for adoption; Dodge v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 70, 66 N. E. 367, holding provision requiring instruments in general of local improvement board to be signed by president and secretary not applicable to recommendations to city council, where another provision relating to particular subject provided for signatures of majority of board.

Reasonableness of ordinances.

Cited in footnote to Slaughter v. O'Berry, 48 L. R. A. 442, which holds void, ordinance requiring city to provide materials and labor for making sewer connections to within 3 feet of building.

Right of trial by jury.

Approved in Barclay v. Barclay, 184 Ill. 475, 56 N. E. 821, Affirming 83 Ill. App. 369, holding jury trial not necessary in contempt proceedings for failure to pay alimony; Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 519, 50 L. R. A. 280, 33 S. E. 274, holding jury trial unnecessary in proceedings to remove public officer for immorality.

41 L. R. A. 792, SUN INS. OFFICE v. VARBLE, 103 Ky. 758, 46 S. W. 486.

What constitutes other insurance.

Distinguished in Home Ins. Co. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 369, 58 L. R. A. 61, 68 S. W. 453, holding policy prohibiting other insurance not violated by mortgagee effecting insurance upon his interest.

Tenant's duty as to repairs.

Cited in note (64 L. R. A. 660) on tenant's duty to leave premises in good condition.

41 L. R. A. 794, STONE v. BOSTON & A. R. CO. 171 Mass. 536, 51 N. E. 1.

What constitutes proximate cause.

Approved in Fuchs v. St. Louis, 167 Mo. 648, 57 L. R. A. 145, 67 S. W. 610, holding city not liable for explosion of gases in sewer, caused by contact with lighted candle in connecting cellar; Chattanooga Light & P. Co. v. Hodges, 109 Tenn. 341, 60 L. R. A. 461, 97 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 S. W. 616, holding employee's negligence in entering burning building of employer to telephone alarm, proximate cause of death from burning.

Cited in footnotes to Southern R. Co. v. Webb, 59 L. R. A. 109, which holds negligent jolting of train, hurling passenger through door on track insensible, cause of death by train of other company; Daniels v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 62 L. R. A. 751, which holds death by suicide of one rendered insane by negligent act, not proximate result of the negligent act; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L. R. A. 416, which holds that negligence of owner of building in permitting hall to be dark does not render him liable for injury to one stepping into elevator well through door pushed open by strange boy, apparently to permit her to enter.

Liability for negligence of third party.

Cited in Chandler v. Kansas City Missouri Gas Co. 174 Mo. 329, 62 L. R. A. 477, 97 Am. St. Rep. 570, 73 S. W. 502; holding gas company not liable for injury to ash-pit cleaner falling into hole made by third person under track extending from ash-pit to dump.

Cited in footnotes to Langenbaugh v. Anderson, 62 L. R. A. 948, which denies liability of lessor of lot for production of oil or gas therefrom, for injury to adjoining owner's property through escape of oil by lessee's negligence; Louisville & E. Mail Co. v. Barnes, 64 L. R. A. 574, which holds that negligence of steamer company does not prevent recovery for death of passenger by drowning while attempting to disembark, from other steamboat company whose negligence was also responsible for his death.

Taking case from jury.

Cited in Lauterer v. Manbattan R. Co. 63 C. C. A. 42, 128 Fed. 544, holding that where, as matter of law, defendant's negligence is not proximate cause of injury, case should be withdrawn from jury.

41 L. R. A. 800, SMITH v. SMITH, 171 Mass. 404, 68 Am. St. Rep. 440, 50 N. E. 933.

Annulment of marriage for disease and fraud.

Approved in Donnelly v. Strong, 175 Mass. 159, 55 N. E. 892, refusing to annul marriage for wife's concealment of prior marriage, where maintaining illicit relations with petitioner before marriage; Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 71 App. Div. 518, 75 N. Y. Supp. 878, denying right to annulment of marriage after parties have lived together eight years, for subsequently discovered falsity of wife's statement, inducing the marriage, that she had been delivered of a child of which husband was the father; Vondal v. Vondal, 175 Mass. 384, 78 Am. St. Rep. 502, 56 N. E. 586, refusing to annul consummated marriage for undisclosed venereal disease existing prior thereto, but curable at time of marriage; Svenson v. Svenson, 178 N. Y. 59, 70 N. E. 120, annulling unconsummated marriage on ground of husband's previous affliction with venereal disease, knowledge of which he fraudulently concealed.

Cited in footnote to McMahan v. McMahan, 41 L. R. A. 802, which holds communication of syphilis to wife by husband, who is probably incurable, ground for divorce.

Recovery for contracting venereal disease.

Cited in footnote to Deeds v. Strode, 43 L. R. A. 207, which denies right to recover for contracting venereal disease from one with whom married woman lived under marriage void because former husband was living.

41 L. R. A. 802, McMAHEN v. McMAHEN, 186 Pa. 485, 40 Atl. 795.

Cruelty justifying divorce.

Cited in Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 260, granting divorce to wife for cruel and barbarous treatment upon evidence of communication of venereal disease by husband; Baker v. Baker, 195 Pa. 410, 46 Pa. 96, granting divorce to wife for cruel and barbarous treatment upon evidence that venereal disease was contracted by husband subsequent to marriage; Rochelle v. Rochelle, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 460, holding charges against husband of illicit relations with other women, striking him with broom and milk can, and attempts to choke him, not cruel and barbarous treatment entitling husband to divorce; Gardner v. Gardner, 104 Tenn. 412, 78 Am. St. Rep. 924, 58 S. W. 342, holding compulsion of wife in delicate health to abnormal sexual intercourse constitutes cruel and inhuman treatment entitling her to divorce.

Cited in footnotes to Ring v. Ring, 62 L. R. A. 878, which holds habitual and intemperate use of morphine not cruel treatment entitling wife to divorce; Maddox v. Maddox, 52 L. R. A. 628, which denies right to divorce for cruelty, from failure to provide suitable dwelling house, clothing, and food.

Recovery for contracting venereal disease.

Cited in footnotes to Deeds v. Strode, 43 L. R. A. 207, which denies right to recover for contracting venereal disease from one with whom married woman lived under marriage void because former husband was living; Smith v. Smith, 41 L. R. A. 800, which authorizes annulment of marriage where husband afflicted with syphilis which is probably incurable.

Practice on dismissing master's report.

Cited in Howe v. Howe, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 195, holding it not good practice for court of common pleas to dismiss exceptions to master's report in divorce suit, without discussing evidence.

41 L. R. A. 805, McHUGH v. McHUGH, 186 Pa. 197, 42 W. N. C. 307, 65 Am. St. Rep. 849, 40 Atl. 410.

Inference from nonproduction of evidence.

Approved in Wills v. Hardcastle, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 529, and Ginder v. Bachman, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 410, 43 W. N. C. 122, holding that jury may draw unfavorable inference of fact against party failing to produce material evidence within his control; Wills v. Hardcastle, 8 Del. Co. Rep. 389, holding jury may draw inference unfavorable to party failing to produce oral testimony of friendly witnesses, presumably best informed upon subject under investigation.

Presumption from attempt to influence juror.

Cited in Com. v. Brown, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 502, holding competent to rebut prisoner's evidence of good character by proof, attempts to influence juror who has been or might have been impeached in his case.

41 L. R. A. 801, GULF, C. & S. F. R. CO. v. BEALL, 91 Tex. 310, 66 Am. St. Rep. 892, 42 S. W. 1054.

Parent's action for child's injuries.

Cited in Sternenberg v. Mailhos, 39 C. C. A. 412, 99 Fed. 47, sustaining action by parent for damages from loss of services of minor child negligently killed.

Cited in footnote to Bagwell v. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 486, which holds action for injury to minor daughter should not be dismissed for her refusal, after attaining majority, to submit to physical examination.

41 L. R. A. 817, MORLEY v. SNOW, 117 Mich. 246, 75 N. W. 466.

Right to eject passenger.

Cited in footnote to Nashville Street R. Co. v. Griffin, 49 L. R. A. 451, which denies authority to eject passenger who, after paying fare inside station, enters car which has stopped just outside station.

41 L. R. A. 820, CARPENTER v. SNOW, 117 Mich. 489, 72 Am. St. Rep. 576, 76 N. W. 78.

41 L. R. A. 823, HURT v. FORD, 142 Mo. 283, 44 S. W. 228.

Conditional execution of contract.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 346) on conditional execution of contract under parol agreement that it shall not take effect until others have signed it.

Pleading statute of frauds.

Approved in Hillman v. Allen, 145 Mo. 643, 47 S. W. 509, holding that statute of frauds need not be specially pleaded when answer denies agreement relied upon.

Promise to answer for another's default.

Approved in Hartley v. Sandford, 66 N. J. L. 631, 55 L. R. A. 208, footnote p. 206, 50 Atl. 454, holding void, father's oral promise to reimburse surety for son, if latter fails to pay debt; Gansey v. Orr, 173 Mo. 546, 73 S. W. 477, holding promise of incorporators to individually indemnify subscriber to stock of corporation in event of failure of enterprise, within statute of frauds.

Parol evidence to contradict written contract.

Cited in Holmes v. Farris, 97 Mo. App. 313, 71 S. W. 116, holding parol evidence not admissible to show that negotiable promissory note, absolute on its face, is payable only on happening of contingency.

41 L. R. A. 831, DELAWARE, L. & W. R. CO. v. REICH, 61 N. J. L. 635, 68 Am. St. Rep. 727, 40 Atl. 682.

Liability to trespassers and licensees.

Approved in Devoe v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 63 N. J. L. 278, 43 Atl. 899, holding railway company not liable for death of child struck by train while crossing tracks, though such use of property acquiesced in; Furey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 274, 51 Atl. 505, holding company not liable to person injured by closing of train while attempting to pass through opening between cars; Taylor v. Haddonfield & C. Turnp. Co. 65 N. J. L. 104, 46 Atl. 707, holding company not liable to mere licensee upon highway, injured by horse becoming frightened at electric car; Uthermohlen v. Bogg's Run Co. 50 W. Va. 464, 55 L. R. A. 914, 88 Am. St. Rep. 884, 40 S. E. 410, holding owner not liable for injury to trespassing child by cable and pulley used in operating mines; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Beavers, 113 Ga. 411, 54 L. R. A. 320, 39 S. E. 82, holding owner of premises not liable for death of child by falling into unguarded excavation while trespassing; Clark v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 Wash. 148, 59 L. R. A. 512, 69 Pac. 636, holding company not liable for death of child killed by train while crossing tracks to more readily reach circus permitted to exhibit upon its adjoining land; Paolino v. McKendall, 60 L. R. A. 135, denying that occupier of land burning rubbish thereon is under obligation to guard children, resorting to premises, against injury from fire; Grant v. Hass, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 692, 75 S. W. 342, holding owner setting spring gun to protect melon patch liable for injury to trespasser going to owner's house to make inquiry; Land v. Fitzgerald, 68 N. J. L. 30, 52 Atl. 229, holding lessor not liable for injury to tenant from fall of chimney from latent defect known to landlord.

Cited in footnotes to Kramer v. Southern R. Co. 52 L. R. A. 359, which denies railroad company's liability for death of child by fall of pile of cross-ties in unused portion of street; George v. Los Angeles R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 829, which denies company's liability to boys hurt while playing with trolley car left in street, after loosening brake; Kopplekom v. Colorado Cement Pipe Co. 54 L. R. A. 284, which holds owner of uninclosed city lot liable for injury to young child by toppling over of large cement pipe used by children as plaything; Biggs v. Consolidated Barb-Wire Co. 44 L. R. A. 655, which holds owner liable for maintaining dangerous machinery on private grounds unprotected from visits of trespassing children; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 59 L. R. A. 920, which holds railroad company liable for injury to child on turntable not guarded or properly fastened.

Disapproved in Edginton v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 116 Iowa, 434, 57 L. R. A. 570, footnote p. 561, 90 N. W. 95, holding railroad company liable for injuries to young children by unfastened turntable in unfenced lot near public way.

41 L. R. A. 836, WHALEN v. CONSOLIDATED TRACTION CO. 61 N. J. L. 606, 68 Am. St. Rep. 723, 40 Atl. 645.

Alighting from moving car as negligence.

Approved in Scott v. Bergen County Traction Co. 63 N. J. L. 411, 43 Atl. 1060, holding it not negligence per se for passengers to ride upon platform of electric street car, or to go there while awaiting opportunity to alight; Babcock v. Los Angeles Traction Co. 128 Cal. 178, 60 Pac. 780, sustaining recovery by passenger injured by sudden lurching of car after he started to leave, without waiting for it to come to full stop; Hansen v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 696, 46 Atl. 718, holding common carrier negligent in failing to anticipate and avoid injury to passenger alighting from crowded car; Flynn v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 377, 45 Atl. 799, holding company not liable for injury to passenger struck by passing vehicle while standing upon running board of moving trolley car, preparatory to alighting.

Presumption from fact of accident.

Cited in Dusenbury v. North Hudson County R. Co. 66 N. J. L. 45, 48 Atl. 520, holding prima facie negligence shown by unexplained derailment of car; Dusenbury v. North Hudson County R. Co. 66 N. J. L. 46, 48 Atl. 520, holding question whether company exercised that high degree of care imposed upon carriers for safety of passengers, for jury.

Cited in footnotes to Springer v. Ford, 52 L. R. A. 930, which sustains presumption of negligence from injury to passenger by unexplained breaking of elevator appliance; Cassady v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 285, which holds ordinary burning out of fuse in electric car not prima facie evidence of carrier's negligence.

Distinguished in Paynter v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 67 N. J. L. 624, 52 Atl. 367, holding that throwing of woman from street car by sudden jerk while in act of alighting raises no presumption of negligence.

41 L. R. A. 838, PEOPLE ex rel. BURBY v. HOWLAND, 155 N. Y. 270, 49 N. E. 775.

Constitutional rights of office.

Approved in People ex rel. Ryan v. Washington County, 155 N. Y. 296, 49 N. E. 779, holding unconstitutional, statute which deprives deputy sheriff of right to fees for services rendered in justice's criminal matters; People ex rel. Saloom v. Whitney, 32 App. Div. 146, 52 N. Y. Supp. 695, Affirming 24 Misc. 266, 53 N. Y. Supp. 570, sustaining statute depriving justice of peace of criminal jurisdiction in village by conferring same upon police justice therein; People ex rel. Holmes v. Lane, 53 App. Div. 535, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1004, holding invalid, statutory provision depriving justice of peace of constitutional powers, by conferring "exclusive" jurisdiction upon police justice; People ex rel. Balcom v. Mosher, 45 App. Div. 73, 61 N. Y. Supp. 452, holding invalid statute and rule requiring appointment of person graded highest, as conflicting with appointive power expressly conferred on officers; Re Schultes, 33 App. Div. 530, 54 N. Y. Supp. 34, sustaining provisions of Greater New York charter creating municipal court by consolidation of district and justice's court; Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 102, 56 L. R. A. 860, 61 N. E. 118, sustaining anti-monopoly act of 1899, requiring justice of supreme court to grant order for preliminary examination of witness to aid attorney general in framing complaint.

Cited in footnote to McCulley v. State, 46 L. R. A. 567, which upholds legislative power to abolish existing courts and change counties from one circuit to another.

Right of local self-government.

Cited in People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 435, 63 L. R. A. 890, 67 N. E. 69, holding local municipal functions cannot be transferred to state officer; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 115, 65 N. E. 956, holding statute conferring upon governor power of removal of city police commissioner, inconsistent with local power of appointment; State ex rel. Geake v. Fox, 158 Ind. 140, 56 L. R. A. 899, 63 N. E. 19, holding statute giving governor appointment of members of department of public safety in certain cities, who shall have supervision of fire, police, etc., violates constitutional principle of municipal self-government; Re Brenner, 35 Misc. 313, 71 N. Y. Supp. 44, holding that county clerk's duty of making up jury lists and drawing jurors cannot be transferred to commissioner of jurors of Kings county, not elected or appointed in constitutional manner; State ex rel. Geake v. Fox, 158 Ind. 140, 56 L. R. A. 899, 63 N. E. 19, holding invalid, statute authorizing governor to appoint board to control municipal fire and police departments; People ex rel. Oneida County v. Oneida County, 170 N. Y. 108, 62 N. E. 1092, sustaining legislative appointment of board of commissioners to erect county courthouse; People ex rel. Ward v. Scheu, 60 App. Div. 594, 69 N. Y. Supp. 597, holding that legislature may provide for filling vacancy in statutory office of commissioner of public works.

Delegation of legislative power.

Cited in Kansas City v. Bacon, 147 Mo. 304, 48 S. W. 860 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining provision of city charter requiring recommendation of park commissioners before municipal council could establish public park, as not being delegation of legislative power.

41 L. R. A. 846, JEWELERS' MERCANTILE AGENCY v. JEWELERS' WEEK-LY PUB. CO. 155 N. Y. 241, 63 Am. St. Rep. 666, 49 N. E. 872.

Property rights in mental labor and secret information.

Approved in Daly v. Walrath, 40 App. Div. 224, 57 N. Y. Supp. 1125, holding exclusive right to produce play in United States lost by publication thereof in Germany with author's consent; Larrowe-Loisette v. O'Loughlin, 88 Fed. 898, holding right to copyright lost by author's selling books with restrictions against communicating contents; Wright v. Eisle, 86 App. Div. 358, 83 N. Y. Supp. 887, denying that architect has common-law right of property in plans for house after publication, so as to prevent copy by another.

Cited in footnote to Miffin v. R. H. White Co. 61 L. R. A. 134, which holds exclusive rights under copyright lost by author permitting publication in magazine of chapters of book, without other than usual notice of magazine publishers.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 358, 374, 375) on common-law rights of authors and others in intellectual productions.

Distinguished in F. W. Dodge Co. v. Construction Information Co. 183 Mass. 65, 60 L. R. A. 811, 97 Am. St. Rep. 412, 66 N. E. 204, holding right to protection against unauthorized use of secret information not lost by furnishing same to subscribers under contract not to disclose it; Chicago Board of Trade v. Hadden-Krull Co. 109 Fed. 706, granting injunction against unauthorized use of quotations by third party, though previously furnished for exclusive use of customer by ticker or blackboard.

41 L. R. A. 852, CLEVELAND v. McCANNA, 7 N. D. 455, 66 Am. St. Rep. 670, 75 N. W. 908.

What constitutes de facto officer.

Cited in footnote to Oliver v. Jersey City, 48 L. R. A. 412, which holds unauthorized acceptance of second office does not prevent one being de facto officer on continuing performance of duties of first office.

Judgment as set-off.

Approved in Long v. Collins, 15 S. D. 262, 88 N. W. 571, holding judgment for conversion of exempt property not satisfied by another judgment held by defendant as creditor of plaintiff.

41 L. R. A. 854, STATE v. POWELL, 58 Ohio St. 324, 50 N. E. 900.

Statutes prohibiting Sabbath and holiday desecration.

Approved in Breyer v. State, 102 Tenn. 110, 50 S. W. 769, sustaining statute prohibiting barbering under heavier penalty than imposed upon other violations of Sabbath; State v. Sopher, 25 Utah, 327, 60 L. R. A. 471, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, 71 Pac. 482, upholding statute forbidding barbers to prosecute trade on Sunday, as valid exercise of police power; Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 320, 82 N. W. 1061, sustaining statute prohibiting Sunday baseball playing as breach of peace; State v. Hogreiver, 152 Ind. 660, 45 L. R. A. 509, footnote p. 504, 53 N. E. 921, sustaining statute prohibiting baseball playing on Sunday.

Cited in footnote to Watson v. Thomson, 59 L. R. A. 602, which denies city's power to prevent carrying on of lawful avocation on Christmas day.

41 L. R. A. 858, POLLEY v. HICKS, 58 Ohio St. 218, 50 N. E. 809.

Gifts inter vivos.

Approved in Jacobs v. Jolley, 29 Ind. App. 31, 62 N. E. 1028, holding valid gift inter vivos established by voluntary assignment of specific part of deposit upon printed form provided by bank, accompanied by delivery of pass book, though not to become effective until donor's death.

Cited in footnote to Murphy v. Bordwell, 52 L. R. A. 849, which holds gift of bank deposit consummated by power of attorney to donee giving right to draw in donor's name.

41 L. R. A. 860, HELMAN v. PITTSBURG, C. C. & ST. L. R. CO. 58 Ohio St. 400, 50 N. E. 986.

Administrator's action for intestate's death.

Cited in Wabash R. Co. v. Fox, 64 Ohio St. 143, 83 Am. St. Rep. 739, 59 N. E. 888, holding that courts of Ohio have no jurisdiction to entertain action by administrator for wrongful death of railroad employee in Indiana.

41 L. R. A. 862, McNAIRY COUNTY v. McCOIN, 101 Tenn. 74, 45 S. W. 1070.

Indemnity for support of insane and indigents.

Approved in Re Yturburru, 134 Cal. 569, 66 Pac. 729, sustaining statute making estate of insane person liable for support in state hospital.

Cited in footnote to Bon Homme County v. Berndt, 50 L. R. A. 351, which sustains statute making estates of insane persons without heirs in United States dependent thereon for support chargeable with expense of maintenance in hospital.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 576) on liability of alleged pauper, or his estate, to pay for support or gifts obtained on ground of poverty.

u

3 6105 063 244 128

3 6105 063 244 128

